'Moon' Weston journeys on Tremendous void to fill

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PORCUPINE - After a long struggle Marlon "Moon" Weston died in his home in Porcupine in the early morning hours of New Years Day on Monday with his wife, Evelyn and son Marlon Jr. "Chance" in attendance.

In 1984, Weston was a passenger in a vehicle that wrecked due to alcohol abuse and received injuries that paralyzed him and put him in a wheel chair for the rest of his life. At the time of the wreck, Weston had some cows, after reaching a peace with his condition, he started raising horses and in 1994 ran for tribal council from Porcupine District.

"Moon brought a real commitment to deal with health issues that impact the Oglala Sioux Tribe and its members," said past tribal

The Year in Review

MARTIN - 2006 was a year filled with stories as reported by the Lakota Country Times that were sometimes inspirational and other times quite memorable. Some dealt with tribal politics, others with loss, and others with resilience of Lakota people, while others focused and highlighted some of the real achievers in Lakota country.

OST President Cecilia Fire Thunder was reinstated after being suspended for 66 days. The OST council voted 12-5 and with one not voting to dismiss with prejudice all charges. She was reinstated with all of the powers and authority of the president's office. Fire Thunder was originally suspended on Oct. 25 and a couple of hearings were re-scheduled until December 30 due to the death of executive director, Lemoyne Pulliam.

U. S. Marine Lance Corporal Brett Lundstrom was killed while on patrol in Iraq. He served with E Company, 2d Battalion of the 6th Marines. He and two other Marines were on patrol when attacked by small arms attack in Anbar Province near Fallujah, Iraq on Sunday, January 8. A large military funeral was held at the Little Wound School gym. Lundstrom is the son of Doyla (Under Baggage) Lundstrom of Medicine Root District

The RST council passed a resolution on Jan. 11 asking for the Inspector General to investigate the actions of the previous administration at the Rosebud Comprehensive Care Facility. Shelly Harris the current CEO was working hard to bring patients back to the hospital, increasing third party billing and filling vacancies vital to good service delivery.

Sueann Iron Shell originally from the Rosebud was scheduled for a kidney transplant at the University of Nebreska at Omaha on Feb. 1. Her father, Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. was taking a very proactive role in informing the people of the devastating effects of diabetes. At the time, Calvin, Jr. had matched close enough for the transplant.

In January 2007, Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. died in Sioux City, IA and wake services were scheduled for January 3 at the SGU multipurpose building. He was an accomplished basketball coach at St. Francis Indian School, a holder of a teaching degree at the Bachelor's level and an airborne trooper from 1951-54.

Tribal gaming became an issue on state level. The South Dakota Senate Affairs Committee sponsored SB 147 described as an "Act to revise the conditions under which the state may enter into gaming compacts with Indian tribes. The measure was viewed as controversial to all of the Sioux tribes as it would allow legislative oversight of the process which is reserved for the Governor. The measure made it out of the Senate subcommittee and was scheduled for full Senate debate and then on to the House.

SB 147 was effectively "killed" by the House State Affairs Committee. It was voted against 13-0 and referred to the 36th legislative day. The measure would have effectively taken this function of the Governor and was opposed by Kurt Luger of the SD Great Plains Indian Gaming, Marc Allen, Flandreau Sioux Tribe, Rep. Paul Valandra and Ron His Horse Is Thunder of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe.

The 33rd annual walk to remember the occupation of Wounded Knee by the American Indian Movement was held on Monday, Feb. 7 as walkers converged from the four directions. Some 100 walkers remembered Dave Clifford, Edgar Bear Runner, Geraldine Janis, Evie Deon, Cedric Young Bear according to Eileen Janis. The site of the 1973 takeover is also the site of the Wounded Knee Massacre.

In a listening session with Senator Tim Johnson held in Rapid City in which the Senator outlined his Hometown Prosperity Plan, tribal leaders who met with him included Rodney Bordeaux, RST, Cecilia Fire Thunder, OST, Michael Jandreau of the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, Harold Frazier of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, and Robert Cournoyer of the Yankton Sioux tribe. Bordeaux noted that $185 million comes

RST liquor commission revokes license of Prairie Hills Golf Club

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST Liquor Commission met on December 30 in a joint hearing with the RST Tax Commission. The purpose was a hearing on the liquor license for the Prairie Hills Golf Club whose license was set to expire on Dec. 31. Apparently, no representatives appeared at the hearing on behalf of the Prairie Hills Golf Club and as a result the RST Liquor Commission proceeded with the hearing. A vote was taken and the commissioners voted to revoke their license.

The RST Tax Commission did not have a quorum; however, it's likely that it would have acted on the tribal businesses license of the Prairie Hills business.

Commission member, Anthony Bordeaux Jr. said now that the Prairie Hills Golf Club is closed down, they have the right to an appeal of the commission's decision. He added that once a business has its license revoked it cannot apply for a new liquor license for two years.

The Liquor Commission is scheduled to meet later this month to consider the reissuance of the Rosebud Casino's liquor license. Bordeaux noted that the public is encouraged and welcome to come to future liquor license hearings and to voice their opinion. The commission apparently listens closely to the wishes of the people and considers their input in rendering a final decision.

The same day, the notice of revocation was filed with the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services and they delivered the "cease and desist" order to the Prairie Hills Golf Club ordering the business to close immediately.

The RST Liquor Commission does not have an office; however it meets the first Wednesday of each month in the RST council chambers.

The members of the commission are John Charles Arcoren, Chair, Anthony Bordeaux, Jr., Pete Reynolds and Theresa Stead.

New protein buffalo bar marketed by Native American Natural Foods of Lakota Express

KYLE - Karlene Hunter and Mark Tilsen, of Kyle and Rapid City respectively, along with the Lakota Funds, have launched a business in Kyle called Native American Natural Foods. They are also in the process of marketing a new protein bar that consists of buffalo and cranberry. The new company is expected to begin selling their product during the spring and summer. The product has been named the Tanka Bar and is made from buffalo and cranberries and will be high in protein and low in glucose and 100 percent NATURAL.

Tilsen said, "A lot of entrepreneurs in Indian Country are developing their own buffalo herds and are trying to find markets for their buffalo. We hope to be able to help them by creating an innovative, value added product that tastes good and has the health benefits of traditional Lakota foods."

The Tanka Bar designed by Walt Pourier

Native American Natural Foods also has a commitment to community-based development, according to Tilsen, who also noted that Larry Pourier worked hard on the brand development and collected input into the initial product line from many local people.

He added that his company learned that the manner in which Lakota people prepared "wasna" was by mixing herbs, which resulted in a natural preservative that will be incorporated into producing Tanka Bars. Cranberries, buffalo and other ingredients apparently create natural nitrates. Tanka Bar is an all natural food product and can be marketed as such. "We hope to turn NANF into a national brand. "Tanka Bar is the first product to be taken to market" added Tilsen.

Their company, Native American Natural Foods, is relying on start up funds from the Lakota Funds. They also have a $99,000 grant from the Rural Business Opportunity Grant program. Native American Natural Foods started out as a product of Lakota Express, Inc., a Native American owned direct marketing firm into the Rosebud reservation and 80 percent of it leaves. On the Pine Ridge reservation Fire Thunder said that some $200 million comes into the reservation and $180 million leaves almost immediately for Rapid City and surrounding towns. The session coincided with Johnson's hometown economic development plan.

Sicangu elder, Dinah Crow Dog, made her journey to the spirit world on Feb. 27. Wake services were held over the course of four days. She lay in state at the RST council chambers and on the last night, she was taken to her home in Grass Mountain community close to Crow Dog's Paradise where the annual sun dance is held in August. Officiating were Leonard Crow Dog, Kirk Fool Bull and Ben Black Bear, Jr.

The Little Wound School Mustangs participated in the State A basketball tournament and won their third game over Sisseton to capture 7th place by a score of 74-58. Michael Apple led the way in the fourth period with eight points, while Bryce Hornbeck finished the game with 15 points, 7 rebounds, 5 steals and 5 assists.

OST President Cecilia Fire Thunder held a teleconference in which she demonstrated her support for building an abortion clinic on the Pine Ridge reservation. The state of South Dakota passed SB 1215 banning all abortions in the state. Fire Thunder reiterated that she would donate her own personal land to establish an abortion clinic and that it was in the planning process. She said she had support across the reservation.

A "State of Emergency" at the Rosebud I.H.S. Hospital was declared by the RST council with a motion by RST council representative Marion Young-One Star and seconded by Antelope council representative, Robert Moore. The measure passed unanimously by a vote of 16-0. It would signal the need for more funding from the Indian Health Service. CEO Shelly Harris made a scheduled monthly report to the RST council and was making positive steps toward reducing the deficit.

The U. S. Court of Appeals reinstated the case of Cottier and Three Stars v. the City of Martin in which the plaintiffs alleged that the city was drawing voting districts which violated the voting rights of Native Americans living in the city. The case was ruled upon by 2-1 in which the court required Judge Karen Schrier to hold additional hearings to see if city voting districts should be redrawn. Schrier eventually ruled for the city of Martin to redraw voting districts, citing voting rights violations.

KILI Radio was struck by lightning on April 15 and it caused the station to go off the air. The antenna and transmission line were damaged and it was estimated that it would take $210,000 to replace the equipment. Station manager, Melanie Janis, said that they were doing fundraising and that a grant proposal would be submitted to the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program. Funding eventually became available to purchase the much needed equipment and early 2007 has been set to be back on air. The loss of the radio station has been felt throughout the Oglala Sioux Tribal election controversy, sports, and announcements.

The recent suicide deaths of seven young people on the Rosebud reservation prompted RST council representative, Marion Young-One Star, to call a meeting which called for therapists, the youth and concerned tribal members. The meeting was attended by Angel Wilson, Claude Two Elk, Lloyd "Sonny" One Star, Claudette Sabors and a number of youth. A second day of meetings was to be held with elders from the Sicangu Elderly Concerns.

Mary Bordeaux-Hunger celebrated her 100th birthday at the Winner Health Care facility. The Sicangu elder received congratulations from President George Bush and Governor Mike Rounds. RST President sent an Executive Proclamation as well as a letter which from Bishop Cupich which was read. Hunger lived in Mission since 1940 and was active in the St. Thomas Catholic Church.

Oglala Lakota College celebrates with its 33rd graduation ceremonies on Sunday, June 23. Representative Stephanie Herseth was the keynote speaker while 159 degrees were awarded; eight were at the graduate level. During fall, OLC announced plans to build a large tribal veterans memorial, which will be unveiled during the 2007 graduation.

Alex White Plume assumed the office of OST President after Cecilia Fire Thunder was impeached, ending her term five months early. As the first woman to head the Oglala Sioux tribe, her administration lasted for 19 months and ended on June 19. Her impeachment was due to her support of a proposed abortion clinic on the reservation.

On July 14, Judge Karen Schrier granted a preliminary injunction halting the BIA's planned restructuring of its Office of Indian Education. The injunction halted the closing of education line offices in Mission, Eagle Butte, Lower Brule, Pine Ridge and Ft. Yates and Belcourt in N.D. Attorney Charles Abourezk was the lead attorney for the plaintiffs.

Six former students filed a suit against the St. Francis Mission and the Rapid City Diocese on August 7 in Pennington County. The plaintiffs were represented by attorney Gregory Yates of California and they alleged a pattern of sexual abuse and attempts to destroy native culture. The abuse was alleged to have taken place in the 1950's and 1970's by priests and other church employees.

James and Eleanor Charging Crow have been married for 54 years and were involved with the Pine Ridge Ambulance service for 40 years. Eleanor described a night in 1995 during which her son had chest pains and she had to assist in getting him to the hospital. She helped to give him CPR all the way with another paramedic. Her son did not make it and died in her arms leaving four children behind.

Vietnam Veteran and Lakota language teacher, John Around Him, Sr. journeyed to the spirit world after a brief illness. A sun dance leader and 'eyapaha' in Lakota country, Around Him had been honored earlier at OLC's He Sapa college center with a proclamation from the Office of the Governor. The funeral was huge often pouring out into the parking lot as Lakota people from other bands came to bid goodbye.

A treaty meeting was held at the Rosebud Casino during which the fundraising activities of the Wolakota Foundation of Eagle Butte was questioned. It was a forum for grass roots people. Some 100 people were in attendance at the meeting on Oct. 21. People voiced their concern and alleged the scared bundle was being used to raise money.

St. Francis Mission filed a suit in Rosebud Sioux Tribal court on Nov. 9 against St. Francis Indian School over a $1.5 million gift which it received from the Delores Cerro Trust. The basis for the legal action was an agreement from 25 years previous which was to have governed the receipts of such gifts. SFM contends that the gift should have gone to them.

In November elections, Cheyenne River Sioux tribal president, Harold Frazier, was defeated by Joseph Brings Plenty. In state elections, voters sent Rep. Stephanie Herseth back to Washington, DC, while Mike Rounds defeated Jack Billion for governor. Larry Long defeated Standing Rock Sioux tribal member, Ron Volesky, for the office of Attorney General.

In the state house and senate races, Julie Barling, Larry Lucas, Jim Bradford, Thomas Van Norman, Theresa Two Bulls and Tom Katus were victorious.

Voters in South Dakota turned down Amendment C relating to judicial accountability. Initiated measure 2 which increases the tax on tobacco and cigarettes by $1 was approved. Measure 3 which would have prohibited schools from starting before August 31 was defeated. Initiated measure 4 which would have approved the use of medical marijuana was also defeated, while measure 5 which limits the use of state aircraft was approved.

The video lottery measure which would have repealed it was turned down by voters. Initiated Measure 8 would have repealed the gross receipt tax on wireless communication, while Referred Law 6 which would have placed a ban on all abortions was defeated.

Collin White Bird of Pierre was wounded in Iraq on August 31 in Baghdad and was expected to make a full recovery. White Bird's father Francis is a Vietnam Veteran from St. Francis. Meanwhile, Nathan Goodiron of Mandaree, ND was killed in Afghanistan on Thanksgiving while on patrol. He enlisted in the National Guard in April 2001.

John Steele and 16 tribal council representatives were sworn in by Sidney Witt, associate tribal judge. Vice President Shorty Brewer and Chief Judge Lisa Adams were also sworn in. Executive board members Crystal Eagle Elk, Rhonda Two Eagle and Dave Pourier were also temporarily seated as executive board.

RST received a loan and grant package of $4 million from the Shakopee Mdewankanton Sioux to build a tribal store west of Mission. The store would begin construction in December and is scheduled to open in July and will employ 80 tribal employees.

U. S. Senator Tim Johnson underwent surgery on December 13 for a rare condition known as arteriovenous malformation. RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux and OST President John Steele voiced their support for the Senator.

chairman, Paul Iron Cloud, "he focused on the family and community destruction that alcohol and drugs brought to his own family and to his community; Moon's sister Colleen was killed by a drunk driver and his nephew BJ was also killed by a driver under the influence of alcohol - his own wreck and the loss of his relatives brought a real commitment by Moon to find solutions to the alcohol and drug problems here on Pine Ridge Reservation."

Weston was elected to five consecutive terms to the tribal council from Porcupine District and served as chairman of the health and human services committee and Land committee during his ten years on the council.

"In addition to serving on the Red Cloud school board and the Porcupine Health Clinic board, Moon was part of a team that helped bring back Porcupine School from the brink of closure," said Iron Cloud, "he worked long and hard to get the school back on its feet and today we are looking at a brand new school in the fall of 2007 or spring of 2008."

Weston was instrumental, along with his family in coordinating the walk, run and ride for sobriety to honor the loss of all of those who died at the hands of alcohol and drugs, the ride would start from the spot, north of Wounded Knee where BJ was killed and go to Porcupine for memorial services and renewing the commitment to rid the community of alcohol and drug abuse.

Weston will be returned to his house for a prayer service on Saturday, Jan. 6 from Rapid City which will be followed by his casket being taken by wagon to the Porcupine School Saturday afternoon arriving between 3-3:30 p.m. The wake will continue through Sunday with the funeral set for Monday, Jan. 8 at 10 a.m. at Porcupine School.

"Moon will be missed as a friend, a community member, a father, a husband and uncle and brother and son and he will be missed for his work for the tribe and all Lakota people," said Iron Cloud, "he helped a lot of people, he had a big heart and he was such a positive role model for so many and he dealt with his own health problems so quietly and dealt with everyone else's problems so aggressively; he will be missed by many of us."

Weston is survived by his wife Evelyn 'Evie' Weston, his son marlon Weston, a daughter Jazelyn and his mother Edean Weston, three brothers Farrell, Troy and Lionel Weston.

Lady Thorpes holiday road trip nets two wins and number two state ranking

Eagle Butte downs Little Wound for sixth win, number 10 state ranking

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Down at the half 25-24 to undefeated Summit (5-0) on Thursday in the Northern State Classic in Aberdeen, Pine Ridge built some momentum in the third quarter taking a 43-40 lead and continued applying the pressure in the fourth for a 64-53 win.

The Lady Thorpes dominated the boards as Keisha Brewer hauled down 13 rebounds and Saudia Tasso, off the bench, helped with 11. Pine Ridge picked up their eighth straight win at the site of their last state tournament appearance, the Barnet Center in Aberdeen on the campus of Northern State University where the Lady Thorpes lost to Sisseton in the 2004 State A championship game.

Nichelle Red Owl, a sophomore transfer from Little Wound, led Pine Ridge with 17 points while Brewer added 12 points to go with her game high 13 rebounds.

Pine Ridge's two game holiday road trip wrapped up with a game in Ft. Yates as Pine Ridge knocked off Standing Rock 80-33 on Friday for their ninth straight win to open the 2006/07 season. The Lady Thorpes opened with a 25-2 first quarter lead and cruised to the win as Nichelle Red Owl, one of four Lady Thorpes in double figures led the team in scoring for the second straight game with 15 points, Christian Janis and Lacey Weston helped with 14 a piece and Saudia Tasso chipped in 10. Keisha Brewer finished with 10 rebounds to lead the team. Shauna Long led Standing Rock with nine points.

"Once again our ball hawking defense set the tone for the game," said Nelly Long, Pine Ridge assistant coach, "it was a good team effort with balanced scoring and a super team defense that took the Lady Warriors out of any game plan they tried."

With the Lakota Nation championship and a 9-0 run to open the season, the Lady Thorpes earned the number two ranking in the first weekly top ten poll for high school girl's basketball on Wednesday. Pine Ridge will play at the Rosebud Shootout on Saturday, Jan. 13 against Little Wound in Mission.

Coming off of their second win of the season, a 60-52 win over Standing Rock, Little Wound kept their momentum going as they led Friday's game with Cheyenne Eagle Butte 10-9 but "mo" only goes so far as the Lady Braves turned up the pressure in the second period to take a 25-14 lead at the half and cruise to a 48-33 win to move their record to 6-2.

Jessica Keckler, a sophomore center, scored a double double with 12 points and 13 rebounds, Jordyn Brown finished with a team high 16 points. Little Wound's Kelsey Brave Eagle scored a game high 17 points. With their 6-2 record, the Lady Braves earned a number 10 ranking in the first regular season poll out on Wednesday; Cheyenne Eagle Butte's only losses have come at the hands of Pine Ridge who is ranked number two and undefeated at 9-0.

The Lady Mustangs played their third road game in six days Tuesday night in Mission as the Todd County Lady Falcons opened up with a 15-10 first quarter lead and added to it each quarter to come away with their fourth win of the season 69-55 over Little Wound.

Todd County hit five threes in the first half, three of them by Christina Crow Eagle, to establish an outside game while Tia McCloskey drove the lane for a game high 13 points and Shelby Hunger pulled down 12 rebounds and finished up with a double double adding 10 points to the mix. Little Wound righted the ship in the fourth as they outscored Todd County 16-13.

Tawney Shay Shot With Arrow led Little Wound with 11 points, Kelsey Brave Eagle added nine points and seven rebounds while Kirsten Clifford chipped in eight points and eight rebounds. Little Wound is now 2-7 and hosts Takini on Friday night on the Mustang's new high school gyu floor.

With the win, Todd County evened their record at four and four and hosts Winner on Thursday and travels to White River on Tuesday.

Red Cloud jumped back into action on Thursday, 12 days after playing their last game in the Lakota Nation, The Lady Crusaders traveled to Belle Fourche to take on the Lady Broncs; after a hard fought game which was all tied up at 33 a piece at the end of three quarters, Belle Fourche survived the fourth with a 46-42 win.

Red Cloud led after the first 10-89 as Marque Lunderman hit a two and a three while Shaina Clifford and Saige Pourier both hit field goals. Bell came back to lead it 25 -23 despite Pourier's two threes in the second and Lunderman's second three pointer.

The two teams were tied at 33 at the end of three but Jynna Coyle scored 10 of her team high 17 points in the fourth quarter to lead the Broncs to the win.

Lunderman led Red Cloud with 16 points and 11 rebounds, Danielle Locust finished with 11 points, nine in the second half and Pourier finished with eight. The Lady Crusaders are now 3-3 on the season, host Wall on Monday and travel to Chadron on Tuesday.

Rusty Little Wound scores 42 in fourth to beat Falcons, earns number two ranking in state poll

Red Cloud, Pine Ridge add road wins

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MISSION/SPEARFISH - Coming off an extended 17 day holiday break, Little Wound took three quarters to knock the rust off; down 50-36 after three quarters in Mission against Todd County, the Mustangs scored 42 points to Todd County's 18 in a wild and wooly fourth quarter to claim their seventh straight win of the season 78-68 over the Falcons.

Playing all over the court, Gunner Krogman, Todd County's junior forward, led his team to a 14 point 50-36 lead at the end of the third quarter against Little Wound, Krogman finished with 23 points, 14 rebounds and three blocked shots before fouling out with 1:29 to go in the game. The Falcons were able to bottle up Little Wound's Rich Big Boy in the middle and Brice Hornbeck on the outside for three quarters. Steve Antoine picked up eight rebounds and scored 13 points, Alex Prue, a freshman, getting a start in place of Vernie Menard finished with 13 points and Mark DuBray came off the bench to grab 10 rebounds block two shots and score nine.

In the fourth quarter, Little Wound said enough is enough, putting on a full court press, the Mustangs pressure took Todd County out of their game, wiped out any rhythm the Falcons had exhibited in the first three quarters and forced several turnovers to slowly chip away at the lead. Hornbeck hit five baskets, mostly lay ups, hit all three of his free throws for 13 points in the quarter and a team high 21 points; he added four steals for good measure. Big Boy hit five field goals in the final quarter and added two free throws for 12 points on his way to a 20 point game and topped it off with a team high 13 rebounds. TJ McCauley helped with a deuce and a trey in the fourth, finishing with 18 points while Devon LeBeau went four for four from the line in the fourth adding 13 points.

Little Wound's 42 points in the fourth quarter turned the game on its head and gave the Mustangs their seventh straight win of the season, not quite a record for a quarter score but definitely attention getting. Strandberg scored 48 in 1959 and Harding County scored 47 in 1980.

In the coaches preseason poll, Little Wound was ranked eighth; with the LNI championship in hand including a win over last year's A champ, St. Thomas More and a 7-0 start to the season, the Mustangs were ranked number two in the first regular season high school boy's basketball poll out Wednesday. Little Wound has scheduled a game with Clark at the Redfield Classic on Saturday, Jan. 6th a rematch of the State A tournament first round game last year but also is on the schedule to play Pine Ridge at the Rosebud Shootout on Saturday in Mission.

Red Cloud brushed their own rust off on Thursday, after 12 days since their last game, the Crusaders started slow against Lead-Deadwood in the Perkins Holiday Classic in Spearfish at Black Hills State University with an 18-16 first quarter lead after being down early on 14-9. By the half Red Cloud was up 35-25 and were up by 23 points, 58-35 after three to eventually beat Lead 69-48 for their fifth win of the season against one loss.

Christian McGhee, Red Cloud's junior point guard led the way with 20 points, five steals and five assists while Bill Scott helped with 15 points. David Giago stepped up the defense for Red Cloud with six steals, a blocked shot and four assists while Chris Red Bear came in off the bench to help with rebounding chores leading the team with nine. Red Cloud is 5-1 now and plays Santee on Saturday at the Rosebud Shootout in Mission and hosts Wall on Monday, Jan. 8th.

Pine Ridge has been quietly putting together wins since the Lakota Nation, losing to Eagle Butte at home but beating Hot Springs, Douglas and now Belle Fourche on the road. Down at the half to the Broncs of Belle Fourche during the Perkins Classic in Spearfish on Thursday, the Thorpes used a pressure defense to turn the game around and score a 63-40 win over Belle Fourche for their sixth win of the season.

Michael Jack led the way for the Thorpes with 18 points, five steals, four assists and four rebounds. John Provost added 12 points, eight assists and six rebounds while Aaron Red Shirt had 14 points, two blocked shots and four rebounds.

Pine Ridge is 6-3 on the season and will play Little Wound in the Rosebud Shootout on Saturday in Mission.

Remembering Ford

Last week former President Gerald R. Ford died at the age of 93 at his home in Rancho Mirage, Calif.

In honor of Ford, most of the government shut down on Tuesday, Jan. 2 for his funeral, that included tribes and government institutions.

Ford was appointed vice president by President Richard Nixon to replace Spiro Agnew, who resigned in a bribery scandal stemming from his days as governor of Maryland.

After the Watergate scandal, Nixon resigned rather than face impeachment. He was implicated in a White House coverup of a burglary at the Democratic Party headquarters in the Watergate apartment complex.

After Nixon resigned, Ford assumed the presidency for two and half years.

A month after taking office, Ford pardoned Nixon for any Watergate crimes he might have committed.

It was this action, that Ford was remembered for. And also that fact, he was the first and only president of the United State not to have been elected to vice president and then on to president. He was appointed.

His toughest moment was pardoning Nixon in September of 1974.

He has been remembered by many and many words have been said about him in what he did the heal a nation after the government scandals.

He knew what he did would not further his political career but he did it because it was what this country needed at that time. We very rarely see that political value anymore.

Empowering Yourself

With this new year, take courage to be truthful with yourself

By Patty Pourier

As I ushered in the New Year from my cozy bed, with my beloved husband beside me, I remembered some of the New Years past. I remember spending almost every New Year's when the boys were small celebrating with grape juice and playing games. I remember going to dances, and having people over and playing RISK all night.

Some New Years I don't remember very well. They were the days when I was drinking. I do however remember waking up the next morning with a hang over and dreading not only the day but the whole new year as well. I remember thoughts of ending my life.

When I was drinking, there was not a lot of hope. There was not gratitude in my life. My husband and I would generally review the past year and make resolutions for the New Year, as we sat in a bar sipping our drinks. I could not see that drinking was affecting my life in so many areas. I never remember making a resolution to quit drinking. I do remember however, feeling depressed, worthless, and feeling like a failure.

I did not quit drinking because I thought I was alcoholic. I quit drinking because someone told me, that the pain I felt emotionally would get better if I quit drinking. I was desperate to feel better. I quit drinking because I was so tired of the low self esteem, the failed relationships, the lack of motivation, being broke, the plan old yucky thoughts and feelings I found myself drowning in every day.

Nothing worked in my life until I made the decision to quit drinking. I went to treatment and never really "got it." I was so shut down emotionally; the counselors could not penetrate the walls for defenses and survival I had built up.

I went to Alcoholics Anonymous after treatment. As I look back, I really was willing to go to any lengths to feel better. At AA, I found a sponsor that was willing to love me through the walls of denial, and help me to grow through the steps of AA. I hated her some days, because she was honest with me and told me things I did not want to hear about myself. Things like I was selfish, controlling, and dishonest. But today, I am thankful for her love and dedication she had to me and the other people she sponsored.

Before I quit drinking I looked at the day and the New Year with dread, and thoughts of suicide. Today, I look at the New Year with hope and gratitude. The gratitude for people, that love me in spite of my shortcomings. And hope through goals I look forward to in 2007.

I don't know where you are this first week of 2007, but I truly wish for you to find a way to grow to happiness, satisfaction and health, both personally and with your family. I encourage you to take the first step to make this a good year for you and your family. I wish you courage to be truthful with yourself, and to be true to yourself, by taking actions that will lead you there.

Finding My Voice

The smallest thing can make our world

Dana Lone Hill

It was the last home game for the season. Stephon and I were running late. As we was walking the six city blocks it takes to get to get to the football field, Stephon decided he wanted an apple from the apple tree in front of the nursing home.

'Ok hurry.' I tell him. He gives me his water bottle and walks around the tree. He takes his time and I am getting impatient as I hear the announcer say my oldest son just had a tackle.

'Stephon...it's just an apple, it can't be that hard!' I tell him as he is jumping in the air to swipe at what to him, must have been the perfect apple.

'What's the difference?' I ask him as he keeps trying for one that's out of reach. Just get a lower one, I will be walking. I start walking and soon enough he is right behind me. I look back at him and see that he doesn't have an apple.

'Why didn't you get an apple?' I ask.

'I couldn't reach the one I wanted.' He told me.

'Well what was wrong with the other ones?'

'I didn't want them ones.' He said, and he was trying hard to hide the fact that he was trying not to cry. By then we are at the football field and watched the rest of the game. Stephon mostly played, while I watch the game. The game was awesome and my boys played their heart out, but I kept thinking of Stephon and that apple. Why didn't he want just any old apple?

When the game was over, I told the boys good game. Then Stephon and I started walking home before the traffic got heavy.

On the way back home, we stopped at that old apple tree and I lifted him up enough to get the apple he wanted.

I looked at him on the way back as he ate the apple and looked up at me smiling. It was funny how just the right apple could make or break his world.

It made me think of my youth, when the most trivial thing made my world.

A plastic egg with silly putty in it. A warm cookie from the oven. A hug. One of your drawings hung on the fridge. A splash in the puddle. Rain. Grilled cheese and tomato soup. The perfect apple.

I guess one of the joys of having children is to see that little things in life can still make you happy and can make your world.

Remembering Ford: As a nation, we're better off when politicians work together

By Mark Trahant

Editorial Page Editor
Seattle Post Intelligencer
Reprinted from Dec. 31, 2006

Every president has made important contributions that are found only in footnotes. The asterisk might cite a difficult decision, the launching of an innovative federal program or a signature that made a congressional act the law of the land.

"I am signing S. 522, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act," President Gerald R. Ford wrote on Oct. 1, 1976. "This bill is not without its faults, but after personal review, I have decided that the well-documented needs for improvement in Indian health manpower, services and facilities outweigh the defects in the bill. ... I am signing this bill because of my own conviction that our first Americans should not be last in opportunity."

This is a story about effective government and the genesis of a transformative idea.

About four decades ago, Seattle native leader Bernie Whitebear took Dr. Abe Bergman, a pediatrician, on a tour of an urban Indian clinic. Bergman was interested in the serious health status of American Indian children.

"He showed me around and, of course, it was a terrible place, physically a dump. And they were struggling. They had volunteer doctors and dentists," Bergman recalled.

He asked what sort of help was available from the U.S. Indian Health Service -- only to learn that program was only for Indians living on reservations.

Bergman had worked with Sens. Warren Magnuson and Henry Jackson on another piece of legislation involving health care, so he went to Washington to see if something could be done to help American Indians. Bergman visited with Jackson and asked what he knew about the Seattle clinic. As it turned out, not much -- but Jackson did know and admire Whitebear and immediately signed on.

The timing was ideal. President Nixon had recently rejected the policy of termination -- a plan to essentially break the promises made by the United States in treaties and break up reservations.

What's more, Jackson, who had been a supporter of termination, reversed his position.

He hired Forrest Gerard, a Blackfeet tribal member from Montana, as his representative on the Interior Committee.

This was a remarkable partnership: a Republican president and a powerful Democratic committee chairman working together on American Indian issues.

Bergman found a receptive audience - but was told by Gerard that it would be more strategic to push for a comprehensive approach, a bill that worked to improve health for all American Indians, those on reservations and those living in cities.

The bill that finally passed Congress was the Indian Health Care Improvement Act. Nixon was no longer president, and many in Ford's Cabinet urged a veto because it would cost $1.6 billion over five years. But at the White House, Brad Patterson, who had worked on many of those issues with Nixon, told the president that this bill was important. "And our counterarguments won the day; the legislation was signed by President Ford."

I recently hosted a television program looking at 30 years since that act with many of the key players -- including Bergman, Gerard and Patterson. That production, "Living History: A Conversation about American Indian Policy," will be telecast next week on UW-TV (at various times).

So often the narrative about government is about its weakness, about how we as a democratic society fall short in what we hope to achieve.

But this history is about government at its best, how individuals, the Congress, the administration found a way to work together to address a complicated issue. Republicans, Democrats and political independents shared a common purpose.

There is no comparison to the state of health care for American Indians since the act passed Congress - statistics improved significantly in nearly every category. Sure, there remain health care problems - and the Indian Health Service operates on a continually underfunded basis.

One beneficiary of the law, the Seattle Indian Health Board, still operates a clinic for an urban population that's often forgotten. This is a living legacy from another time.

But there is another footnote to this history -- a sign of the times -- because the Indian Health Care Improvement Act expired a few years ago.

Congress has yet to reach a bipartisan deal to renew the law. That's a lousy impasse for such innovative legislation.

I like the first asterisk better: Ford's name written on a piece of legislation crafted by Democrats and Republicans.

It's a reminder that we're a better country when politicians work together to solve problems.

Thoughts that come from the heart

We are ruining our children with food

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

As 2006 ended, there is always discussion on the goals and resolutions of the next coming year. One of the choice resolutions as always is geared about health.

It is something I hear every year from people, 'this year I want to lose weight' 'I am going to lose 10 to 15 pounds,' 'I am gonna get get skinny.'

That is a resolution I seem to make every year and sometimes I cater to that promise that I make to myself and make some progress and other times it flies out the window and by March it is a dim memory.

Weight and health are two big issues we face as we get older, suddenly as we near that mid age value, we start to get concerned about our health, taking care of ourselves and worry that we may become diabetic, have heart problems or get sick. We realize we need to exercise more, walk and take care of ourselves,

When we come to realize that and actually do something about it, it becomes a lesson in life that makes us stronger in disciplining our selves.

Structure and discipline and our philosophy about life are values we learn in life that helps us to become successful.

As we go through life we learn about disciplining ourselves to get what we want. Some people have the discipline needed to keep their weight down, eat healthy foods and exercise.

The first time, I realized I was 'just too fat' for my own comfort, and that I needed to do something about it. And doing something about it didn't mean going out to buy the next size up.

That was too easy. I remember the first time I had to shop in the next women's department and by that I don't mean the next store over but like the BIGGER women's department.

That was so tough for me, it was something like I didn't really want to do and every time I ventured in there, I would look about and make sure nobody was around that I knew. Lord, forbid, I didn't want anybody to know that I gotten that fat.

It was my daughter that helped me to develop that discipline to get control of my weight.

She was training to go to Artesia to be a tribal police officer and she was determined to make it through the training so she knew she had to get in physical shape. When she went out running on the track at Kyle, I would tag along and do the same. Well, at first, she would run and I would walk. So yeah, I was tagging along, my one round to her two. She taught me how warm up to control my breathing, to control my posture and stick with a diet that will help me in weight loss.

She lost her weight I lost mine. And it felt SO GOOD! I loved the feeling of feeling good about myself and most of all I was back down in the little ladies department.

That itself was enough incentive for me to keep that discipline. In getting older, we tend to forget about keeping our body active, and that is the first mistake we make because before long we get fat and then it escalates and then before we know it we are obese.

When I first became a young wife, one of the things that was taught to me by my mother and my sisters was the motto, 'a way to a man's heart is through his stomach,' in other words, I became a good cook because it was one of those things I had to do to make the whole scheme of a marriage and a family work.

It was cooking for good taste, being resourceful in obtaining good food, making enough to eat, and making it look attractive to eat.

That meant even the color scheme. Brown meat, green something, yellow something and maybe something white like bread to set it off. It also meant making good bread and learning how to igni good stuff for the family pantry.

I am not sure who taught me that, maybe it was in home economics or one of my sisters. It couldn't have been my mom as she didn't care about color scheme, just as long as we had food and enough of it. I also knew that it was important to have the four basic food groups for good health.

Then I had two daughters, who are now grown, and I applied the same methods to them that I learned. Be a good cook. Make it taste good. Make it look good. Make your kids happy. Make your man happy.

We cater to that nurturing part of us with our children by overusing food. It is a natural feeling, we want to take care of our children, we want to provide for them so we feed them and then we overfeed them. It makes us feel good to know they ate good and have plenty to eat.

Family 'food parties' soon become family traditions.

Obesity is a big health problem on the reservation. We are suppose to be one of the poorest counties in the state and yet we have an obesity problem.

Somewhere along the way, in our tiwahe, we tend to forget to provide that structure and discipline to our children to eat healthy and to keep active.

Basically we are ruining our children with food because eventually the unhealthy lifestyle they are learning will hurt them in their future. In their future, they too will be concerned about diabetes, about heart problems due to obesity.

In teaching our children, we tell them 'don't be drinking' 'don't be smoking that peji' all that is bad for you.

There was a term my mom used to say, 'wiyatke' and I knew it was a bad habit from the way she talked about it. I learned not to drink because it was bad for me and why it was bad for me.

So in turn I tried to teach my children. It was a discipline that helped me in my life and I wanted them to understanding those social ills so they would have a better life. Of course that doesn't mean they followed what I said, but I know it is instilled in their core of understanding somewhere.

It is important as parents to teach our children about the social ills they will encounter but we should be teaching them about a healthy diet and being active to stay healthy.

We should be teaching them that packing on 20 to 30 pounds in their 20s is not a good thing for their future. We should be teaching them that overeating and not being active isn't good for them.

That it will hurt them in their future.

Elder left toothless by Indian Health Service

By Hazel Bonner

Guest Columnist

A 76-year old resident of Wounded Knee tells a story about the Indian Health Service. It is a tale that makes this writer cringe, but one that happens often on the Reservations.

The doctor was with the dental department. He pulled all of her teeth on both the top and bottom, and then gave her two weeks to heal.

She returned in two weeks and was told she still was not healed enough to prepare dentures for her.

After more than two months she was told by Indian Health Servicethat they could not help her because the dental department had no funds. She has now been without teeth for more than three months.

She states in a letter to this writer the following: "I've been turned down so much I feel like an outsider, all though I am 4/4 degree Oglala Sioux and lived here all my life, …I've tried everything to get false teeth but I can't seem to do anything."

I contacted a resident of Pine Ridge. She suggested contacting the Pine Ridge Service Unit Director at (605) 867-5131. I thought I would ask residents of Pine Ridge to flood his office with calls.

I have been told by reliable resources that Indian patients at the clinics need to have their own insurance or they will receive only minimal services. That seems to be the case here.

The IHS says they have no money for crowns, bridges partials and dentures. A lot of Pine Ridge residents are left toothless, but action for this elder is definitely needed.

Isn't there a treaty obligation that is forgotten here? Ask Indian Health Service about the treaty obligations of the federal government in regards to health care.

An update on the Sicangu's clean energy education partnership

By Ronald Niess
Special to the Times

This is to provide an update to the Oyate on the progress of the Little Thunder Clean Energy Education Partnership. Also, I will touch on some other items, the Rosebud Sioux Tribes Utilities Commission is involved in.

The Little Thunder CEEP is a renewable energy project involving the installation of various renewable technologies in the home of respected Sicangu elders, Cecil and Rose Little Thunder, whose newer home is one of the most expensive to heat on the Rosebud. The home is all electric.

While the Little Thunder home Project is being facilitated by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Utilities Commission, it is the vision of the Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakape, Rosebud's housing entity.

SWA realized the high cost of heating and providing energy to homes on the Rosebud and throughout Indian Country.

The Cecil and Rose Little Thunder home was identified by SWA as one which could serve as a pilot renewable energy project and which could be precursor to renewable energy applications to a whole housing site.

Partners have been SWA, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Utilities Commission, U.S. Dept. of Energy, National Renewable Energy Lab out of Boulder, Colo., Council of Energy Resource Tribes, Intertribal Council Utilities Policy, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's LIHEAP and Resource Development offices, and grass roots members of the Oyate. We want our efforts to be community driven as much as possible.

Among possible energy sources discussed have been wind, solar, hydro, bio-mass, and, of course, energy efficiency.

New to the team, and who will play a large role in bringing our renewable energy vision to fruition, is Trees, Water and People of Boulder, Colo., who are "committed to developing sustainable community-based conservation solutions." Their mission statement is custom tailored to our needs and I consider them an answer to a prayer. Along with Richard Fox, of TW&P, crucial will be Native Renewable Energy Warriors such as Henry Red Cloud, Oglala, and Sicangu's, Victor Young and Harold "String" Medearis.

Recently, Mr. Red Cloud and skilled members of SWA construction, installed a solar heater to the Little Thunder home, which will offset daytime heating costs which of course, saves energy. Other than the building and installation of the system, the cost factors will be almost zero.

Interesting to note, is that the design and construction of the system is new and the brain-child of Henry Red Cloud and TW&P.

This spring, Little Thunder CEEP will be installing a small wind turbine and a Photo Voltaic solar system to the home of Rose and Cecil Little Thunder, along with a row of Aspen trees. These will provide a wind break and is practical as well as aesthetically pleasing. Another feature TW&P brings to the table will be a new twist to an old idea of our plans.

During this time, we will be hosting a design and planning meeting/workshop on the Rosebud and you are all invited. You can actually witness or even help put up these renewable systems this spring. Facilitating will be the Rosebud Tribal Utilities Commission, SWA and Trees, Water and People.

Announcements will be made and printed.

For further info, call co-facilitators:

o Email: tuc99@gwtc.net

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe Utilities Commission is extremely busy on a number of on-going projects for, and on behalf, of the people. Some projects: include 911 - Developing a viable and effective system.

WAPA Allocations - Providing an offset to qualifying energy consumers.

Winter Disconnects - and other life threatening practices. Helping to stop them.

Renewable Energy Projects - We went through a lot of blood, sweat and tears to help get the 750 kw Meg-Micon Wind Turbine put up by the casino. A major coup, one which took years in planning and development. Also assisting was Intertribal COUP.

The Utilities Commission has also helped with the Owl Feather War Bonnet Wind Project by St. Francis, and of course, we are helping facilitate Little Thunder CEEP.

We need to do further work to define Title 20 of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Law and Order Code, which is the Tribes Utilities Code. Much of our powers are reserved. Definition and enforcement teeth need development. This is one of our goals..

I have been advocating for a joint meeting of the Tribes Utilities Commissions, or equivalents, as well as other Tax Commissions. We have much at stake. There is benefit to working together as an entire Nation. I serve as an RST Utilities Commissioner.

On a personal note, I wish to thank my friend, RST TUC Director, Tony Rogers, and staff, for their dedication and resilience. You are expected to achieve infinity on pennies.

Bleeciyapo! The Oyate come first.

I also wish to touch on a couple of results of the state of South Dakota ballot initiatives in the recent elections as well as the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Secretarial Election, or better yet, lack of one.

Amendment E - The intent was to make judges accountable who violate citizens Civil Rights. The propaganda campaign of the S.D. Republican political machine completely distorted the truth of the intent of the amendment. Even to the way it was worded on the ballot by the S. D. Attorney General.

About 90 percent of the S.D. voters rejected the amendment. Yet on the Rosebud, the idea of holding judges accountable for violating the rights of citizens (I remember Homer Chief Eagle and the infamous "beanie-weanie" case) either passed in various voting districts or came close.

In Indian Country, we are keenly aware of the institutional racism of the South Dakota state and federal judicial systems. Injustices which would not be so long tolerated by any other state and which is America's hidden, shameful secret.

Tobacco Tax - I serve on the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Tax Commission.

The S.D. Revenue Department has sent to various tribe's correspondence that tells us since state voters voted to increase cigarette product taxes, it would necessary for tribe's to follow suit by January 2007, or at least those tribe's that have tax collection agreements with the state.

I pose the questions: But do we? Should we? How did reservation voters actually vote? I have heard many sides to this issue. I, myself, have always been leery of any agreement which could compromise the sovereignty/jurisdiction of the Tribe.

The State of South Dakota has long been collecting what amounts to illegal taxes on the reservations. I have written of these taxes. The gross receipts tax assessed on telecommunications companies is said to be in "lieu of a property tax." There's also the S.D. Public Utilities Commission Tax, paid by reservation residents to help fund the operations of the SD PUC, an entity which does not have jurisdiction on the rez's.

The state does not negotiate in good faith, gaming compacts with tribes.

I propose that we, the tribes, not raise any taxes which the state tells us we must. At least, not until these sovereignty issues are met and dealt with.

Constitutional Convention - I have also written on this historic process whereby dedicated Sicangu were able to propose amendments to our IRA Constitution, which governs or dictates us.

Exactly 189 amendments were proposed. After an intense process, the Sicangu Constitutional Task Force was able to narrow these down to 27. We submitted these to the Department of Interior BIA on April 19, 2005, one year and eight months ago as of this writing.

I was told we might finally have a Secretarial Election around March. Then we are told at a community meeting by a council member, that the BIA now says because of the "U.S. continuing fiscal resolution" there is no money to conduct the Secretarial Election.

The Oyate was excited, even elated, that the corruption and oppression of the IRS Governmental system, forced on Tribes by the United States, was finally getting to be overhauled.

Men and women; ikcewicasa na wiya, of vision and dream came forward with many ideas of constitutional reform. So far, this vision has been squashed by the DOI, BIA, and perhaps elements if the IRS government system itself.

Talk around the Rosebud rez on an associated matter is that the administration has asked the local university to help write a new Constitution, which is traditionally based.

On the surface this seems a good idea. One whose time has come.

From what I have read and gathered from those I have spoken with, it seems that tribal members do not think that politicians should craft or guide such a document.

They say the architects and direction of a traditionally-based Constitution should not come from the "12 percent", but from the grass roots/traditional Oyate themselves.

I'm closing, wopila tanka he for reading these messages, for borrowing a little of your time.

May Wakan Tanka watch over you and your tiospaye this new year.

Notes From Indian Country

Honoring those who may not be honored elsewhere

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I come from a world that is, for the most part, out of sight and out of mind for the average American. We (the Indian people living on the nine Indian reservations in South Dakota) are usually featured in the mainstream media during times of controversy (Wounded Knee takeover in 1973) or when an aspiring journalist covers the consequences of extreme poverty (NBC News and Washington Post series in early 1980s on poverty on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota).

The Pine Ridge Reservation was prominent in the news in the early 1980s because it is located in a county, Shannon, which was proclaimed "The Poorest County in America" by the 1980 U. S. Census Bureau.

I was born, raised, and educated on an Indian reservation where the people oftentimes see the world through the wrong end of the telescope.

It is a place where the people do not necessarily see George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson or Teddy Roosevelt (the four faces on Mount Rushmore) as heroes.

On the 50th Anniversary of the carving of Mount Rushmore, I was featured in People Magazine because I called Mount Rushmore "The Shrine of Hypocrisy."

In the article I outlined some of the atrocities against the Indian people perpetrated by the four presidents carved on the mountain. In fact, the month of December not only was the month of the Massacre at Wounded Knee in 1890, it was also the month when 38 Sioux warriors were hanged in Minnesota in the largest mass hanging in this Nation's history, by order of President Abraham Lincoln.

In the first Gulf War, when the massed coalition forces looked out at the dark desert lands just prior to their assault on Iraq, they called that vast unknown land "Indian country."

When someone commits a social or political blunder they are "off the reservation." Or when one wants to tell a lie but not be accused of being a liar, he puts a hand behind his back, with fingers crossed, and says, "Honest Injun."

And worse yet, African Americans who cringe at the public use of the "N" word are just as guilty and as adamant as whites in using the "R" word (Redskin) although that word is as offensive to Native Americans as the "N" word is to African Americans.

I suppose it all depends upon whose ox is gored.

I have my own heroes. They are Indian people that will, in all probability, never be honored in mainstream America.

They are people I have admired and emulated in deed and cause.

And as we move into the New Year of 2007, I want to mention their names if for no other reason than it may be the only time they are nationally acclaimed.

Rupert Costo (Cahuilla) was my mentor. He was the publisher of the Indian Historian Press in San Francisco until his death in 1987. Peter MacDonald served four terms as president of the Navajo Nation.

Although he was charged and convicted of taking bribes in his later years as president, he still holds a special place in my heart for taking on the large corporations that were raping the lands of the Navajo for uranium and coal. He told his people, "We are not an Indian reservation; we are the Navajo Nation."

Lionel Bordeaux (Sicangu) for his role in bringing higher education to the Rosebud Reservation (Sinte Gleska University), Tom Short Bull for doing the same for the Oglala Lakota, (Oglala Lakota College), Dr. Dean Chavers (Lumbee) for his many years of fighting for the educational freedom of Indian students, Wilma Mankiller (Cherokee) and Cecilia Fire Thunder (Oglala Lakota), two women that rose to the highest posts on their reservations, Principle Chief and President, and who fought tooth and nail to advance the rights of Indian women, Charlene Teters (Spokane) for taking on the task of removing the Indian people as mascots for America's fun and games, Oren Lyons (Onondaga) for bringing a national spiritualism to Indian country, Vine Deloria, Jr., (Hunkpapa) for the books "Custer Died for Your Sins" and "God is Red," Tom Bee (Dakota) for the spirited protest songs his group "Exit" brought to America, Gwen Shunatona (Otoe), for her role in Indian education, Pa Haska (Oglala Lakota) for greeting tourists at Mount Rushmore until his death as an unofficial ambassador of the Lakota Nation, Charles Trimble (Oglala Lakota) for serving as a role model for Indian journalists for many years, Mary Kim Titla (Apache) for starting the online magazine "Indian Youth Magazine" and throwing away her role as a much honored television journalist to accomplish this feat, and to Enos Poor Bear (Oglala Lakota) for creating the flag that serves the Oglala Lakota Nation (Pine Ridge) and for giving me my Lakota name, Nanwica Kciji (Stands up for Them), in a religious ceremony many years ago.

There are so many more high achievers in Indian country that I did not mention here but they are people I will write about in the years to come.

In this modern day of online news, people, and events, perhaps you will take the time to "Google" the people I have mentioned in this New Year's column and become their friends. We lost that great author and professor Vine Deloria, Jr., last year, but his works can be found at harmon@clear lightbooks.com.

I wish all of my readers the very best of the New Year.

Educators must keep refreshed

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The challenges of being a classroom teacher on the reservation are probably not much different than any other setting across the nation.

In any profession the key is discovering the latest methods and strategies for keeping current and being renewed from time to time. Many teachers are happy to have a 9-10 month contract, so they can enjoy their summers off. For many, that is their time for renewal.

Teaching is one of those professions that, at times, aren't accorded the respect and admiration that it should.

Teachers are paid very poorly, especially in South Dakota as we are on the bottom of the teacher salary scale; teachers know this yet most go into because they simply love teaching children.

Professor Fredrick Goodman of the University of Michigan said that veterans who stay engaged accept revision and constant analysis. Some school districts are fortunate to offer professional development in the form of paid summer seminars and professional development, while others can study content oriented subjects.

For Lakota teachers, many schools are able to offer workshops and seminars by bringing in experts and motivational speakers. Rapid City seems to be a favorite location for such professional development during the summers and during the Lakota Nation Invitational gathering.

It's important that teachers vacate their usual environment and take some time away even for a while to refresh; it must be a function of being human that leads us to get complacent and bored even when there is important work to be done.

And, believe me, there is much to be done among tribal schools and we need the best and the brightest to step forward and take the plunge and make a splash.

Barry Barnett of the Center for Teaching Quality in North Carolina said it best about teachers. He said, "Teaching for many teachers, is like one-part emergency room medicine, and the other part a never ending broadway performance."

Teachers spend a third of their lives with our children and vice-versa and many have to love it and really make a concerted effort to keep current.

Much of the teaching curriculum and lessons are the same, but teachers have to find imaginative and novel ways to present it to children.

In tribal communities, we have to demonstrate how it is relevant to the experience of tribal people and the future welfare of individual communities.

There has to be a healthy balance between western education and its ideas and that of Lakota people and their wonderful contribution to balancing the world as well. I think the secret is in creating incentives so that much more Lakota youngsters will aspire to be teachers one day.

I don't think I will live to see the day that our institutions will be filled with mostly Lakota professionals, but ironically the change is coming very slowly.

When we don't have more Lakota educators, then we have difficulty meeting the mandates of NCLB, but many cannot see that.

There should be young people with education in hand who are leading our schools, on the school board and on college boards.

Many of the older educators and lay people simply enjoy the status quo and can't see that they should act for the greater good which is the children. I don't think I would enjoy simply being a mouthpiece for an arrangement like that where an institution cannot assess itself and make appropriate changes and this is what NCLB would have them do, in theory.

For others, being renewed and finding ways to refresh oneself means being creative and staying on the top of their game in teaching youngsters. Technology and the demands of the No Child Left Behind Act have been added to the mix and I suppose older and more experienced teachers have resorted to some interesting ways to keep current and deliver good instruction in the classroom. One Chicago teacher who taught in a tough neighborhood was quoted as saying "The older I get, the better I get and that is exciting."

In a reservation community, one of the key issues is illustrating to parents and children the importance of doing well today in the classroom and knowing how that impacts one later on in life. How a child does at any of their classes will follow them around for the rest of their lives.

I looked at some of my old grades and low and behold I got some F's and some D's. It was a rather humbling experience looking back even at my undergraduate college transcript and knowing that something caused me to do poorly. Just then, I heard that song on KINI entitled, "I am a Man of Constant Sorry" and it fit my mood for the moment.

Happy New Year to many of my former undergraduate and graduate students. I see many of you from time to time and I am proud of your contributions.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Thoughts that come from the heart

We are ruining our children with food

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

As 2006 ended, there is always discussion on the goals and resolutions of the next coming year. One of the choice resolutions as always is geared about health.

It is something I hear every year from people, 'this year I want to lose weight' 'I am going to lose 10 to 15 pounds,' 'I am gonna get get skinny.'

That is a resolution I seem to make every year and sometimes I cater to that promise that I make to myself and make some progress and other times it flies out the window and by March it is a dim memory.

Weight and health are two big issues we face as we get older, suddenly as we near that mid age value, we start to get concerned about our health, taking care of ourselves and worry that we may become diabetic, have heart problems or get sick. We realize we need to exercise more, walk and take care of ourselves,

When we come to realize that and actually do something about it, it becomes a lesson in life that makes us stronger in disciplining our selves.

Structure and discipline and our philosophy about life are values we learn in life that helps us to become successful.

As we go through life we learn about disciplining ourselves to get what we want. Some people have the discipline needed to keep their weight down, eat healthy foods and exercise.

The first time, I realized I was 'just too fat' for my own comfort, and that I needed to do something about it. And doing something about it didn't mean going out to buy the next size up.

That was too easy. I remember the first time I had to shop in the next women's department and by that I don't mean the next store over but like the BIGGER women's department.

That was so tough for me, it was something like I didn't really want to do and every time I ventured in there, I would look about and make sure nobody was around that I knew. Lord, forbid, I didn't want anybody to know that I gotten that fat.

It was my daughter that helped me to develop that discipline to get control of my weight.

She was training to go to Artesia to be a tribal police officer and she was determined to make it through the training so she knew she had to get in physical shape. When she went out running on the track at Kyle, I would tag along and do the same. Well, at first, she would run and I would walk. So yeah, I was tagging along, my one round to her two. She taught me how warm up to control my breathing, to control my posture and stick with a diet that will help me in weight loss.

She lost her weight I lost mine. And it felt SO GOOD! I loved the feeling of feeling good about myself and most of all I was back down in the little ladies department.

That itself was enough incentive for me to keep that discipline. In getting older, we tend to forget about keeping our body active, and that is the first mistake we make because before long we get fat and then it escalates and then before we know it we are obese.

When I first became a young wife, one of the things that was taught to me by my mother and my sisters was the motto, 'a way to a man's heart is through his stomach,' in other words, I became a good cook because it was one of those things I had to do to make the whole scheme of a marriage and a family work.

It was cooking for good taste, being resourceful in obtaining good food, making enough to eat, and making it look attractive to eat.

That meant even the color scheme. Brown meat, green something, yellow something and maybe something white like bread to set it off. It also meant making good bread and learning how to igni good stuff for the family pantry.

I am not sure who taught me that, maybe it was in home economics or one of my sisters. It couldn't have been my mom as she didn't care about color scheme, just as long as we had food and enough of it. I also knew that it was important to have the four basic food groups for good health.

Then I had two daughters, who are now grown, and I applied the same methods to them that I learned. Be a good cook. Make it taste good. Make it look good. Make your kids happy. Make your man happy.

We cater to that nurturing part of us with our children by overusing food. It is a natural feeling, we want to take care of our children, we want to provide for them so we feed them and then we overfeed them. It makes us feel good to know they ate good and have plenty to eat.

Family 'food parties' soon become family traditions.

Obesity is a big health problem on the reservation. We are suppose to be one of the poorest counties in the state and yet we have an obesity problem.

Somewhere along the way, in our tiwahe, we tend to forget to provide that structure and discipline to our children to eat healthy and to keep active.

Basically we are ruining our children with food because eventually the unhealthy lifestyle they are learning will hurt them in their future. In their future, they too will be concerned about diabetes, about heart problems due to obesity.

In teaching our children, we tell them 'don't be drinking' 'don't be smoking that peji' all that is bad for you.

There was a term my mom used to say, 'wiyatke' and I knew it was a bad habit from the way she talked about it. I learned not to drink because it was bad for me and why it was bad for me.

So in turn I tried to teach my children. It was a discipline that helped me in my life and I wanted them to understanding those social ills so they would have a better life. Of course that doesn't mean they followed what I said, but I know it is instilled in their core of understanding somewhere.

It is important as parents to teach our children about the social ills they will encounter but we should be teaching them about a healthy diet and being active to stay healthy.

We should be teaching them that packing on 20 to 30 pounds in their 20s is not a good thing for their future. We should be teaching them that overeating and not being active isn't good for them.

That it will hurt them in their future.

Elder left toothless by Indian Health Service

By Hazel Bonner
Special to the Times
Guest Columnist

A 76-year old resident of Wounded Knee tells a story about the Indian Health Service. It is a tale that makes this writer cringe, but one that happens often on the Reservations.

The doctor was with the dental department. He pulled all of her teeth on both the top and bottom, and then gave her two weeks to heal.

She returned in two weeks and was told she still was not healed enough to prepare dentures for her.

After more than two months she was told by Indian Health Servicethat they could not help her because the dental department had no funds. She has now been without teeth for more than three months.

She states in a letter to this writer the following: "I've been turned down so much I feel like an outsider, all though I am 4/4 degree Oglala Sioux and lived here all my life, …I've tried everything to get false teeth but I can't seem to do anything."

I contacted a resident of Pine Ridge. She suggested contacting the Pine Ridge Service Unit Director at (605) 867-5131. I thought I would ask residents of Pine Ridge to flood his office with calls.

I have been told by reliable resources that Indian patients at the clinics need to have their own insurance or they will receive only minimal services. That seems to be the case here.

The IHS says they have no money for crowns, bridges partials and dentures. A lot of Pine Ridge residents are left toothless, but action for this elder is definitely needed.

Isn't there a treaty obligation that is forgotten here? Ask Indian Health Service about the treaty obligations of the federal government in regards to health care.

An update on the Sicangu's clean energy education partnership

By Ronald Niess
Special to the Times

This is to provide an update to the Oyate on the progress of the Little Thunder Clean Energy Education Partnership. Also, I will touch on some other items, the Rosebud Sioux Tribes Utilities Commission is involved in.

The Little Thunder CEEP is a renewable energy project involving the installation of various renewable technologies in the home of respected Sicangu elders, Cecil and Rose Little Thunder, whose newer home is one of the most expensive to heat on the Rosebud. The home is all electric.

While the Little Thunder home Project is being facilitated by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Utilities Commission, it is the vision of the Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakape, Rosebud's housing entity.

SWA realized the high cost of heating and providing energy to homes on the Rosebud and throughout Indian Country.

The Cecil and Rose Little Thunder home was identified by SWA as one which could serve as a pilot renewable energy project and which could be precursor to renewable energy applications to a whole housing site.

Partners have been SWA, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Utilities Commission, U.S. Dept. of Energy, National Renewable Energy Lab out of Boulder, Colo., Council of Energy Resource Tribes, Intertribal Council Utilities Policy, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's LIHEAP and Resource Development offices, and grass roots members of the Oyate. We want our efforts to be community driven as much as possible.

Among possible energy sources discussed have been wind, solar, hydro, bio-mass, and, of course, energy efficiency.

New to the team, and who will play a large role in bringing our renewable energy vision to fruition, is Trees, Water and People of Boulder, Colo., who are "committed to developing sustainable community-based conservation solutions." Their mission statement is custom tailored to our needs and I consider them an answer to a prayer. Along with Richard Fox, of TW&P, crucial will be Native Renewable Energy Warriors such as Henry Red Cloud, Oglala, and Sicangu's, Victor Young and Harold "String" Medearis.

Recently, Mr. Red Cloud and skilled members of SWA construction, installed a solar heater to the Little Thunder home, which will offset daytime heating costs which of course, saves energy. Other than the building and installation of the system, the cost factors will be almost zero.

Interesting to note, is that the design and construction of the system is new and the brain-child of Henry Red Cloud and TW&P.

This spring, Little Thunder CEEP will be installing a small wind turbine and a Photo Voltaic solar system to the home of Rose and Cecil Little Thunder, along with a row of Aspen trees. These will provide a wind break and is practical as well as aesthetically pleasing. Another feature TW&P brings to the table will be a new twist to an old idea of our plans.

During this time, we will be hosting a design and planning meeting/workshop on the Rosebud and you are all invited. You can actually witness or even help put up these renewable systems this spring. Facilitating will be the Rosebud Tribal Utilities Commission, SWA and Trees, Water and People.

Announcements will be made and printed.

For further info, call co-facilitators:

o TUC Director, Mr. Tony Rogers (605) 747-4097

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe Utilities Commission is extremely busy on a number of on-going projects for, and on behalf, of the people. Some projects: include 911 - Developing a viable and effective system.

WAPA Allocations - Providing an offset to qualifying energy consumers.

Winter Disconnects - and other life threatening practices. Helping to stop them.

Renewable Energy Projects - We went through a lot of blood, sweat and tears to help get the 750 kw Meg-Micon Wind Turbine put up by the casino. A major coup, one which took years in planning and development. Also assisting was Intertribal COUP.

The Utilities Commission has also helped with the Owl Feather War Bonnet Wind Project by St. Francis, and of course, we are helping facilitate Little Thunder CEEP.

We need to do further work to define Title 20 of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Law and Order Code, which is the Tribes Utilities Code. Much of our powers are reserved. Definition and enforcement teeth need development. This is one of our goals..

I have been advocating for a joint meeting of the Tribes Utilities Commissions, or equivalents, as well as other Tax Commissions. We have much at stake. There is benefit to working together as an entire Nation. I serve as an RST Utilities Commissioner.

On a personal note, I wish to thank my friend, RST TUC Director, Tony Rogers, and staff, for their dedication and resilience. You are expected to achieve infinity on pennies.

Bleeciyapo! The Oyate come first.

I also wish to touch on a couple of results of the state of South Dakota ballot initiatives in the recent elections as well as the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Secretarial Election, or better yet, lack of one.

Amendment E - The intent was to make judges accountable who violate citizens Civil Rights. The propaganda campaign of the S.D. Republican political machine completely distorted the truth of the intent of the amendment. Even to the way it was worded on the ballot by the S. D. Attorney General.

About 90 percent of the S.D. voters rejected the amendment. Yet on the Rosebud, the idea of holding judges accountable for violating the rights of citizens (I remember Homer Chief Eagle and the infamous "beanie-weanie" case) either passed in various voting districts or came close.

In Indian Country, we are keenly aware of the institutional racism of the South Dakota state and federal judicial systems. Injustices which would not be so long tolerated by any other state and which is America's hidden, shameful secret.

Tobacco Tax - I serve on the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Tax Commission.

The S.D. Revenue Department has sent to various tribe's correspondence that tells us since state voters voted to increase cigarette product taxes, it would necessary for tribe's to follow suit by January 2007, or at least those tribe's that have tax collection agreements with the state.

I pose the questions: But do we? Should we? How did reservation voters actually vote? I have heard many sides to this issue. I, myself, have always been leery of any agreement which could compromise the sovereignty/jurisdiction of the Tribe.

The State of South Dakota has long been collecting what amounts to illegal taxes on the reservations. I have written of these taxes. The gross receipts tax assessed on telecommunications companies is said to be in "lieu of a property tax." There's also the S.D. Public Utilities Commission Tax, paid by reservation residents to help fund the operations of the SD PUC, an entity which does not have jurisdiction on the rez's.

The state does not negotiate in good faith, gaming compacts with tribes.

I propose that we, the tribes, not raise any taxes which the state tells us we must. At least, not until these sovereignty issues are met and dealt with.

Constitutional Convention - I have also written on this historic process whereby dedicated Sicangu were able to propose amendments to our IRA Constitution, which governs or dictates us.

Exactly 189 amendments were proposed. After an intense process, the Sicangu Constitutional Task Force was able to narrow these down to 27. We submitted these to the Department of Interior BIA on April 19, 2005, one year and eight months ago as of this writing.

I was told we might finally have a Secretarial Election around March. Then we are told at a community meeting by a council member, that the BIA now says because of the "U.S. continuing fiscal resolution" there is no money to conduct the Secretarial Election.

The Oyate was excited, even elated, that the corruption and oppression of the IRS Governmental system, forced on Tribes by the United States, was finally getting to be overhauled.

Men and women; ikcewicasa na wiya, of vision and dream came forward with many ideas of constitutional reform. So far, this vision has been squashed by the DOI, BIA, and perhaps elements if the IRS government system itself.

Talk around the Rosebud rez on an associated matter is that the administration has asked the local university to help write a new Constitution, which is traditionally based.

On the surface this seems a good idea. One whose time has come.

From what I have read and gathered from those I have spoken with, it seems that tribal members do not think that politicians should craft or guide such a document.

They say the architects and direction of a traditionally-based Constitution should not come from the "12 percent", but from the grass roots/traditional Oyate themselves.

I'm closing, wopila tanka he for reading these messages, for borrowing a little of your time.

May Wakan Tanka watch over you and your tiospaye this new year.

Notes From Indian Country

Honoring those who may not be honored elsewhere

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I come from a world that is, for the most part, out of sight and out of mind for the average American. We (the Indian people living on the nine Indian reservations in South Dakota) are usually featured in the mainstream media during times of controversy (Wounded Knee takeover in 1973) or when an aspiring journalist covers the consequences of extreme poverty (NBC News and Washington Post series in early 1980s on poverty on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota).

The Pine Ridge Reservation was prominent in the news in the early 1980s because it is located in a county, Shannon, which was proclaimed "The Poorest County in America" by the 1980 U. S. Census Bureau.

I was born, raised, and educated on an Indian reservation where the people oftentimes see the world through the wrong end of the telescope.

It is a place where the people do not necessarily see George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson or Teddy Roosevelt (the four faces on Mount Rushmore) as heroes.

On the 50th Anniversary of the carving of Mount Rushmore, I was featured in People Magazine because I called Mount Rushmore "The Shrine of Hypocrisy."

In the article I outlined some of the atrocities against the Indian people perpetrated by the four presidents carved on the mountain. In fact, the month of December not only was the month of the Massacre at Wounded Knee in 1890, it was also the month when 38 Sioux warriors were hanged in Minnesota in the largest mass hanging in this Nation's history, by order of President Abraham Lincoln.

In the first Gulf War, when the massed coalition forces looked out at the dark desert lands just prior to their assault on Iraq, they called that vast unknown land "Indian country."

When someone commits a social or political blunder they are "off the reservation." Or when one wants to tell a lie but not be accused of being a liar, he puts a hand behind his back, with fingers crossed, and says, "Honest Injun."

And worse yet, African Americans who cringe at the public use of the "N" word are just as guilty and as adamant as whites in using the "R" word (Redskin) although that word is as offensive to Native Americans as the "N" word is to African Americans.

I suppose it all depends upon whose ox is gored.

I have my own heroes. They are Indian people that will, in all probability, never be honored in mainstream America.

They are people I have admired and emulated in deed and cause.

And as we move into the New Year of 2007, I want to mention their names if for no other reason than it may be the only time they are nationally acclaimed.

Rupert Costo (Cahuilla) was my mentor. He was the publisher of the Indian Historian Press in San Francisco until his death in 1987. Peter MacDonald served four terms as president of the Navajo Nation.

Although he was charged and convicted of taking bribes in his later years as president, he still holds a special place in my heart for taking on the large corporations that were raping the lands of the Navajo for uranium and coal. He told his people, "We are not an Indian reservation; we are the Navajo Nation."

Lionel Bordeaux (Sicangu) for his role in bringing higher education to the Rosebud Reservation (Sinte Gleska University), Tom Short Bull for doing the same for the Oglala Lakota, (Oglala Lakota College), Dr. Dean Chavers (Lumbee) for his many years of fighting for the educational freedom of Indian students, Wilma Mankiller (Cherokee) and Cecilia Fire Thunder (Oglala Lakota), two women that rose to the highest posts on their reservations, Principle Chief and President, and who fought tooth and nail to advance the rights of Indian women, Charlene Teters (Spokane) for taking on the task of removing the Indian people as mascots for America's fun and games, Oren Lyons (Onondaga) for bringing a national spiritualism to Indian country, Vine Deloria, Jr., (Hunkpapa) for the books "Custer Died for Your Sins" and "God is Red," Tom Bee (Dakota) for the spirited protest songs his group "Exit" brought to America, Gwen Shunatona (Otoe), for her role in Indian education, Pa Haska (Oglala Lakota) for greeting tourists at Mount Rushmore until his death as an unofficial ambassador of the Lakota Nation, Charles Trimble (Oglala Lakota) for serving as a role model for Indian journalists for many years, Mary Kim Titla (Apache) for starting the online magazine "Indian Youth Magazine" and throwing away her role as a much honored television journalist to accomplish this feat, and to Enos Poor Bear (Oglala Lakota) for creating the flag that serves the Oglala Lakota Nation (Pine Ridge) and for giving me my Lakota name, Nanwica Kciji (Stands up for Them), in a religious ceremony many years ago.

There are so many more high achievers in Indian country that I did not mention here but they are people I will write about in the years to come.

In this modern day of online news, people, and events, perhaps you will take the time to "Google" the people I have mentioned in this New Year's column and become their friends. We lost that great author and professor Vine Deloria, Jr., last year, but his works can be found at harmon@clear lightbooks.com.

I wish all of my readers the very best of the New Year.

Educators must keep refreshed

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The challenges of being a classroom teacher on the reservation are probably not much different than any other setting across the nation.

In any profession the key is discovering the latest methods and strategies for keeping current and being renewed from time to time. Many teachers are happy to have a 9-10 month contract, so they can enjoy their summers off. For many, that is their time for renewal.

Teaching is one of those professions that, at times, aren't accorded the respect and admiration that it should.

Teachers are paid very poorly, especially in South Dakota as we are on the bottom of the teacher salary scale; teachers know this yet most go into because they simply love teaching children.

Professor Fredrick Goodman of the University of Michigan said that veterans who stay engaged accept revision and constant analysis. Some school districts are fortunate to offer professional development in the form of paid summer seminars and professional development, while others can study content oriented subjects.

For Lakota teachers, many schools are able to offer workshops and seminars by bringing in experts and motivational speakers. Rapid City seems to be a favorite location for such professional development during the summers and during the Lakota Nation Invitational gathering.

It's important that teachers vacate their usual environment and take some time away even for a while to refresh; it must be a function of being human that leads us to get complacent and bored even when there is important work to be done.

And, believe me, there is much to be done among tribal schools and we need the best and the brightest to step forward and take the plunge and make a splash.

Barry Barnett of the Center for Teaching Quality in North Carolina said it best about teachers. He said, "Teaching for many teachers, is like one-part emergency room medicine, and the other part a never ending broadway performance."

Teachers spend a third of their lives with our children and vice-versa and many have to love it and really make a concerted effort to keep current.

Much of the teaching curriculum and lessons are the same, but teachers have to find imaginative and novel ways to present it to children.

In tribal communities, we have to demonstrate how it is relevant to the experience of tribal people and the future welfare of individual communities.

There has to be a healthy balance between western education and its ideas and that of Lakota people and their wonderful contribution to balancing the world as well. I think the secret is in creating incentives so that much more Lakota youngsters will aspire to be teachers one day.

I don't think I will live to see the day that our institutions will be filled with mostly Lakota professionals, but ironically the change is coming very slowly.

When we don't have more Lakota educators, then we have difficulty meeting the mandates of NCLB, but many cannot see that.

There should be young people with education in hand who are leading our schools, on the school board and on college boards.

Many of the older educators and lay people simply enjoy the status quo and can't see that they should act for the greater good which is the children. I don't think I would enjoy simply being a mouthpiece for an arrangement like that where an institution cannot assess itself and make appropriate changes and this is what NCLB would have them do, in theory.

For others, being renewed and finding ways to refresh oneself means being creative and staying on the top of their game in teaching youngsters. Technology and the demands of the No Child Left Behind Act have been added to the mix and I suppose older and more experienced teachers have resorted to some interesting ways to keep current and deliver good instruction in the classroom. One Chicago teacher who taught in a tough neighborhood was quoted as saying "The older I get, the better I get and that is exciting."

In a reservation community, one of the key issues is illustrating to parents and children the importance of doing well today in the classroom and knowing how that impacts one later on in life. How a child does at any of their classes will follow them around for the rest of their lives.

I looked at some of my old grades and low and behold I got some F's and some D's. It was a rather humbling experience looking back even at my undergraduate college transcript and knowing that something caused me to do poorly. Just then, I heard that song on KINI entitled, "I am a Man of Constant Sorry" and it fit my mood for the moment.

Happy New Year to many of my former undergraduate and graduate students. I see many of you from time to time and I am proud of your contributions.

Educational legislation Lucas sees as important

MISSION - Finding the funds to adequately fund K-12 education will likely be the center of focus in the 2007 Legislative Session that begins Jan. 9 at the State Capitol. Newly elected District 26A Representative Larry Lucas feels there is a good chance that we can do more than the minimum State Aid increase that is provided in law. "It won't be easy, but I think the message is being heard that many of our schools are operating in a very conservative manner, limiting what courses they offer and holding a tough line on salaries."

According to the Equity and Adequacy study done by the Education Alliance, teacher salaries in the state are $32.4 million behind surrounding states, even when you take into account factors such as low taxes and the cost of living in South Dakota. Lucas is quick to point out that salaries for all educators are low, especially for the educational support staff who are often paid near the minimum hour salary rate. "If Congress can raise the minimum hourly salary, I think that will help to drive up salaried employees in our schools as well. Money is limited and we will have to do some hard prioritizing in our State's budget. There are many needy issues proposed in the Governor's Budget for the state. If we can delay funding for some of these projects, then we can help our schools."

Larry Lucas

Seventy schools in the state have filed a law suite against the state charging that the state does not provide the necessary amount of state aid to provide for an adequate education. The outcome of this lawsuit will likely not be settled for three to four years.

Other issues that will be debated in the upcoming legislative session are providing more opportunities for health care insurance for those who cannot afford it, looking at ways to increase alternative energies, strengthening campaign finance regulations,

Allen family loses home to fire during holidays, donations appreciated

ALLEN - On Dec. 14, while Francine and Tony Poor Bear were attending the Oglala Lakota College Board retreat, a fire broke out and gutted their home.

No one was home at time. Francine was recently elected to the college board and the family was in Rapid City when the fire broke out.

"We lost everything in that fire. We lost our Christmas presents, bikes, clothes and everything," Poor Bear said. She said when they walked into the house after the fire, everything was pretty much melted. She said the fire was determined to be caused by a malfunction in the electrical box.

Francine and Tony's home is across from the Allen Store north of American Horse School and is well remembered by many who pass by for it's holiday glory.

Almost every year, the family would creatively decorate their home in beautiful colored lights with a Christmas theme entwined with a patriotic scheme. It has been a unique sight for those traveling through Allen.

Any donations to help the family would be deeply appreciated, the family is in need of furniture, household items, personal care items, clothing, adult male, adult female XXL ad they have two teen daughters.

If you would want to make a contribution to the family, Tony and Francine can be reached at 605-441-6174 or 441-6122.

SuAnne Big Crow boys and girls center receives $500,00 grant

PINE RIDGE - The SuAnne Big Crow Boys and Girls Club in Pine Ridge will use a $500,000 grant to add an academic program to its services for the next five years.

The club was recently awarded a New Visions, 21st Century Community Learning Centers Program grant.

The club will receive $100,000 a year for a program targeting third-, fourth- and fifth-graders in the hope of improving their academic achievement.

The club plans to hire two teachers to work with students after school, Rawlings said.

And it will use Learning Today, an interactive online program to improve student academic success. Many schools nationwide have reported dramatic increases in grades and test scores after using the program, according to Rawlings.

The grant is designed to give the club the opportunity to enhance the lives of students and their families by supporting all the programs at the club that serves kids ages 7 to 18, Rawlings said.

The new program should be implemented by the end of January.

The SuAnne Big Crow Club for Boys and Girls serves an average of 100 kids daily.

Seminole tribe sued over Hard Rock takeover

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) -- A rejected suitor for the Hard Rock chain of cafes and casinos claims in a lawsuit that the Seminole Tribe of Florida was the successful buyer because of improper collusion and bid-rigging.

The Baltimore-based development firm The Cordish Co. and an affiliate, Power Plant Entertainment LLC, contend that Hard Rock Cafe International Inc. management secretly negotiated with the Seminoles for seven months before plans to sell were announced in July.

Power Plant, a partnership between Cordish and Coastal Development LLC, was the original developer of the Seminole Hard Rock casinos and hotels in Hollywood and Tampa.

The Seminoles announced the $965 million purchase of the Hard Rock empire from London-based Rank Group PLC on Dec. 7, marking the first time an American Indian tribe had purchased a major international corporation.

The Cordish lawsuit, however, said the company and its banker, Goldman Sachs & Co., were refused the right to bid for the business even though they could have made a larger offer. The lawsuit was filed late Friday in Broward County Circuit Court.

"We were declined the opportunity to bid, which is kind of amazing. We believe we would have prevailed," said Marty Steinberg, the Miami-based attorney for Cordish.

The Seminoles agreed to keep Hard Rock managers in place and provide them with "additional financial benefits" if the tribe was the successful bidder, according to the lawsuit.

boosting the economy for small businesses in the state, and passing a state Indian Education Act.

According to Keith Moore, head of the state Office of Indian Education, "The hope is incorporating Native American cultural studies into the curriculum will improve state-tribal relations and, also, impact student achievement and graduation rates."

Lucas added, "This is a great opportunity for the state to present a long-range plan to help Native American students that struggle in our schools, whether it is on one of our reservations or in a large high school in Rapid City or Sioux Falls. Additionally, all students will get a more accurate understanding of their history, of tribal sovereignty, and of native contributions to society. When this type of learning takes place in all of our schools, the relationships between Indian and non-Indian neighbors will mature and the entire state will be stronger for it."

Some other issues that Representative Lucas plans to work on this year are looking for state assistance for the tribal colleges, expanding efforts to attract medical professionals to the rural areas of our state, expanding and developing early childhood education and nutrition, and developing a scenic highway through the southern part of South Dakota.

"Their actions were motivated by self-dealing and a desire to enrich themselves," the lawsuit says.

A spokesman for Hard Rock Cafe International declined comment Tuesday. The Seminoles also had no immediate comment.

The lawsuit seeks unspecified damages, which could be tripled under Florida law.

The Seminole-Hard Rock deal includes 124 Hard Rock Cafes, four hotels, two casino hotels, two concert venues and stakes in three unbranded hotels. Rank shareholders are scheduled to vote next Monday on whether to approve the sale.

Allegations of bid-rigging were also made in a separate lawsuit by Power Plant against investment banker Merrill Lynch, a financial adviser to the Seminole tribe. That lawsuit, filed in Miami-Dade Circuit Court in December, contends that Power Plant was stopped from making a deal to cash out its interests in the Florida casinos because of improper pressure from the Seminoles.

Book Review

The Dark legacy of Indian mission boarding schools

By Archie B. Beauvais, Ed.D

As a scholar strongly entrenched in the Lakota community and having navigated many of the same rough waters which Tim Giago has, I am of the opinion that anyone of Lakota heritage who is 'published' is certainly more accomplished than many of the rest of us . I applaud this published work as it lends itself to the body of knowledge that requires deeper understanding and reconciliation.

Tim Giago is an enrolled Oglala Lakota and he is the author of The Obriginal Sin and Notes From Indian Country I and II.' An accomplished publisher of the original Lakota Times, he subsequently he was publisher of Indian Country Today and the Lakota Journal; no small feat for any professional.

'Children Left Behind: The Dark Legacy of Indian Mission Boarding Schools' published in 2006 by Clear Light Publishers of Sante Fe, N.M. was apparently built upon many of the weekly editorial opinions that Giago has written since 1979. He integrates many of his early poems and some poignant illustrations by daughter, Denise, into the book.

'Children Left Behind' is perhaps a play on the title of the contemporary piece of legislation we now know as 'No Child Left Behind' and it was written as a consequence of Giago's experience in coming to terms with the abuse he saw and experienced at Holy Rosary Mission. Rupert Costa, a Cahuilla tribal member and the Editor of the Indian Historian Press, Inc in San Francisco was a great influence to Giago as he would endeavor to challenge 'the establishment' through his writing. His insistence that Giago needed to publish the many poems he had written about his mission boarding school days was exactly what Giago needed in order to provide a glimpse into the very troubling world of Indian mission boarding schools. His Aborginal Sin was released before the world had any idea that the church was enmeshed in such scandal and would later settle many of the claims.

In his work, Giago notes that Holy Rosary Mission tried to disavow the fact that he had been a student there for many years after his publication was released. He counters this by writing, "In Indian Country, it really didn't matter whether the Indians of today ever attended the boarding schools themselves, because nearly every one of the them had an aunt, uncle, mother, father, grandmother or grandfather who had been a victim of the boarding school system. Many suffered the extreme problems of collateral damage."

For any one who attended boarding school, we can attest to the fact that Giago had to have been there in order to give such a "heart wrenching" account of having been torn from family and turned over to the mission.

Giago recounts the nightly and morning routines of Lakota children as they deferred to the prefects who lorded over the children with an 'iron fist.' The first weeks were the worst as Giago noted it was a time of intermittent loneliness, learning and a time when innocence would be put to the test.

One piece of irony is not lost on the fact that Lakota children were sent to boarding schools and had their hair cut, their spirituality vacated and their Native language forbidden. Giago goes on to recount one Lakota youngster who experienced the death of a brother and his father and, yet, who received no counseling or sympathy from the mission. When he did attempt to sneak home, he was caught and beaten with a razor strap. The youngster survived, but his self-esteem and pride were forever stunted.

Growing up in Kyle, Giago laments the fact that Lakota people were quite self-sufficient and had not grown totally dependent upon the federal government. He writes that after taking stock of those classmates he grew up with, he realized that many have since died.

Giago recounts many anecdotes of people who touched his life and who were also products of the mission boarding school experience. One such individual was Agnes Yellow Boy who was the backbone of Lakota society and who worried about the social fabric of reservation life. Giago said, "It was freezing cold that night as I stood in front of her cabin to do my stand-up close on this Christmas special. As I looked into the camera and talked about Agnes and about our friendship over the years, I was grateful that the cold wind disguised my tears."

Giago tells the story of Albert Rokey who was a maintenance man at Holy Rosary Mission and who apparently enticed young girls into his room and sexually assaulted them. He never knew if Rokey was ever punished for his horrible deeds.

Other aspects of mission boarding school life as portrayed by Giago give testimony to their authenticity. The older boys having a place to smoke, finding ways to send a note to a special girl or getting in on 'bun time' are all memories that lend credence to a sometimes lonely experience.

In the eleventh grade, he successfully ran away from the Mission and eventually made it back to family and Rapid City. It was a decision he never regretted as a year later he traveled the world while in the U. S. Navy.

"Children Left Behind" in part, describes the precursor to the troubling landscape that is currently being litigated and that has plagued the lives of countless Lakota youth who have attended Mission schools. There are lessons to learn from this work as sometimes a simple apology is needed but never offered. Whether it is historical and generational trauma or Mission boarding schools which have played their part in forever altering the lives of many Lakota youth, this published work is an important step in the continuing dialogue of respecting the traditions, spirituality, and way of life of the Lakota.

Giago is an accomplished columnist having perfected his craft through experience and sheer conviction and it shows through in this work. This writing has as its foundation poems which authenticate the often times humorous and other times sad reference to Lakota lives that have littered the landscape. The mission boarding school experience is becoming a distant memory for the younger set and this published work will reiterate those troubled times.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Why does it takes so long to heal after losing someone

Dear Anna,

First of all, I would like to wish you happy holidays and hope you have a Happy New Year! I am writing to you Anna, in hopes that you can help me find some answers and some type of closure.

Two years ago, I lost someone that I love more than words can say. He was my best friend, my love and everything to me. We were very close to one another and there were no secrets between the two of us. We told one another everything and he was my shoulder to lean on. He encouraged me to go through with whatever I put my mind to and whenever I doubted myself he was there for me.

Anna, I have cried just about single day since that morning I found out my best friend was killed. From the moment I heard he was gone I had this empty feeling inside that has never gone away.

I have talked to numerous people about his death and looked for a way to stop the pain that I feel deep inside. I've searched for my closure to his death but everyone has told me the same thing. They have told me that only time can heal my pain and that I need to let go and move on.

This is where its complicated for me Anna. I don't know what the hell they are talking about. I have gone on with my life and do everything I have said I was going to do. How am I suppose to let go and move on? I just don't understand. I have gone on with my life but lately, I've doubted myself and the road I'm on. I don't' know what I'm doing anymore and I feel so lonely. I go around other people and I laugh and I joke with them so no one knows that I'm in pain.

I know that I am depressed because I have talked with someone about all this. This person told me that I need to deal with my best friends' death and that maybe I should think about going to grief counseling.

The only problem with that is that I'm not ready to deal with all this. Anna, I miss him so much! I swear sometimes I smell his cologne in the air and it bring tears to me eyes. Or I hear a song that brings back so many memories of our past and I cry uncontrollably. I don't even want to go back to the rez sometimes because I feel even more lonesome and lost whenever I do.

I am a single mother and I am doing the best I can to provide for my little one but times are hard. I'm struggling with bills and living paycheck to paycheck. My daughter is my best friend's goddaughter and we baptized her two months before he died.

She was only five weeks old when we baptized her. Her biological father didn't want anything to do with her and he hasn't been there since day one. So I chose my best friend to be her godfather because I knew he would be the perfect example of what a father is and should be for her. He was suppose to be the father she doesn't have.

I remember one night we were talking, my best friend and I. He told me that when he held her that day we baptized her, he couldn't help but think to himself. "You should have belonged to me.

You should've been my baby." When he told me that, I told him that was something I thought about all the time and that was why I chose him to be her godfather. We talked about her future and the things she would have.

I remember that night he told me that she would never want for nothing, he said. He told me that I would never have to worry about getting her the things she needs because he was going to be there to help me. Now that he's gone I have been going through with the child support issue with her father because I need help paying for her daycare and buying her clothes.

Whenever she needs something, I remember what my best friend told me and I just want to cry. I think about what he said and wonder, "Where are you?" Now that I need you, where are you?" In my heart I ask, why? There are billion people in this world and Tunkshila took him.

I remember the night we were talking about my daughter's future we made a promise to each other. We promised that in five years time if we haven't married anyone or found the right person than we would marry each other. Sounds just like 'my best friend's wedding," doesn't it? Yeah, just what people say whenever I tell them about our promise.

Now that he's gone, I haven't been able to get close to anyone else. My relationships haven't lasted long and I have come to believe that I'm gong to be alone until my time comes to join all the people I have lost in life. I have accepted that and I know that he wouldn't want me to wait for him. Anna, I don't know what I'm asking of you but I felt I should turn to you for some kind of help. I miss him so much and I have been so lost without him. What do you see ahead of me Anna? I don't know anymore. I am falling apart without him and I don't know what to do. I need your help.

Lost and Lonely

Dear L & L:

You are in about the sixth stage of grief, out of a possible 12 major steps. About half way. Here are the problems:

Remember, the truth is that you and your best friend would have become intimate lovers, and not in five years. You were working that out when he died. It would have happened really fast; but as luck, Tunkshila, God and your best friend's soul all agreed to, it wasn't his turn to share more life time with anyone on the physical level; instead, it was his time to leave the earth and teach us through his life and his death.

In other words: You miss the lover you almost had. He has a romantic spark, an untainted memory, a relationship that was perfect with no anger, no flaws, and no realization to it either. He was your friend. He did love you.

He would have been your lover, and after getting to know each other at that level, the honey moon would have worn off and a less perfect man would have appeared. Don't idealize him. He had problems. He had too much time spent with substances. He had bad relationships in his past. He had career future choices in turmoil (he didn't know what he really wanted to do or be). He was a man.

Don't make him so perfect in your head that no other living mortal man can compete. That is reality check number one.

Number two: He isn't here anymore. At least, in the physical sense of the word. Your daughter cannot depend on him. You cannot depend on him either. Yes, he still loves you, yes - he still checks in on you (you do smell him, that is real), yes, love is real - but partnership, at the physical level and in this physical time-space continuum is not going to happen. Consider this: he is available to help you from the other side. When and if that is necessary. Don't be selfish and assume his time with the teachers and relatives he is with on the other side - don't call him in to amuse yourself. Don't selfishly demand that he pay attention to your pain, so that he has no time for focus elsewhere.

Instead, trust that he will check in on you. Trust that if you need him he will know that and visit to see if there is information or help he can convey for you from the spiritual realm.

Now, for his highest good and yours, understand what it means to let him go. He must go, and you and all of us, will eventually join him on our journey to the next level of life, when we leave our physical bodies. Until then, re-focus.

Know, that since everything is in Divine Order, and your friend was taken for his, yours and every ones highest good, the only thing that keeps you from peace in his passing is your decision that your loss is greater and more immediate than his choices in his journey.

You are nothing more than physically separated from him. Think of him as though he were in another room, in another country, on the other side of the world. You can still know he is around, but he doesn't have to be in your daily life for you to feel okay with out seeing him.

All we ever have from each other in this world in love. Yes, you say to me, but my daughter won't have the benefit of getting to know him, playing with him, laughing with him, etc.

Then I say to you, tell your daughter that there are such people in the world, then know that love, which is what he would give to your daughter, is still being given to her from him on the other side.

Then also know, that the physical interaction that he would have provided in your dream time perfect version of a world is still available with brothers, sisters, aunties, uncles and other friends.

Expand your horizons and breath him out of longing.

I know you. I know this hurts. I know it just ain't right. I know all of that; but I am telling you this: It is. We cannot change it. We have to learn to live with it, because it is an unconscienable sin to plague the ones that we love that have left us with our grief and our despair.

We burden them.

We have to stop that. They do not need to feel bad about us because they had to leave. This is the true meaning of the word pitiful. We as humans are pitiful in our understanding of God (Tunksila), and the Great Plan that is life. We are pitiful.

Understand that we must learn to be okay with that which is Gods Plan. Why? Because it is. God did not want us to suffer for our coming or our going. Each is a blessing. Each is a reality.

As we get closer and clearer in our understanding of Spirit, of God, and accepting life as a gift we get further and further away from grief.

We all grieve for those we love when they pass. We miss them. We get angry with them for leaving us. But, we can't change it, so we have to accept it. In order to accept it we must first understand that it is part of God's Plan and therefore, somehow, wonderful and perfect.

It's a journey to get to be as smart and loving and kind and wonderful as God is. None of us yet have made it - so we grieve. When we get to be as smart and good as God, then we will quit grieving, because we will understand the life cycle completely.

Until then, go through your stages of grief: Denial or "saintdom" (the dead are always perfect in our memories), realization of separation and feelings of abandonment (the seeds of anger), frustration with the loss of a plan (acceptance of change), loving in honesty, thankfulness for having shared the time and place of the earth together, and finally - release, without the dead feeling badly for getting on with their lives.

It's a journey. It's hard and it's sad. Live your life with the living and pray for the gone. Live now, it's all you have, and quit putting yourself in the way of a better life. You are strong, beautiful, funny, very hard working and cute. There is a good man coming and he will laugh with you every night for the rest of your lives together. Pick up your chin, tell your best friend syanora (see you later), and open up for love.

Looking for lost Mustang jacket

Dear Anna,

I enjoy reading your column all the time weekly. I was wondering if you can help me find out where I lost my boyfriend's jacket. It's a black, blue Little Wound Mustangs jacket with his name on it. On Dec. 15, I and my boyfriend, his niece and her boyfriend were drinking and I remember using his jacket that night. Then I took his jacket off, put it on his bed downstairs. That was the last time we seen the jacket. Can you please help me find his jacket, please.?

Looking for jacket

Dear Looking:

I don't think it made it to the bed downstairs. I see it being sat on on the ground to keep someone more comfortable outside. Remember?

I think it has been snagged by another person. It may turn up but it feels like that will be quite a while from now. Another girl has it and she will give it to another guy.

Better save your pennies, nickles, dimes and dollars to replace his jacket. There's a lesson here somewhere - any idea who it might be for and what it is?

Think. Why?

I feel lonely and depressed, what's going on with me

Dear Anna,

I would like to ask you a few questions. I been lonely lately and I don't know what is really going on with me but I feel like I am depressed.

I have no patience with any thing right now there is a lot of stuff going on with me but the good thing is that I got another job and I'm very happy with that.

I just don't know maybe you can help. Would I get better at my job do you see me working here for a while do you see my life getting better

Dazed and confused

Dear Dazed and Confused:

Yes. There seems to be some depression. Please see a gynecologist, it feels hormonal and ovarian related.

Also, as soon as possible start an exercise routine, cut out on sweet carbs, and start singing and dancing when you are alone.

Your job is good. You will get better, you will do better, you will prosper, and next year you will even get considered for another position.

Work, exercise, lower carbs, hormonal balancing and then many good things, including love, will come into your life.

Good Luck.

Depression this time of the year

Dear Anna,

Why does it seem people get depressed about this time of the year?

Just a question

Dear Just a question:

Most people suffer from the "horribles." Most people are never happy with what and where they are. Most people say: I will be happy when_____ (I find the perfect mate, when I get married, when I get a better job, when I have another child, when I make more money, when I get a better car, when I get a new house, when...when...when).

This is more prevalent during the holidays. We all want the fantasy Christmas, with everyone and everything picture perfect. What usually transpires is more realistic than fantasy and people tend to feel like failures for not achieving the retaily marketed and packaged by fantasy hallmark holiday.

We can prevent this plunge into the abyss of "never enoughness" by living in the love of the moment, appreciation for the quirkiness of today and the sense of humor of the Creator. We can teach our children this way of living and then they will never have to live in the comparative (how did I do at Christmas in comparison to others) reality of the flash and grab ya Christmas spirit.

I say this, because this year, for the first time in my life, agreed to - with and by my Children and complied to by the Creator, the only Christmas gifts we gave in our family could not be wrapped.

They had to be invisible, and you couldn't taste them either. We just gave love, consideration, and joy to each other - for the whole day, and hopefully, for our whole lives.

Try it, it's cheap, it's fun, and it didn't hurt a bit. It changed significantly how Christmas felt and what it is about. It brought it back to love of family and humor. It was the best Christmas EVER.

Flying By sentenced for embezzlement

PIERRE (AP) - A former official from the Standing Rock Sioux Reservation has been given a 33-month prison term for stealing money that came from the federal government as repayment for land that was flooded when Lake Oahe was built.

Allen Flying By, 50, of Little Eagle, was convicted on several counts of embezzlement and theft involving money given to the tribe's Running Antelope District, according to federal prosecutors.

At least a half dozen other district officials were found guilty earlier for taking illegal payments for unauthorized travel, consulting fees, loans and other things.

My First Christmas In Heaven
I see the countless Christmas Trees
Around the world below
With tiny lights
Like heaven's stars
Reflecting on the snow
The sight is so spectacular
Please wipe away that tear
For I am spending Christmas
With Jesus Christ this year
I hear the many Christmas songs
That people hold so dear
But the sounds of music can't compare
With the Christmas choir up here
I have no words to tell you
The joy their voices bring
For it is beyond description
To hear the angels sing
I know how much you miss me
I see the pain inside your heart
But I am not so far away
We really aren't apart
So be happy for me my loved ones
You know I hold you dear
And be happy I'm spending Christmas
With Jesus Christ this year
I send you each a special gift
From my heavenly home above
I send you each a memory of My undying love
So have a Merry Christmas
And wipe away that tear
Remember I am spending Christmas With Jesus Christ this year.

Merry Christmas Ryan, We love and miss you so so much, it's hard to go on without you but were trying, everybody misses you and your crazy ways. Your our Christmas Angel, We'll love you always!!! Dad, Mom, Gina, Rob & lil Cyrus....oh and legend too.

OST council selects executive board

Eagle Elk, Waters, Pourier selected, votes to continue current administration

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

KYLE - "Alex White Plume came out to this meeting this morning and asked that we postpone this meeting until the election has been reviewed and a decision is made on how to rectify the problems created by the past council and election board," said John Steele, tribal president, to the tribal council gathered in Kyle to elect a new executive board on Tuesday, "Alex is planning on having a meeting with the elders in Pine Ridge today and would like us to wait for the election review before we select the executive board."

First by a show of hands and later on in the meeting more formally, the council voted 18-0 to continue the meeting; Cora Whiting, council representative from Medicine Root made a motion to continue the meeting and the business of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, it was seconded by Craig Dillon and Don Garnier.

Following lunch, the council opened the floor up to three candidates running for secretary of the tribe; the two term incumbent, Rhonda Two Eagle distributed a booklet that documented every decision the council made over the past four years and talked about future plans and frustrations about a lack of financial resources to do the job right; Elizabeth Waters spoke briefly about her experience and her interest in working very closely with each member of the council and Lydia Bear Killer, past council representative from Pass Creek District talked about her experience and the importance of the council. Waters won a first ballot election with 10 votes, Two Eagle finished with six and Bear Killer had two.

Five candidates threw their hat in the ring for treasurer; candidates included the incumbent Crystal Eagle Elk, two time treasurer Dave Rabbit, Elizabeth Morrison, past council representative Walt Big Crow and past council representative and past finance committee chair Juanita Scherich. Eagle Elk received nine votes on the first ballot, Big Crow four, Scherich and Rabbit two each and Morrison one. Eagle Elk was selected as treasurer again on the second ballot receiving 14 votes to four for Big Crow.

Six tribal members ran for fifth member with Dennis King, past vice president opening the presentations. Additional candidates included Doug Bissonette and past council representatives Bernard White Face, Gerald Big Crow, Alvin Slow Bear and the incumbent Dave Pourier. Pourier was the top vote getter after the first ballot with seven votes; Slow Bear and White Face each received three, Bissonette and Big Crow received two each and King earned one. In the run-off Pourier received nine, White Face five and Slow Bear three. Pourier was declared

KINI 96.1 FM to celebrate 29 years

By Archie B. Beauvais
Time Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - KINI FM radio at 96.1 is making preliminary preparations for its "29th" birthday celebration on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 19-21 with a powwow and sobriety dance. What is unique about this birthday party is that it is occurring one year prior to its 30th birthday. Logically one would wait for an even decade number, but Richard Iyotte station manager, said that the celebration would serve as good practice for next year's follow-up affair.

He said, "KINI is proud of the service it provides. The timing of the event, there isn't much happening then…We're looking for people to support us. I hope they show up." There will be door prizes, day money for drums, and buffalo soup."

KINI FM radio station on the south edge of St. Francis currently has seven employees. With recent equipment upgrades the station now offers its listeners automated music, especially after hours, when live 'deejays' are not on the airwaves. KINI is celebrating 29 years of broadcasting country and western music, contemporary Native music, and traditional Lakota music in addition to some great sports coverage. A birthday celebration will be held at Digmann Hall.

KINI was originally created through the hard work of Father Joseph Gill and other community members. Early deejays included, Mark Iyotte, Rob Whipple, Bernard Whiting, Jr. Lloyd B. One Star, Sr. to name a few.

The traditional powwow will begin at 6 p.m. on Saturday, Jan. 20 and continue on Sunday at 1:30 p.m. at Digmann Hall. The sobriety dance is scheduled for 8 p.m. on Friday at Digmann Hall with an admission fee of $3.00 and $5.00. It will feature local bands with concessions available.

On Saturday at 12 p.m. there will be a blessing of the Ici Mani Ya Waste' recreation center by Father John Hatcher and Mike Cross of Kyle. All are welcome to take a tour of the new center which features study space, a reference library for high school students, a pool table and office space for the center.

On Sunday there will be an inculturated mass at St. Charles Church at 11:15 a.m. with lunch served at 12:30 p.m. at Digmann Hall.

KINI is owned and operated by St. Francis Mission and its evolution has seen many deejays, managers and support staff working hard to make it the viable institution that it is today. The station reaches out to thousands of listeners on the Rosebud and the middle to eastern edge of the Pine Ridge reservation. It can also be accessed well beyond Interstate 90 to the north and into

After 26 years, Martin man seeks second chance

Parole board on his side, but two South Dakota governors have said no

By Peter Harriman
Sioux Falls Argus Leader
Reprinted with permission
Jan. 7, 2007

MARTIN - In January, 1981, Timothy Caffrey of Martin put a .25-caliber handgun to the side of his father's head and pulled the trigger. Then he shot him again, stole the dead man's money and set out to cover up the crime.

It was, he concedes, a methodical act, one driven by what he viewed as a father turned irrational by alcohol abuse who wanted to part ways with the son because of Caffrey's own drug abuse as a teenager.

Caffrey didn't want that to happen.

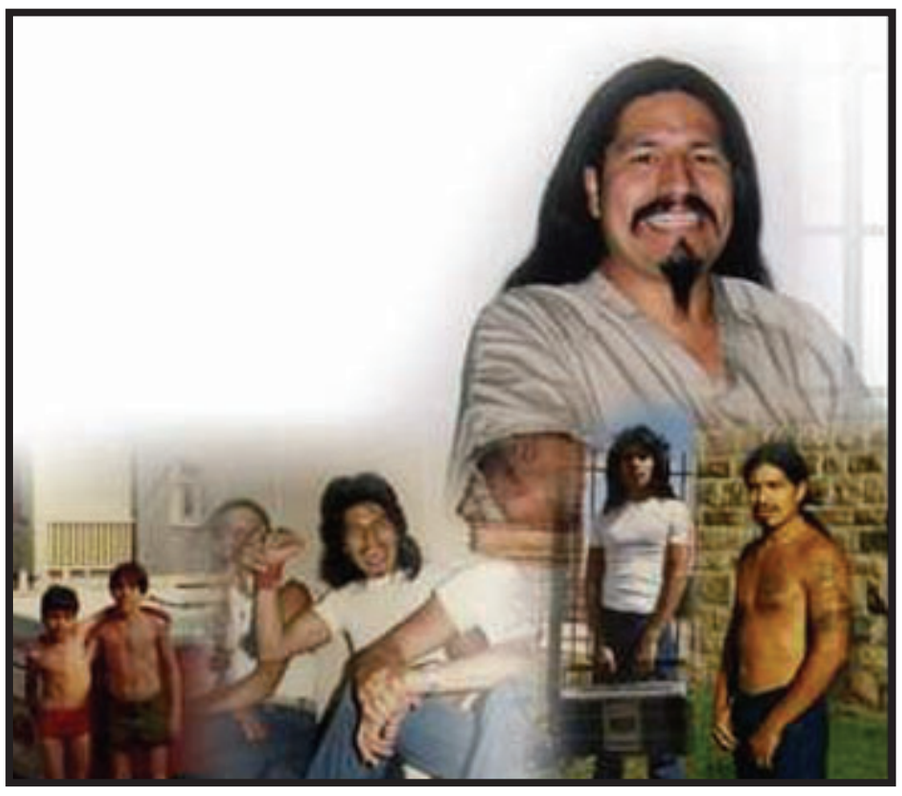
Twenty-six years later, it remains Caffrey's defining act.

After having a first-degree murder conviction overturned and subsequently pleading guilty to manslaughter, Caffrey has been serving a sentence of life without parole in the South Dakota State Penitentiary.

The state parole board has recommended that the sentence be softened to allow Caffrey to one day get out. But Gov. Mike Rounds - advised by an attorney general who says Caffrey is a cold-blooded killer - has refused the change.

The heavy door to the visitor's lounge at the penitentiary slides open, and a lean man, now 44, with long black hair and an exaggerated diamond-shaped goatee walks in.

The room calls to mind an aging motel lobby. Nothing in it suggests the regimented institutional life surrounding it, except most people here are wearing loose- fitting khaki uniforms bearing the stencil "inmate."



Whatever it lacks as a setting, it is all Tim Caffrey's got, and he takes a seat at a table and sets about what has become his life's work - convincing one more person he would not kill again if he were granted parole.

"When I was younger, this place never bothered me. I thought it was a big playground," he said.

It was Dec. 23 when he emerged from the two-week stay in the "fish tank" where new inmates are segregated and saw what the rest of his life would be.

He was 18.

A handful of photos document the life of Timothy Caffrey. He was born in Pine Ridge and adopted by a Martin family. Caffrey grew from young adulthood to middle age as an inmate at the South Dakota Penitentiary. He was 17 in 1981 when he killed his father and pleaded guilty to manslaughter.

the Nebraska sand hills southward.

"The Voice of the Rosebud Sioux Reservation" as often proclaimed by deejay Perry DeCory is heard around the clock now. It has undergone some recent renovations in office décor, while the studio equipment has been upgraded and is state-of-the art. KINI is able to create its own "automated" sound track that can be played after hours or on weekends, when there is no live programming occurring.

The other personnel at KINI include Mary Lee Fast Horse, Jennifer Charge On Him, Alice Starboy, receptionist, and deejay Roger Crow Eagle, Jr. Cynthia Crow Eagle serves as deejay on Sundays and can be heard playing 'oldies' from the 1950s and 60'.

The music format is a mix of contemporary country and western music with some traditional Lakota music, as well as contemporary Native American music. Local Lakota musicians who are often heard include, Jim Young, Walt Hernandez, Skeeter Leader Charge, Everett "Butch" Felix, Jackie Bird, Steve Leader Charge, Glen Old Lodge and Holly Dee to name a few.

KINI is asking for donations to fund its 29th birthday celebration and they may be sent to KINI at PO Box 499, St. Francis, SD 57570. KINI may be contacted at 605-747-2291.

the winner, Ella John Carlow was excused so it took nine for a majority vote and the selection.

Blaine Little Thunder, Bernard White Face, Warren Eagle and the incumbent, Abraham Tobacco were nominated from the floor for the critic/sergeant at arms position. In the first ballot, Tobacco received eight, Little Thunder and White Face four each and Eagle one. On the second ballot, tobacco won with nine votes, White Face received five and Little Thunder three.

The motion was made by Craig Dillon and seconded by Chuck Jacobs; after a nine to nine tie vote by the council, John Steele voted yes to the exemption.

The council voted 18-0 to continue the 2006 budget into 2007 and voted 14-4 to continue the general fund budget with some money to help KILI get back on the air.

Sicangu Chief Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. journeys to the 'spirit world'

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

Calvin Iron Shell Sr.

ROSEBUD - Chief Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. passed away at age 73 on December 30, 2006 at the Mercy Medical Center in Sioux City, IA. He was born on the sovereign homelands of the Sicangu Lakota.

Wake services were held on Wednesday and Thursday, January 3 and 4 at the SGU multipurpose building. Wake services were then moved the Veteran's Memorial gym in St. Francis on Friday. Funeral services were held at 2:00 p.m. on Saturday, his birthdate, at the Veteran's Memorial gym in St. Francis with Roy Stone, Sr. and Leonard Crow Dog offering traditional prayers. Graveside military rites were held by the Sicangu Lakota Warriors and the Todd County American Legion, while interment was at the Iron Shell cemetery in St. Francis.

Many friends and relatives came to say goodbye during wake services while singers sang traditional sun dance songs. A military role call for Chief Iron Shell was held at the Veteran's Memorial gym at 9:00 p.m. on Friday night. The traditional funeral was a reminder of the great loss that Lakota people experience when a leader like Chief Iron Shell passes into the spirit world.

Iron Shell was born in 1933 to Charles and Rosalie Iron Shell in Rosebud and attended school at St. Francis Mission until the tenth grade at which time he moved to Hastings, NEB with his family.

Calvin exemplified all that accompanies being a Lakota warrior as he served his country from 1950-54 and he was proud of his role as an airborne trooper. He served with the U.S. Army's 11th Cavalry during an atomic bomb test at Camp Desert Rock, NV. He then served three years of combat duty in Korea and was honorably discharged in 1954 and returned to Hastings, NEB.

Iron Shell, Sr. is well known for his coaching tenure and as an educator at St. Francis Indian School on the Rosebud Sioux reservation.

He also worked with the youth at Crow Creek High School, Marty Indian School, the Winnebago School system, Macy School system, and the Sioux City public schools.

With his master's degree in education in hand from the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, Chief Iron Shell apparently touched the lives of many people and often mentored the youth and represented a positive role model as he served in many capacities. He was a professional boxer, teacher, basketball coach, judge, superintendent, tutor and spiritual advisor according to his family.

Calvin married Carol Lorraine Davenport in 1966 in Denver, CO and from this union five children were born into the world. They are George Calvin, Calvin Robert, Jr., Jacqueline Rhea, SueAnn Rose and Rosalie Cora Iron Shell. He then married Norma Brave in 1980 and their three children are Charles Issaac, Theresa Marlene and Calvin Robert Iron Shell, III. Calvin married Rosalinda Leal in 1992.

SueAnn was the subject of a 2005 interview conducted by the Lakota Country Times in response to a request from Iron Shell, Sr. He was taking a proactive role as a concerned father in wishing to spread the word about diabetes and its devastating effects on the human body. SuaAnn was scheduled for a kidney transplant and Iron Shell, Sr. was making preparations for her surgery at the University of Nebraska in Omaha.

According to Calvin Iron Shell, Jr. SueAnn is in the need for another kidney transplant as the first attempt was not successful. Other family members are lining up as potential donors, he said.

It is noteworthy that Chief Iron Shell lived the traditional beliefs of the Lakota as a pipe carrier and a sundance leader.

He valued the traditional Lakota way of life and worked to protect, while at the same time passing it on to his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. His spirituality helped him to achieve a balance in his life and his family, all the while being respected by many people all over the world.

Former RST tribal president welcomed the opportunity to comment about his enduring friendship with Iron Shell, Sr. He said, "There was a café on main street in Mission run by Fred Belfany. Calvin sat down with me. He said, 'I want to move home' and I encouraged him to do that. He then said, 'I need an eagle' and lo and behold, the day before I had ridden my horse on a big hill south of Wood. There was an eagle sitting there. He must have died in his sleep. I left the eagle sitting there and the next morning, Iron Shell asked me. I said 'come on' and there was something special about that meeting. The eagle gave us that connection. I have tremendous respect for Iron Shell…He was a great individual and possessed discipline that he imposed on us around him. He was one 4-5 people who caused me to run for tribal president. In a word, he was a "warrior."

He is survived by brothers, Eugene Iron Shell, Sr., Fred "Butch" Iron Shell, and sisters, Marlene Iron Shell and Theresa Hiatt.

His children who are left to mourn include, George, Jackie, Calvin, Jr., SueAnn, Rosalie, Lisa White, Ronnie Roubideaux, Charles, Teresa, and Calvin III. Calvin, Sr. was the proud grandfather of 20 grandchildren and 5 great-granchildren.

Supreme Court upholds ruling that Oneida casino compact never ratified

NEW YORK - Members of Upstate Citizens for Equality on Monday supported filing a second lawsuit. The first suit sought only a ruling that the agreement between the state and the Oneida Indian Nation had never been ratified by the state Legislature and was thus invalid. A state judge ruled in UCE's favor in 2004, and the U.S. Supreme Court upheld that decision in December.

The new suit contemplated by UCE would ask a judge to order the casino closed until a new agreement was reached and ratified. UCE member and former group president Scott Peterman said he did not know when UCE would file the suit, but that it would be "as soon as possible."

Oneida nation spokesman Mark Emery could not be reached for comment Monday night. He has said the agreement that allowed Turning Stone to open in 1993 is legal under federal law, and a state court ruling has no power over that.

Indian-run casinos fall under the federal jurisdiction of the National Indian Gaming Commission, which has the power to close casinos.

Range rate appeal is dismissed by Interior Board of Indian Appeals

ROSEBUD - According to a press release issued by the Office of Special Trustee for American Indians on Jan. 10, the Interior Board of Indian Appeals dismissed an appeal that was filed by the Rosebud Indian Land and Grazing Association. The appeal which was dismissed on Dec. 21, 2006, disputed the Regional Director's decision establishing a 2007 grazing rental rate of $14.61 per animal unit month (AUM) for allotted lands on the Rosebud reservation.

The effect of the dismissal is that it now allows for the application of a $14.61 per AUM grazing rate for allotted land and a $9.60 per AUM grazing rate for tribal land.

Upon approval of new grazing permits and billing and collection of grazing fees from cattle producers, tribal landowners who have interests in these range units will be receiving range income that has been delayed due to the appeal process, according to Jim Cordry, Fiduciary Trust Officer.

It is anticipated that payments will begin after Jan. 15 and all funds collected will be distributed shortly after receipt.

Contact Jim Cordry at 605-856-4965 or Cleve Her Many Horses at 605-747-2224 if you have any questions.

Caffrey: after 26 years

Five years later, a girl who had been writing to him died while Caffrey was in solitary confinement for breaking a prison rule.

"It hit me so hard," he said. "I told myself 'You've got to stop playing around and maybe talk about getting out. Quit acting like a kid.' "

So far, a losing fight.

Long: 'I won't be happy if Timmy makes parole'

Since then, Caffrey has been up against the toughest manslaughter statute in the U.S. and South Dakota Attorney General Larry Long, who was the Bennett County state's attorney in 1981 and prosecuted Caffrey. Long still contends "Timmy's going to kill again if he gets the chance. That's how psychopaths work."

Advocates who have been drawn to Caffrey's case over the years are dismayed by that.

"He's just totally wrong," Arnie Berkeland said. The retired Sioux Falls businessman has visited Caffrey more than 1,000 times in the penitentiary. Whatever Caffrey was in 1981, he's no danger to society now, Berkeland says. "If Larry Long thinks he's such a psychopath, why doesn't Long have him reevaluated?"

Mary Collins, a broadcaster from St. Johnsbury, Vt., met Caffrey through friends on the Pine Ridge reservation.

"Larry Long doesn't know the Tim Caffrey of today that I do," she said. "He has the most remarkable sense of humor, sense of hope. He has an idea of who he wants to be. He's not defeated."

If that is true, it still is not the whole story, Long says.

"Rehabilitation, I think, is one factor. But frankly, part of the reason we send people to the penitentiary for life is to make a statement about what they did. Part of it is simply punishment. We don't let everybody out who has been rehabilitated."

On two occasions, parole boards have recommended Caffrey's sentence be commuted to a length of years, which would allow him to qualify for parole. In 1991, the board said his sentence should be set at 150 years. But Caffrey had been in prison only about a decade then, and Gov. George Mickelson turned down the recommendation.

In 2003, the parole board said Caffrey's sentence should be commuted to 100 years. Gov. Mike Rounds did not act for eight months, then finally denied the commutation.

"If they give Timmy parole and the governor approves it and gives him a cut, that's the way the system works," Long said. "I understand it. I work in the system. But I won't be happy if Timmy makes parole."

Rounds' spokeswoman, Roxy Everson, says the governor typically does not comment on commutation decisions, but in Caffrey's case his decision was based on a review of the recommendation and upon comments in Caffrey's existing case file.

She also says Rounds "does not think any statute is necessarily perfect and might always be subject to Legislative review.

While manslaughter can carry a maximum sentence of life without parole, the governor noted it is not a mandatory sentence but rather provides a judge with discretion.

The governor does not use different criteria for reviewing commutations and pardon recommendations based upon whether the individual is white or Native American."

After denying Caffrey's commutation recommendation, Rounds did write to Berkeland in 2004: "The decision on a recommendation to grant a sentence commutation from life to years is not taken lightly and is carefully reviewed ... As governor, I must make the final decision whether to grant the commutation. I assure you all the past and present case information is reviewed in-depth before a decision is made."

Caffrey said if he had the chance to talk to Rounds, he would try to offset Long's opinion.

"I would tell him to ask people who know me instead of somebody who hasn't spoken to me since 1982, the last time I went to court in Martin."

But he adds: "I can understand Long saying the things he said then. I was no angel."

Ron Volesky, the Huron lawyer who unsuccessfully ran against Long for attorney general last year, has also begun representing Caffrey and hopes to get him a new parole hearing in the first quarter of this year. With Rounds and Long re-elected, though, Volesky worries "we are going to have this situation for the next four years."

But Volesky said he is seeking personal meetings with both the governor and attorney general to discuss Caffrey's case.

The case illustrates South Dakota's stringent sentencing for manslaughter. South Dakota and Oklahoma, which features a maximum indeterminate sentence for manslaughter, are the only two states where people convicted of that crime can face life behind bars. Four states have the next longest maximum sentence at 40 years, according to the South Dakota Criminal Code Revision Committee.

Discretion in sentencing, questions of racial disparity

Caffrey said he is sure Long holds no personal animosity toward him.

"I just figure he's doing his job," he said. But he also looks at the three inmates from Martin serving manslaughter sentences. The two Native Americans are doing life; the one white man is doing 75 years.

"That's one thing I can't understand," Caffrey said.

Jennifer Ring, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of the Dakotas, said part of the reason South Dakota's manslaughter maximum sentence is so extreme is that "in South Dakota manslaughter includes some offenses that in other states would be considered murder. This is something that needs review.

"The other thing is South Dakota just has very harsh sentences for a lot of things."

Like Caffrey, Ring sees disparity in the way the statute is applied.

"In my personal opinion, South Dakota white people have a concern about Indian people, and that is fueling a feeling about needing to keep a strong hand on things," she said.

Long said the manslaughter law "grants the maximum amount of discretion to the judge. There is no state in the union that gives more discretion to the judge in a case of first-degree manslaughter. The judge could have given him probation. He could have said, 'Your dad's a drunk and you get to shoot him.' "

In 2000, Donald Heck, a Kadoka lawyer and retired circuit judge, who sentenced Caffrey, wrote Berkeland, "My recollection is that the sentence was mandatory, so I had little discretion in the matter."

'Two people butting heads ... something's got to give'

Eventually all Caffrey's efforts to gain parole must come to this: he sits at a table and talks about killing his adoptive father.

"It wasn't just me shooting my father. It was me messing up my whole family life. It made for a long, hard life for my mom," he said.

Olive Caffrey forgave him and visited him about once a year in prison before she died, according to Caffrey. But a brother in Arizona and sister in Martin haven't seen him in years.

"The last time I saw him was maybe eight years ago. I haven't gone by myself," said relative Christie Phipps. "I'm sure he's changed. He was just a child when he went in."

She and her brother Robert were more than a decade older than Caffrey. Her parents took in foster children, she said. "We got Timmy and they fell in love with him. My mom and dad decided they couldn't let him go back."

William Caffrey told his adopted son one day he'd have to choose in large measure to follow the traditions of the Oglala Lakota culture he was born into or the white culture into which he'd been adopted. He said it didn't matter to him which culture he chose, only that he choose wisely, Caffrey said of his father.

But that image of wise parenting is offset by William Caffrey's problems with alcohol and his frustration with Tim Caffrey's use of alcohol and marijuana. It had been boiling up between them for about six months, Caffrey said.

"Two people butting heads, and something's got to give. I handled the situation the wrong way," he said.

William Caffrey had sought treatment for alcohol abuse, according to Long.

"Because his father was sober, his father had started taking an interest in Timmy's scholastic life and in making him go to church," Long said. "There was a whole bunch of things his recent sobriety had brought upon him."

On a day when his wife was out of town visiting relatives, William Caffrey found his 17-year-old son's stash of marijuana, confronted him and after discussing punishment, William Caffrey phoned his minister, Long said.

"Timmy overhears part of this conversation. Bill said to his pastor, 'I ought to give the kid $50 and throw his ass out of the house,' " Long said.

"Then Bill leaves the house. Timmy, of course, knows his father's habits intimately. He knows his dad is going to go and buy some booze and knows he will hide it in the yard because Timmy's mother doesn't allow booze in the house.

"While Timmy's father is gone, what Timmy does is round up his mother's .25 automatic pistol. He loads it and hides behind the kitchen door and waits for his father to come home. When Bill hides the beer out in the yard, Timmy's waiting for him behind the kitchen door. As Bill walks into the house, Timmy lays that .25 next to his father's ear and squeezes off a round at point blank range."

As William Caffrey fell, his son shot him a second time, the bullet striking tools he was carrying in his back pocket.

Tim Caffrey recovered one shell casing but the second rolled away under a refrigerator, Long said. Then Caffrey packed food and clothes, took his father's billfold and the gun and, after driving around town for about half an hour, picked up a friend and said he'd be allowed to stay overnight. But he had to tell his father where he'd be.

Under that pretext, he drove back home with the friend and pretended to discover the body, Long said.

While he was being questioned by police, an officer discovered the gun and other items Caffrey had hidden in the family car. At that point, Caffrey wrote out a confession and took from a pocket the shell casing he'd recovered, Long said.

What would he do if he were out, sister wonders

Caffrey was convicted of first degree murder, but the state Supreme Court ruled 3-2 that his confession had been coerced.

Long said he went ahead with a second trial even without the confession "because frankly I had another piece of evidence that was almost as compelling."

While he was in the Bennett County jail, Caffrey wrote a letter to the local newspaper, published by Long's parents.

"In that letter, he explained that his father was a drunk and was mean to him and kind of needed killing. Would the jurors of Bennett County please keep that in mind," Long said.

Caffrey was represented by Stan Whiting, a court-appointed lawyer from Winner. To avoid the cost of a second murder trial, Long said he gave Caffrey the option to plead guilty to manslaughter.

Caffrey hasn't given up. "I'm not institutionalized," he insists.

"I don't fear parole," he said. "I would not go out there to mess up."

His sister is unsure whether he should be paroled.

"He's been in there so long, I really wonder what he would do if he got out," Phipps said. "That doesn't have anything to do with what happened or what he did, just what would he do?"

He isn't owed anything, Caffrey said. He killed his father. It was his choice. He deserved to go to prison. But the defining event of his life is not the sum of his life, he said.

He hopes people will look at 25 years in the penitentiary, not one day in Martin in 1981. He has, aside from a few missteps, avoided trouble in prison.

"The way I've carried myself in this place, maybe I've earned a spot," he said. "Maybe I've earned one more chance."

From a friend of Caffrey's: he is a fine human being

Special the the Times

When I first met Tim Caffrey, I wasn't sure what or who to expect. We'd talked on the phone a number of times, written letters back and forth so when our first visit was scheduled I expected akward pauses in our three hour scheduled meeting at the penetentiary. There weren't any pauses, akward or otherwise.

Tim Caffrey, I found, is an engaging, humorous, thoughtful, interesting and interested person. He is also a murderer.

I had to think long and hard about who I was befriending. First step, to learn the circumstances of Tim's incarceration. He was 17, high on narcotics and struggling with a troubled relationship with his adoptive non-Indian father, when, in a moment of impulsive immaturity, he pulled the trigger on a pistol that belonged to his mother and shot his father dead.

Jump forward 25 years to an introduction to Tim by a fellow inmate and Martin childhood friend who asked for help for his children and grandchildren while he serves his time, add in an introduction to Arnie Berkeland, the man who has come to know Tim over the last 25 years as his friend and mentor and almost sole visitor since 1981, include meeting Tim and getting to know him and his case and I've come away feeling that what happened to the Caffrey family was nothing more or short of a horrible tragedy and miscarriage of justice.

The facts are that Tim did commit the crime. He freely admits that he did. And he's served 25 years for it all ready. But the truth also is that Tim was 17 at the time of the killing, that he had been drinking and smoking marijuana for a good part of that day, that his father was a known alcoholic, and by many accounts from Lakota friends who grew up in Martin and who knew Tim Caffrey and his family well, his father was an ignorant bully.

Factor in that Tim received a public defender who then served as the prosecuting attorney in an adjoining county - a no no by legal standards; that the circuit judge in the case didn't realize that the mandatory life sentence he was handing down wasn't, in fact, mandatory; that South Dakota's laws for manslaughter are, except for Oklahoma, the most harsh in the country, that Tim was 17 at the time of the crime - and, by professional standards, not able to make completely mature, thoughtful decisions; that Larry Long, the prosecuting attorney in Tim's case and now South Dakota's Attorney General has never once spoken directly to Tim or had him reevaluated in these 25 years but who insists that Tim Caffrey is a cold-blooded killer who will kill again if released; that two parole boards recommended Tim's release; that petitioners from Martin, including Tim's or that Arnie Berkeland, a respected South Dakota businessman has spent the last 25 years getting to know and befriend Tim and would provide Tim a home and full support for reentry into society upon his release; justice is no longer being served by keeping Tim in prison for the rest of his life.

Tim Caffrey is 44. I consider him a fine human being.

He has much to live. We have much to forgive.

Our Views

We can't ever accept the Black Hills money

Ever since our Lakota grandparents had an inkling that there could possibly be some out of court settlement on the value of the Black Hills taken from the Lakota, there has been a "doksa when I get my Black Hills" syndrome. Of course it came to be kind of a lame joke, as all of our grandparents went on their journey before any money was disbursed.

The government offered a certain value for the gold, natural resources and land as a settlement and it was never accepted by any of the Lakota bands, fortunately. Over the years, there have been attempts by some, namely Sen. Bill Bradley, to revisit the issue and ask for the return of the sacred He Sapa. Of course, with so many people already jammed into the hills area, realistically most would never vacate the area in favor of returning any of the land to us.

The land was probably never truly looked at in terms of today's assessed valuation, but rather its value when it was illegally taken. There are many traditional Lakota people and others who still adhere to the original dictates of the 1868 Fort Laramie Treaty that provide for tribal sovereignty and which defined the boundaries of the Great Sioux Nation which encompassed He Sapa.

It is also very interesting that some politicians recognize that "a treaty is a treaty" until either party abrogates or extinguishes their right to a claim. The federal government even acknowledges in treaties with with other nations, that treaties are the supreme law of the land. Why should treaties with tribal nations be regarded as any different; after all, they retain their quasi or partial sovereign status. As a nation within a nation, tribal sovereignty has been re-affirmed time and time again by the nation's highest court. As political entities, tribal nations are also making an impact on the voting outcomes of certain elections in the region and tribal people will continue to do so.

There seems to always be discussion about individual Lakota nations involved in the Black Hills issue and their separate desires to "tap into" the interest which has reportedly compounded annually. For certain, it has to be regarded as kind of a "savings" when the cash is sitting in some bank drawing interest daily. For those tribal nations who might especially be "cash strapped" it is understandable that it could be very tempting to negotiate with those who do the dispensing of the money.

Over the years, we have come to learn that accepting any of the Black Hills money with interest has been a non-option; otherwise, it would have been a done deal. It is also certain that the decision to accept any kind of settlement must receive unanimous approval from all of the Lakota tribes; otherwise, it would realistically not happen.

So at times, when we hear rumors of the tribes or tribal politicians talking of the accepting the interest or inquiring about it, it brings fear out in grassroots oyate or to those who know the value of the Black Hills whether in be in the sense of spirituality or of the fact that it was blantly stolen from the people.

Regardless, the reasoning for not accepting the money or the interest is still strong in this generation and it is valuable that this generation continues to promote to our youth and to the next generation, the true value of the sacred Paha Sapa.

It's important for us to teach our future generations that value.

This editorial was generated from the recent rumors of some tribes inquiring about tapping into the interest of the settlement and from the words of columnist Dana Lone Hill on these pages.

Cyril "Whitey" Scott, District 3 RST council representative from Antelope community on the Rosebud reservation said that there has never been a discussion amongst his colleagues that he is aware of on "tapping into" the interest that has accrued for the Black Hills.

He noted that he had been approached by outsiders asking him to consider the option, but his belief in protecting tribal sovereignty is very steadfast and would never settle for such action.

The last stomp dance

By Rev. Francis Apple
As'a Kuwapi
Kyle, S.D.

Long ago when our culture was still intact (Ikicize Wicasa) warriors who proved themselves in battle were chosen to dance a very touching ceremony called the Stomping down of the tall grass. In Lakota it was called (Owanka Onastopi.)

Yunkan wicasa Itacan wan ehanni maka sinan kiye, he Roy Bull Bear (Taopi Cikala) eciyapi he woecunki oyake. He 1930's hehan keye. Lyle el lehanl Wicoti ki, he, hehan tokuni sni ca hel snan woecun takinkinpa henna ecunpi keye.

A ravine which is on the south side of the powwow grounds was the gathering place for these warriors who were chosen.

They would put on their scalp shirts (wicaya he ogle) put on a long (cegnanke iyuslohe) streamer on their breechcloth and painted their faces with (wase.) They would carry their repeating rifles and started to dance towards the dancing arena. They danced to as if they were being fired upon.

Their close relatives and (kolas) friends would follow them. Every now and then they would pull the lever on their gun and load a shell in the chamber and fire into the air.

Unhnangicala hotun ki ataya jagya hanpi nan akis'api henna okiliitotunpi ca keya keyas unzo hekta wicoskan keye.

Otimahel hiyupi heciatan timan ahiya nan tohanl peji ki Tanya nonastopi canna hehan Ikicize Wicasa henna wakto oglakapi cannan titukuye henna canl wicokiya. Heunh sakawakan wicayuha timan hiyupi nan otuwicahic'anpi keye.

This well organized stomp dance was so thrilling that it would send cold chills up a person's spine and they would develop goose bumps and even cause a turtle to move a bit. The warriors mentioned were White Lance, my mother's father, and Dewey Beard. White Lance's brother. These two warriors rode with Crazy Horse in every major skirmish, on the Power River including Grotten's massacre and the famous Battle of the Little Big Horn where Custer got Siouxed.

They both lost all of their family at the infamous Wounded Knee Massacre. They couldn't leave their loved ones buried at the mass grave at Cankpe Opi, so they stayed around and they remarried Oglala women and that's where I came from.

My great grandfather whose name as'a kuwapi lies buried there. My grandfather gave me his Lakota name and I lived up to my name in Korea. One night our patrol came under attack and had about 100 gooks chasing us.

Sunksiha (Little Chief) comes from Chief Bull Bear's clan closely related to Chief Little Wound. He also counted coup on his enemies.

Empowering Yourself

Martin AA meeting sums 400 years of sobriety

By Patty Pourier

Dysfunction is printed on every page of this newspaper in one form or another. Whether it is the obituaries of young people, the drop out rates of our schools, the countless articles on poverty related issues, unemployment, or our government's inability to function. We hear of countless types of dysfunction daily. We see the problems in the school, the health care system, the political and court system, the alcohol and drug pandemic in our towns and villages. It has seemed to be that is it getting worse not better.

But, I witnessed a miracle last Saturday.

Twenty-five years ago, when I sobered up, I knew of two people on the reservation that were actively practicing sobriety through Alcoholics Anonymous. After treatment, we drove to Rapid City to attend Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, 180 miles round trip. I remember looking in the couch cushions and car seats to scrape up enough gas money to make the trip.

Last weekend I attended an AA meeting in Martin. I walked into the one room AA club, and there sat over 30 people. They were from St. Francis, Mission, Martin, Batesland, Pine Ridge, Chadron, Hot Springs, White River, Parmalee, Long Valley, and Rapid City.

Even more significant to me were the stories I heard, as the group shared. The meeting was chaired by a 16-year old who had been through treatment twice this year. He received a chip from his grandfather for attaining three months of being clean and sober. His grandfather celebrated 29 years of sobriety at the same meeting. Also there were two of his daughters, one sober 29 years and one sober 25 years.

Another man shared his remarkable story of growing up on the Pine Ridge Reservation, amid alcohol abuse, and poverty. When he talked you could see the admiration he had when he talked of the simple childhood he shared with his parents and the 10 children they raised in a very small log cabin with no water or electricity. He told of his mother emphasizing the importance of education. She told him, "they can take our land, but they cannot take our brains". He went on to become a successful professional that lived in many cities through the United States. He celebrated 23 years of sobriety.

There was a grandmother, who had lost a child to suicide induced by drug and alcohol abuse. You could see and feel her pain, as she explained that her family continues to try to heal, but the abuse continues. The affects of the disease are moving her very young grandchild over 1,000 miles away from her. You could see the pain it caused her to have her grandchild being taken from her watchful care, moving with her family that has severe domestic violence. She had 23 years of sobriety.

The stories went on, each one every bit as moving as the previous. There were a cross section of old and young, non-Indian and Indian, farmers/ranchers and people who were employed by them, professionals and uneducated, court ordered and those who lived to attend a meeting to survive, There were those too who no longer needed to come to meetings to stay sober, but needed to come to stay sane.

Some were there because they had been given the gift of hope from others years before at an AA meeting and wanted to give the same gift to the people that were just now struggling to find hope in their lives. The group represented almost 400 years of sobriety collectively.

Change happens so slowly, we often cannot see it. This is true with the healing of the reservation from alcoholism and drug addiction. But through the people and the daily reprieve many are enjoying through sobriety, hope is here.

My wish is that you could find it now.

Iron Shell family disrespected by non-Indians

Dear Editor:

My late maternal great grandmother's name was Cecelia DuBray Bordeaux. She was a sister to the late Rosalie DuBray Iron Shell.

Great Grandma Rosalie was Ina to Chief Calvin Iron Shell, Sr., who recently made his journey to the spirit world. I decided to write this piece when I learned of the unnecessary sorrow my close relatives experienced in attempting to secure the Lakota Veteran's gymnasium at St. Francis Indian School for Chief Iron Shell's wake and funeral.

Initially, the Iron Shell family wanted to have the three nights of wake and the funeral at the gym. Chief Iron Shell spent many years working at SFIS and many of his blood relatives live in St. Francis. However, the superintendent didn't want to call off school so the request was denied.

The current SFIS superintendent and school board chairman, who are both non-Indians, are obviously insensitive to the ways of our traditional people. Non-Indians who have lived on the Rosebud Reservation for many years claim to understand the Lakota and our way of life. However, I can count on ONE hand the number of non-Lakota living on the Rosebud Reservation who I actually believe have a glimmer of understanding of Lakota custom and the two wasicu in charge of our "Indian" school are not in that group.

Non-Indians do not understand our cultural and ceremonial ways when it comes to the burial of a Chief, who was also Akicita and respected leader of the Sun Dance.

Why is the gymnasium named after Lakota Veteran's when the administration/school board would not allow a well-respected military veteran, who also wore the bonnet of a Lakota Itancan/Naca, to lie in state there? Consequently, in attempting to correct their blunder, school officials allowed the Iron Shell family to have the last night of wake and

Seeing the light

Dana Lone Hill

I was thinking the other day of my heritage. Is there such a thing as being too proud?

Thinking of my step dad and how proud he was. To be Lakota. How he always showed this pride off.

He wore his hair long, he married my mom traditionally, he fought for our rights to the Black Hills Land Claim.

I thought of how his lifestyle and pride helped shape me to be the woman that I am today.

It started when I was young, age 10 when they married.

Back then, my family would always tour the Black Hills.

Then it was just my step-dad, mom, younger brother and me.

We would go to Bear Country and watch the animals fenced in their natural habitat but yet, able to enjoy the beautiful Black Hills.

We would go to some of the corny tourist spots like Cosmos, Reptile Gardens, & Marine Life. We would hit Custer State Park to see the buffalo and Crazy Horse Mountain.

My step dad explained to me, when I asked why our people didn't like Mt. Rushmore. They (the government) illegally took this land from us for gold. Then they carve the faces in the mountain of Presidents who pretty much did us wrong. That's why, and that is why Korczak Ziolkowski was carving Crazy Horse Mountain. To honor our people. He had spoken at Korczak's funeral the year before.

I was young, unimpressed, really. I didn't understand...well, let's just say I was stupid and naive.

I couldn't understand why our people wouldn't take all the money the government was offering us for the illegal seizure of the Black Hills when the treaty of Ft. Laramie was broken. I used to think of ways I could spend it.

I questioned my stepfather as to why we don't take the money.

"We never will." he told me, "the principle is pride, not money."

I was still puzzled. I wanted the money.

I was stupid, I used to debate him, "Why don't us Lakotas just take the money, why keep fighting for the land? It's already trashed, destroyed with tourist traps and stripmining, and RV parks. We will never be able to roam the sacred land like we used to...so why not just take the money? After all, we could still come and visit it...enjoy it."

He would just laugh at me, tell me one day I would see the light.

Then one day we was at this place called Wild West World in Custer. It was a tourist trap with small stores that sold saltwater taffy, magnets, postcards, and tiny spoons. They had carnival rides and every hour two cowboys would re-enact a gunfight. While we were there, a storm broke out and everyone ran for cover.

We ran in a restaurant. "Might as well eat lunch here." my step dad said. He always found a way to make lemonade out of lemons.

The restaurant had a lounge area and bar. Some big men in cowboy hats sitting at the bar were clearly drunk and talking loud.

"Boy, that rain is coming down hard and fast, those injuns must have danced real hard." They all laughed.

My step dad stood up, all of his 6 foot two inches and braids.

"Oh no" I thought "Please don't embarrass us." I thought for sure he was going to try and fight that group of five men. I didn't care what they called us, I just wanted to eat and leave.

"Excuse me" he says "I am trying to enjoy dinner with my family and would appreciate you not making any derogatory remarks, so we can eat in peace."

He glared each one of them down.

"Well, sorry about that Chief, how about I buy you a beer." One of the men said

"I don't drink." My step dad said, still glaring "And I am not a Chief, I'm a lawyer."

He glared at them, as the restaurant silenced and so did the men.

Finally he turned and walked back to the table.

"That Dana, is why we will never take the money for the Black Hills. We have to much pride in ourselves."

He continued to tell me throughout the meal about this pride.

"Don't let anyone degrade you, what you stand for. People will say they are not racist, but in the same breath they will call you names, degrading you. You come from strong people and never stand for that. Always stand up for yourself."

I didn't really get it until after that. A defining point in my life...moments later.

After the rain subsided and we went to Bear Country, USA, just outside of Rapid City. I watched the bears, buffalo, elk, and other animals in their fenced in zoo.

I noticed how they were able to enjoy the beauty of the Black Hills from inside the fence. But it was a fence they never chose.

That's when I saw the light, at age 11, and realized why we would never sell the Black Hills.

Not in my lifetime, anyway.

*In 1980, the Supreme Court awarded eight Sioux tribes $106 million in compensation--the 1877 value of $17.5 million, plus interest. This was payment for what the court called "a taking of tribal property."

This money sitting in a government account with interest, has grown to over half a billion (and is still growing.)

Notes From Indian Country

'New Kid in Town' shakes up local daily newspaper

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

In this day when newspapers, including the mighty New York Times, are on a readership decline, it seems insane for anyone to start a new newspaper, especially in a town where one newspaper has been dominant for more than 100 years.

But Steward Huntington, publisher of Seaton Publishing Company of Spearfish, South Dakota, believed that Rapid City was ripe for a rival publication. Huntington has worked for six newspapers across the country and has lived in the Black Hills for the past seven years.

Huntington said of his new venture, "After many years of study we saw that the Rapid City community was being underserved by the daily paper (Rapid City Journal) in town. The daily paper has become more and more of a regional paper during it 17-plus years since it went under corporate ownership. We felt there was an opening to provide a paper with a distinct Rapid City focus."

After more than one year in business the new Rapid City Weekly appears to be thriving. "The response from the readership has been unbelievable. In our most optimistic projections we never dreamed we would have the kind of feedback we've received. Our people can't go anywhere in town without being stopped by folks telling us how much they appreciate our paper," Huntington said.

Perhaps coincidentally, or maybe in response to the new competition, the Rapid City Journal brought in a new publisher and after the loss to cancer of their longtime editor Peggy Sagen, a new editor. The new management almost immediately set about changing the format and content of the newspaper. The change was most noticeable on the editorial pages. National columnists were dropped except for random selection in the Sunday edition and local writers replaced them.

But in an effort to be more local the daily has instead has become quite yokel. Its editorial columns are now written by writers with small axes to grind.

In an effort to add an Indian opinion writer the paper resorted to using a writer who is more of a misogynist and religious fanatic than one who would express the political and spiritual views of Native Americans. In other words, mudslinging gossipers now dominate its opinion pages.

But this sudden transition by the daily newspaper seems to fuel the aspirations of its new competitor.

If the letters to the editor in the daily are to be taken seriously more people than not are unhappy with the drastic changes.

They relied upon it for national columnists and national news for so many years. In fact, the results of a local basketball game are more likely to make its front page than dramatic developments in the war in Iraq.

Although I am local, an American Indian born and raised on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, my weekly columns are banned from the Rapid City Journal because I have been one of its the most vocal critics. I must add here that the new Rapid City Weekly does carry my nationally syndicated column.

Tom Lawrence, a native of Brookings, spent many of his newspaper years working for newspapers in Montana. He was offered the job of editor of the new weekly and since he really missed living in South Dakota, he jumped at the opportunity.

"The company had been looking at Rapid City for years. It has owned the Black Hills Pioneer and other publications in the area since 1947 and wanted to grow and serve the Rapid City community," Lawrence said.

"We cover Rapid City closely and the people and events that make this community happen. We like profiles, longer features, quick cop briefs; community briefs, art news and we offer local columns and edits. We try to offer a well-rounded look at our community and we encourage input from them," he concluded.

Lawrence admits that the paper needs to do more to cover the very large Indian community. "We need to do more and covering the Native American community is one of them," he said. Of course, so did the Rapid City Journal need to do more for the Native American community and over the years it lost most of its Indian readership to the newspaper I owned and founded, Indian Country Today. When my newspaper reached a weekly circulation of 24,000 it was just a little more than half the size of the Rapid City Journal. In fact, the weekly ICT was still growing in circulation when I sold it in 1998 and it had become a fierce competitor to the local daily for advertising dollars.

I started a newspaper because the local media was not covering issues important to the Indian people and I proved that a weekly could not only survive, but also thrive in an atmosphere where the local coverage of Indian issues was at best mediocre and at most unreliable.

Indian Country Today moved to New York State after I sold it and that left the door wide open for other weeklies to replace it. I hope Tom Lawrence and his weekly can fill that gap because a little honest competition usually helps to improve the quality of the dominant newspaper. Understanding that the Indian people are more than 13,000 strong in this community of 60,000 raises the bar in selecting news stories for any media outlet hoping to succeed in this community.

Just as a newspaper in a city with a large black or Hispanic population understands that it must cater to its large minority, not only as readers, but as consumers, any newspaper in Rapid City must understand that its largest minority population is Indian and behave accordingly.

The "New Kid in Town" is headed into its second year and has caused the local daily to do a drastic about face. I suppose you could call that good news.

the funeral services at the Veteran's gym.

Many Lakota people would not be where they are today if not for Chief Iron Shell, who was an educator for most of his life. As a coach and administrator, he touched the lives of many Indian students in this region. He worked tirelessly to keep Indian students in school. Many high school graduates who stayed in school to attain their diploma would not have done so if not for him. Nowadays we have non-Indians running our "Indian" school and I believe that is the root cause as to why many of our Lakota students choose to drop out of high school.

In my eyes, the "old gym" belongs to Chief Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. as much as it belongs to the Indian students of SFIS. One of my male cousins summed it up when he stated that Coach Iron Shell "used to rock that house." Many people remember the outstanding basketball team that Iron Shell coached in the 1970's. Fans would pack that gymnasium to see the St. Francis Warriors play.

At the funeral many people spoke about Iron Shell's life. Lionel Bordeaux stated that the Lakota Veteran's gym is "like a shrine to Calvin, he built a monument here." In addition, Ned Metcalf stated that Iron Shell "put St. Francis on the map and was the best coach in the history of St. Francis."

Furthermore, our ancestors gave their very lives so the Lakota people would be provided for when the reservation system was established. Chief Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. was a direct descendent of Iron Shell, who was the first to sign his mark to the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868.

The Treaty of 1868 paved the way for the Lakota people to survive. Most of the funding that currently trickles down to the reservations and Tribal governments can be traced back to the provisions made in the Treaty of 1868.

Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc. is a tribally-chartered organization. This means they receive funding through the name of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe to operate St. Francis Indian School. Thus, SFIS would not be in operation if not for the Treaty of 1868 and the blood our Itancan shed to ensure our survival.

In closing, I learned that the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Education Committee recently voted to revoke the charter of Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc.

I also learned that the current Tribal Council would not go with the recommendation. This is an election year on the Rosebud and some politicians have already begun campaigning.

There are many things wrong at SFIS. Just ask any member of the Education Committee how many complaints they have received in the past year. If the Tribal Council continues to cater to the non-Indians at the helm of tribally chartered entities perhaps we should elect people who are not afraid to do what needs to be done to stop the ongoing atrocities occurring daily at St. Francis Indian School.

Inmates need help with letter writing campaign

Dear Editor:

This letter is our campaign to have our immediate family members spiritually and culturally returned to attending our Pow Wows in both prisons of Sioux Falls by June of 2007.

Please join us. This has to be a massive campaign and we need the help of our immediate family members, our Tribal/Prison Liaisons, our Tribal Councils, our Spiritual Leaders, our supporters and all of our people in the Northern Plains Our immediate family members were removed from attending Pow Wows in 1995 by the prisons of Sioux Falls.

We came to prison as punishment. We didn't come here to be punished. The respectful participation of all of our immediate family members in all of our Pow Wows has always been the central force of our lives in any situation and to deny us this right in prison is a direct form of discrimination against all of our people.

More security cameras can be installed in the gymnasiums of both prisons, where we have our Pow Wows, and more security measures can be implemented for the return of our immediate family members to our Pow Wows.

We can't keep having Pow Wows in our visiting rooms. This only divides us and creates a lot of hardship and anger. Those of us with immediate family members on our visiting lists get to go to these Pow Wows. Those of us who have anyone on our visiting lists must stay back and go without.

The visiting rooms are way too small of an area for our Pow Wows and it is a total disrespect against our natural laws and customs to continue having our Pow Wows in such confined places.

Our extended family members like our grandfathers, grandmothers, uncles, aunts, brother-in-laws, sister-in-laws, nephews, nieces, cousins, and grandchildren are allowed to come in for our Pow Wows. Why not our immediate family members?

We request that letters be written to Tim Reisch, Secretary of Corrections, and Warden Doug Weber. Ask them to return our immediate family members by June of 2007.

Tim Reisch, Secretary of Corrections, 3200 East Highway 34, 500 East Capitol Avenue, Pierre, SD, 57501-5070.

Warden Doug Weber, Department of Corrections, South Dakota State Penitentiary, PIO Box 5911, Sioux Falls, SD, 57117-5911.

Northern Perspectives

Sticking to Lakota language

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I often discuss potential editorial column 'material' with Amanda and with her experience, she is quite good at suggesting what topics might serve well as opinion pieces. I like to read 'guest editorials' whenever they are submitted for consideration, as it is interesting to read what others think.

I sincerely believe that each one of us possesses a number of insights about a variety of topics that have some bearing on Lakota people. Even routine perspectives, things that people see that we don't can be fascinating. Writing has been fun for me and maybe that's reason enough to do anything.

I realized after listening to some feedback that discussing and reflecting upon the Lakota language is something that is of great interest to many of our Lakota readers as well as those who have a casual interest.

I need to stick to more discussion of the form, content, and nuances of the language as it is something I can see from my vantage point. I was fortunate and didn't even know it that I could be good with words. I didn't really take time to nurture that skill until later in life. It's the same with Lakota for me, as a good student of Lakota I can assess, grasp, and use aspects of the language.

I have some good friends, who are very good Lakota speakers and I often refer to them for advice about a particular word that I might want to know the evolution of or it's particular meaning.

Also, when we listen to Lakota we have to be able to listen to the whole context or the setting of an unfamiliar word if we want to figure out the word for ourselves.

There are many settings in which we can gather words, like when someone says a prayer meal, a prayer that is said before a meeting, or when an elder will get up and discusses the reason for a particular get to together.

Some of that is becoming less and less, but we can still go to some community meetings and listen to the proceedings and hear the issues discussed predominantly in Lakota.

Lakota is very much "situational" as they say in wasicu. If you take part in the inipi there is a certain spiritual language that is often heard and the more you listen, the more familiar you become with language in that setting.

I listen to Ben Black Bear, Jr. on KINI in the morning and at noon, when he reads translations of the bible. The language is obviously specific to that biblical setting and there is much to learn there, also. Just as an example, I heard him use to term can ici bage and my spelling may be just a bit off, but I know from the words in the sentence that it means the joining of wood against each other to make a cross that is the symbol of Christianity.

When I discuss language, I always have to defer or acknowledge the elders on the Rosebud who obviously know more than I do. I also acknowledge my colleagues in Lakota Studies at SGU, because I recognize their expertise in Lakota. With their aptitude, they don't have to go through the private study that I have to in order learn all about Lakota, they just simply live it and use it daily.

Language development in most every language is a highly complex function.

I remember reading about language development in infants and I believe it said that infants can distinguish very tiny differences in their native language even at their age. And, by the time they are 5-6 years old, children may have learned a large part of the vocabulary they will use in their daily lives. I can believe that since most of us don't use the multi-syllable words that we see written anyway.

I sent an email before the holidays to Howard Bad Hand who lives in Taos, N.M. and asked him to describe for me the manner in which the term canli opagi should be used. I truly wanted to know because I know the term, but didn't know if it was the act of loading the pipe or if it was giving the pipe to someone. I didn't get his permission to use his response, but will just one sentence in his response. He wrote, "Tohanl canli iyacu nahan canunpa el oyakiksu, nan hehanl canunpa ki tuwa yak'u nan he nunpapi hanta nas, he tuwe ki opagi yak'u keyapi."

Howard's response was that "Whenever you take a pipe and fill it with tobacco and give it to someone that is point at which you have accomplished the act of canli obage. Therefore, we see that the term includes both the act of filling a pipe with tobacco and presenting to another.

There are so many fascinating and creative things about the Lakota language, that friends like Howard and Francis White Bird, Pat and others know that instead of sitting back and listening like we are supposed to do, I find myself being somewhat of a nuisance and simply asking right out what they mean.

I guess I need to do that for my own learning as the language is forever changing and in some settings we see it slowly being used less and less.

For those who are truly adept at it, it is a gift, and for those who are good students of the language I think we have a gift also for seeing what we see and can help to authenticate and translate it for others.

Perhaps, that's where the term iyeska can be applied. But, God forbid if someone calls you i wasci in Lakota.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

We must accept facts about own life

Dear Editor:

How thankful I am today, to know that all my past failures were necessary for me to be where I am now. Through much pain came experience and, in suffering, I became obedient. When I sought God, as I understand him, he shared his treasured gifts. Through experience and obedience, growth started, followed by gratitude. Yes! Then came peace of mind, as I started living a sober and drug free life style.

In God's economy, nothing is wasted.Through failure, I learned a lesson in humility which is probably needed, though it was very painful at times. I've learned a valuable lesson. This lesson is about change, changing my friends, changing where I live, changing the kind of girls I go out with. I no longer date girls who use alcohol or drugs.

We must be strong within ourselves and make all of our dreams become a reality.

We are all functioning at a small fraction of our capacity to live fully in its total meaning of loving, caring, creating and adventuring. Consequently, the actualizing of our potential can become the most exciting adventure of our lifetime.

Today, I am a victim of my own consequences, after five years, I am no longer in a relationship with the love of my life due to alcohol and drugs.

In my next relationship this tragedy will never occur again, never. Men have often become victims by seeing themselves as saviors.

We forgot that we have needs too. We men have often become victims by seeing themselves as saviors.

We forgot that we have needs too.

We thought if we gave enough, our needs would eventually be met. In the process we became great controllers, not for the sake of power, but to make everything okay. We turn ourselves inside out in make our spouses happy or to please our children or kola's. But being a savior is disrespectful role to play.

When people became angry with us for it, we absorbed their anger and felt misunderstood.

No relationship is healthy for either person if one is a victim. Suppose you're in a relationship and your spouse is addicted to either alcohol or drugs. Believe me, that addicted individual would soon become abusive, abusive to their spouse or kids. It is much healthier to be in a relationship where alcohol or drugs are not the focal point of interest on payday, and in many cases especially on the Rez on grant check day.

Remember an addicted individual's drug of choice would always come first in any relationship.

In short, don't start a relationship with an alcoholic or drug user, or both. The relationship will only end in disaster and even death…. I'm almost positive that a female would not be in a relationship with an alcoholic if that alcoholic beats her whenever he got drunk, would she?

By accepting these facts in our own lives, we can mature into feelings of joy and pleasure alongside our grief.

Every individual has to struggle with their unique set of circumstances, even if they are not fair.

Fairness is not an issue. Reality is what we have to deal with.

Only, then, you can say with confidence; I will accept life on its own terms and rejoice in it.

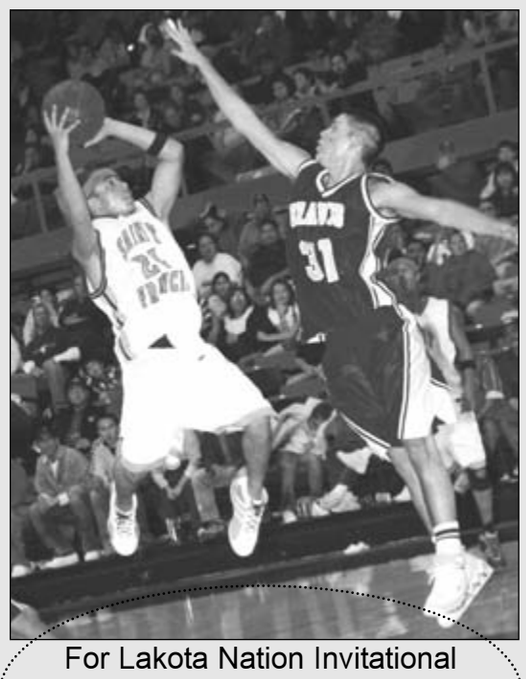
Pine Ridge woman pleads guilty in assault

RAPID CITY - Jacklyn Short Bull, 25, admitted last month in federal court in Rapid City that she jerked the wheel of a car she was riding in, causing it to hit Kevin Short Bull.

The two had been arguing a short time earlier, and the woman intended to scare the victim, according to court documents.

The victim suffered fractures to his pelvis, shoulder and chest bones and several ribs, as well as multiple spinal injuries.

The incident occurred June 2, and Short Bull was indicted in November for assault resulting in serious bodily injury and assault with a dangerous weapon. She pleaded guilty to the first charge and had the second dismissed.



Short Bull faces up to 10 years in prison at a March 12 sentencing hearing, the U.S. Attorney's office said.

Meade County considers zoning for Bear Butte and Ellsworth

STURGIS (AP) - Meade County officials are considering special zoning to protect Ellsworth Air Force Base and the area around Bear Butte.

County commissioners have tried to establish zoning in the past, but they failed because of strong opposition. A new state law allows special zoning areas of at least five square miles.

Meade County Equalization Director Kirk Chaffee said Ellsworth needs to be protected to secure the future of the air base. A special one-mile zone on either side of the runway would ensure that the area doesn't become too populated, he said.

Bear Butte is being considered for special zoning because the peak is sacred to American Indian tribes, and they're upset about encroachment by campgrounds and concerts that operate during the Sturgis motorcycle rally.

Elders mentors nuture Rapid City students

RAPID CITY (AP) - Gertrude Hutchinsons gentle touch on a shoulder was all it took to bring Heath Peneauxs attention back to his teacher's civics lesson.

After sharing a brief, hushed conversation with Peneaux, Hutchinson, an elder mentor in Central High Schools Lakolkiciyapi classroom (pronounced la-coal-key-chee-ya-pee), moved on to watch other students work while the teacher, Robert Cook, continued his lesson.

Looking down at blank notebooks, Richard Gerry, 75, whispered to a pair of students, ``You need to take notes.''

During a closing quiz, Lucille Runsafter, another elder mentor, stood in front of a cluster of students reminding them not to look at each others papers.

Now in its fourth year, the Lakolkiciyapi Room targets incoming freshmen identified as low achieving but with higher abilities. Primarily American Indians, the students spend half of each day for one semester in the classroom for their core classes (English, social studies, science and math). The programs goal is to improve student attendance and reduce drop-out rates by giving them the advantage of a smaller classroom experience in the large high school and introducing elements of Lakota culture.

Last spring, an elder-mentor program was introduced in the classroom as another method to help students form a connection with school.

About 12 percent of the Rapid City School Districts 13,000 students are Indian, but only about one-fourth of the 242 students who started the ninth grade four years ago will graduate from high school this spring, according to the Red Stone Education Group. Consultants John Haas and Mitchell Stone are supervising the districts office of Indian Education.

About 17 percent of Central High Schools 2,200 students are American Indian.

Mentoring was one of the first areas examined as an intervention to help keep kids in school, Stone said.

``Its so simple,'' Haas said.

Theres a common misperception that todays kids have lost their values and strayed from their families, but that isnt true when it comes to elders, he said.

``No matter what race, kids always respect elders,'' he said. The mentors have a calming effect on the classroom and develop bonds with the students.

The program was originally intended to build out-of-school relationships, but it is working effectively in the classroom, Stone said. In fact, teachers in other classrooms at Central and other schools in the district are all clamoring for mentors.

``We could use 50 more,'' Stone said.

Centrals principal Pat Jones is pleased with the program.

The people that we have here now are wonderful mentors to the students,'' Jones said. ``They're very positive role models, and they are very serious about our kids getting an education.''

Jones said that having the mentors in the school makes a difference for the entire school.

``They come down and eat lunch in the commons, and theyll stand outside after school and help keep an eye on things,'' he said.

The mentors, who are retirees, spend as much time as they can in the classroom. They receive a small, tax-free stipend that does not interfere with their Social Security.

``Its really just gas money,'' Stone said.

Gerry spends about four hours each morning at Central.

``Its about the best thing I ever did in my life,'' Gerry, a retired construction and steel worker, said. His image as a grandfather is very important. The kids pay attention when he tells them to behave, he said.

``They say, Yes, grandpa,'' Gerry said with a chuckle. ``Im the grandfather of the class.''

Hutchinson and Runsafter visit the afternoon class two to three times a week.

``Theyre our uncis (grandmothers),'' Lisa Good Iron said. ``They give us advice and tell us what not to do. It helps to have them here.''

``They want us to get our work done and hand it in on time,'' Heath said. ``They give good advice and help us and stuff like that.''

A solid family or even a grandmother is something many of the students in the class lack, the elders said.

Runsafter said the students need someone to set expectations for them.

`Its very important,'' she said.

``The power of the grandparent is not something to take lightly. They are very good at what they do, and theyre very good for our kids,'' Jones said.

Gerry would like to see more retirees become involved in the program and discover the pleasure he has found in working with the students.

``If we get enough people interested that love children and being around them and would sacrifice their free time. ... We need more people. Its real important for the kids,'' Gerry said.

Rosebud Shootout:

Red Cloud wins over Santee, Wall, still honorable mention

Mustangs down Clark at Pheasant Shoot out

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

REDFIELD/MISSION - Last spring Little Wound lost to Clark in the first round of the 2006 South Dakota State A boy's basketball tournament in Sioux Falls, Saturday in Redfield at the Pheasant Shootout, the Mustangs reaped a little revenge knocking off the Clark Comets 86-77 to push their record to 8-0 and keep their number two ranking in the state.

Little Wound hit the court hard leading Clark 18-10 at the first quarter break; the Mustangs took it up to a ten point 40-30 lead by the half in an up-tempo first half. The Comets closed the gap in the third, down by six after three but the Mustangs made it a nine point win as Rich Big Boy led the way for the Mustangs inside with 25 points, Brice Hornbeck added 24 and TJ McCauley chipped in 20. McCauley's total included two three's while Hornbeck added one and Devon Lebeau helped with two three's and 13 points. Taylor Welk led Clark with 34, Trent DesLauriers and Derek Brown helped with 17 points a piece.

"It was a good team effort as we had balanced scoring with four in double figures and Big Boy had a strong game inside," said Jamie Feather Earring, Little Wound coach, "it was good to get a solid road win against Clark, it helps to prepare us for competition down the road, for districts, regionals and hopefully state again, Clark has a very solid program."

Little Wound is 8-0 now and hosts Pine Ridge on Friday and Red Cloud on Thursday, Jan. 18, a game originally set for the 16 but moved because of a problem with the officials. Clark is now 6-3 after beating Webster on Tuesday and will host Castlewood on Tuesday.

Red Cloud knocks off Santee, Wall for 7-1 record

Red Cloud rolled into the Rosebud Shootout on Saturday with 14 players in uniform and found Santee with just five players making the trip from Nebraska; the Crusaders did not let the lack of Warriors deter them from playing every player on the bench and running off a 92-58 win over Santee.

Christian McGhee, a junior point guard for the Crusaders hit for 19 points while leading five Red Cloud players in double figures; Lester Gotheridge hit for 14, David Giago added 13, Billy Scott helped with 11 and Brier Iron Cloud chipped in 10.

"We play an up-tempo game on offense with a trapping defense and regularly get 10 players on the floor," said head coach, Matt Rama, "we're just trying to get a little better each game as we develop and get ready for districts, regionals and state."

Santee's "Iron Five" were led by Chris Hand Boy's 19 points; he was helped by Mark Henry's 17 and Troy Saunsoci'as 14. Santee is now 6-3.

Red Cloud opened up with 33 points in the first quarter as McGhee litg the nets up with 13 points including three three's, Gotherixcge added eight and Scott helped with five in the quarter. The Crusaders relaxed a bit in the second as the bench came in and scored 14 of the team's 21 points in the second quarter.

On Monday, Red Cloud hosted Wall and with another team effort, 11 different players helped with the scoring as the Crusaders reeled off a 93-58 win.

Billy Scott led all scorers with 19 points and four steals, McGhee, Gotheridge and Iron Cloud all added 13 points while McGhee added seven assists, Gotheridge had seven rebounds and four blocked shots and Iron Cloud chipped in five assists. Carl Swallow, a freshman, came off the bench to dish out eight assists while Mike Twiss, a sophomore also had seven rebounds and added eight points.

Red Cloud once again hit the floor running opening up a 27-6 first quarter lead and cranking it up to 56-28 at the half. Red Cloud is averaging 83 points a game while holding their opponents to an average of 56 points a game. With a win over the Eagles, Red Cloud has moved their record to 7-1, still receives honorable mention points in the top ten poll and will hosts Winner on Friday and Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Saturday.

Todd County, Pine Ridge, South Central grab Rosebud Shootout wins

MISSION - Todd County used a 21-2 run in the third quarter to break open a close game against St. Francis Saturday in the Rosebud Shootout in Mission and went on to win their sixth game of the year 69-59 over the Warriors. Vernie Menard led the way with 21 points, Mark DuBray added 16 and Steve Antoine added 14. JJ Arcoren led the Warriors with 28 while Travis Spotted war Bonnett helped with 13.

Down by one at the half to Crow Creek, Pine Ridge pulled out a two point 52-50 win over the Chieftains on Saturday. John Provost led the way with 13 points, Oris Morrison chipped in 12, Austin Red Shirt added 11 and Michael Jack hit for 10. Tony St. John led Crow Creek with 15 and James Drapeau helped with 10. Pine Ridge is now 7-3 and travels to Little Wound on Friday and hosts Lead-Deadwood on Monday.

South Central downed Crazy Horse 68-40 as Tyson Red Elk led the Chiefs with 12 points. Crazy Horse is now 1-5, travels to Oelrichs on Thursday and hosts Marty on Tuesday.

Lakota Sioux mourn a son, pray for Eddy - a 'Fiery Star'

Nearly a year after brother dies in Iraq, only sibling chooses to go back to war

KYLE - The sweat lodge started just after midnight, with a nightmare that had already come true.

On a freezing, overcast night in the Badlands, a sun-bleached buffalo skull lay near the door of the small domed shelter supported by willow branches, covered by a heavy tarp. The Lakota Sioux man closed the flap on the door, leaving them all in deep darkness, except for the pulsing glow of the orange rocks sprinkled with sage.

Clad only in a pair of shorts, Marlin Under Baggage poured water on the rocks, filling the lodge with a pungent, steamy heat that all of them could taste.

"Before Brett left for Iraq, he told me he had a dream that he was going to be shot," Under Baggage said. "He was scared. He didn't think he was coming back.

"Still, he went.

"That is courage. That is bravery."

Ten months earlier, the body of 22-year-old Marine Cpl. Brett Lundstrom, the first Oglala Lakota Sioux service member killed in Iraq, was welcomed home a few miles away.

It was only the beginning.

In the Lakota tradition, mourning takes at least a year, as the spirit of the dead watches over those who grieve on its journey to the other side, where tradition holds that the dead will be reunited with their ancestors.

Every week since then, they've come to the sweat lodge, to continue the journey - for Cpl. Lundstrom, and for those left behind.

"He also worried about his little brother," Under Baggage said to the darkness. "He worried."

A few miles away, Brett Lundstrom's only sibling arrived on the reservation from his own tour in Iraq.

Within months, 22-year-old Army Spc. Eddy Lundstrom could be headed back into battle.

Inside the sweat lodge, the drumbeat began.

Underneath the tarp, the steam again enveloped the darkness, soaking the Lakota people, blasting them with air so hot that some bent over to breathe the cooler air near the dirt floor.

As sweat dripped from their skin and drenched their hair, a sacred pipe filled with tobacco came around, along with the prayers.

"I want to pray for Brett, and for Eddy. I want to pray for the warriors," Glorianna Cordova said. "I also want to pray for all the Iraqi people who have died. All the children."

The prayers continued, followed by traditional Lakota songs. Songs of healing, songs of purification.

Nine months before, many of them stayed awake for 42 hours straight during the wake for Brett Lundstrom. Now, as they welcomed home his brother, it neared 2 a.m.

"One more song," George Apple said, as he picked up his drum.

"I want to sing a song for the soldiers."

Premonition about a phone message

On the night of Jan. 7, Doyla Lundstrom navigated the dark roads of South Dakota, back into cell-phone range, where her phone flashed with a message.

Since she was driving, she asked her fiancé, John Hauk, to check the call. It was a friend, saying that a neighbor was trying to get in touch with her.

She asked Hauk to call the neighbor. The woman told him that she wanted to speak to Doyla, but it could wait until she got home.

During her sons' deployments, Doyla would pause at the stop sign near her house, peering around to the street, looking for vehicles that didn't belong. Each night the chaplain wasn't at her door, she went to sleep saying, "That was a good day."

As she drove, she asked for the phone, to call the neighbor back.

"Did my house burn down?" she asked the neighbor. "Is there a problem with the dog?"

No, the neighbor told her. None of that. There was something she need-

RST Court's Judge Sully contributes to nationwide report on juvenile crime and substance abuse

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Sioux Tribe Children's Court Judge Janel Sully and a panel of judges from across the nation hope a recent report will influence the nation's judges to be proactive in helping youth in the criminal court system overcome their drug and alcohol problems.

Judge Sully was one of the select team of judges from across the nation that helped shape a nationwide report designed to help juvenile court systems facilitate substance abuse recovery in juvenile offenders in order to prevent a cycle of substance abuse and crime.

"We were attempting to educate judges in children's court on lessons we have already learned, so those judges that are new to the system, or that are being reassigned to work with children would not have to relearn what we have learned," Sully said.

Judge Janel Sully served on a panel of judges who worked on a national report to help youth in criminal court.

Sully and the RST Children's Court are way ahead of much of the nation in that they have already implemented many of the changes the report recommends.

"We already are using graduated sanctions and incorporated a lot of the ideas we came up with, most importantly, we have adopted the philosophy that every child with signs of alcohol or drug abuse needs early intervention and follow-up," Sully said.

Sully and the team of judges are part of the Reclaiming Futures program funded by The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. They issued their call to action as part of their jointly written monograph A Model for Judicial Leadership; Community Responses to Juvenile Substance Abuse. The report was published by the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges in its Juvenile and Family Court Journal, Summer 2006, Volume 57, Number 3. It can be read in its entirety at http://www.reclaimingfutures.org/resource.asp?rcid=5.

The group of judges hopes their recommendations will spark a change in the way juvenile crime is currently dealt with across the nation.

"Research shows that teens who use drugs and alcohol are more likely to end up in the justice system, where treatment services are often unavailable or uncoordinated," said Laura Nissen, Reclaiming Futures national program director. "We believe these young people deserve appropriate screening, treatment, care and community support, and that judges have the knowledge, influence and obligation to drive this change."

The judicial monograph outlines practical steps for other judges to follow to build

Kiyaska Waniyetu 'Midwinter' Wacipi Jan. 27 and 28 at LWHS gym

KYLE - The 20th Annual Kiyaska Wacipi has been set for Jan. 27 and 28 this year, said Marcell Bull Bear, one of the coordinators. The event is still in the planning stages and more information will be released next week.

A meeting will be held Jan. 14 at Marcell's place for more planning and those interested may attend.

The annual wacipi is held at Kyle at the Little Wound School and is a community celebration.

The wacipi is usually held earlier in the month for New Years but has been changed to a mid winter powwow due to the construction of the new gym floor at the high school.

There are dance specials in juniors, teens and adults categories with feeds on both days.

For more information call Bull Bear at 455-2690.

New Year's baby to be honored

ed to talk to her about, the neighbor said, but it could wait until she got home.

Doyla Lundstrom's first language is Lakota. She grew up on the reservation, without a mother, with a father who drank much of the time. She left the reservation as a teenager, for a foster home. She married a man from the nearby Rosebud reservation who would become a Marine, and a life that took her away from the reservation.

For much of the family's life, it was just Doyla and the two boys, as their father was off on officer training and deployments to Cuba and the Persian Gulf. When he arrived home, they would go on family trips to historic battlefields, where the boys memorized the history and made plans to join it.

Brett had always said he wanted to be a Marine - when he was a teenager, he would tell his friends, "I will die for you."

On Sept. 11, 2001, the family lived 35 miles from ground zero, and his mother knew it wouldn't be long. She was able to convince him to go to college for a year, but he eventually enlisted, followed not long afterward by his brother.

Even after Brett returned home from boot camp, she still called him by his nickname "Brettlee." Eddy was always "Babyson."

Brett was the outgoing big brother, who called his mother three or four times a day, and they talked like teenagers, sharing everything. Eddy was always the quiet one, more like his father, introspective.

"They're both awesome kids," she said. "Awesome in their own way."

In one family photo, Eddy sits on a chair in his Army uniform. Everyone says he looks exactly like his grandfather, who fought in the Army in Korea. The family tradition of warriors goes back generations, to famed Lakota Chief Red Cloud.

'Which one was it?'

As she drove home that night, she asked her fiancé to call the neighbor one more time. She couldn't wait.

"Call her back and ask her if the chaplain came to the door," she said.

By then, boys throughout the country called Doyla Lundstrom "Mom."

Her home was always open to the boys' friends, who would use the home, sometimes as party central - with Doyla watching over them - sometimes as a refuge to escape their own problems. A home away from home.

"I think maybe it has something to do with me not having a mother when I was growing up - I may have overcompensated with my kids," she said. "I always wanted to be there for them."

Her fiancé dialed the phone, and asked the neighbor. "Did the chaplain come to the door?"

She knew by Hauk's expression what was said on the other end of the line.

She pulled the car over, took the phone and called Ed Lundstrom Sr., her former husband and the boys' father, who lives in Detroit. The Marines had already come to his door.

When he answered the phone, he was crying, choking on the words.

"Which one was it?" she asked.

She remembers screaming into the telephone, telling him to calm down.

"Which one was it!"

For what seemed like several minutes, he couldn't speak.

"That was the worst of it all, right there," she said, "those moments of not knowing which one it was."

Best translation is 'Fiery Star'

Late last month, on the morning after the sweat lodge on the Pine Ridge Reservation, Wicahci Kailehya awoke wrapped in his name.

During the three-day wake for Brett Lundstrom 10 months earlier, the two brothers were bestowed with their official Lakota names - one of them, posthumously. The man in the casket was called Wanbli Ishnala, or "Lone Eagle." His brother was dubbed Wicahci Kailehya.

"It can be translated as 'Shining Star' or 'Fiery Star,' " his mother said. "I like 'Fiery Star.' "

After his return from Iraq, she gave him a traditional native star quilt.

On the quilt, yellow diamonds burst from a night-black sky.

"He loved it," she said. "When I woke him up this morning, he was wrapped in it."

Inside the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort, the traditional drum circle began again.

Only three weeks after Eddy returned from Iraq, the family had returned to the reservation to help dedicate a meeting room at the motel in Brett's honor.

Among those seated at the dedication table, one of the reservation's enforcement rangers bowed his head. In 2003, Francis Jamie Big Crow served as an escort for Lori Piestewa, the first female American Indian killed in the war. Then, in January, he rode his horse in front of a clapboard wagon carrying the casket of Brett Lundstrom.

"It was a tremendously great honor to be on horseback - especially as a horse nation," he said, then had to pause. "Gosh, I can feel it right now, just saying this."

On the reservation, every day is Veterans Day.

American Indians have the highest enlistment rate per capita of any race. According to icasualties.org, 29 "American Indians and Alaska Natives" have died in Iraq.

Inside Little Wound High School in nearby Kyle, they still keep the pictures of each member of the reservation who has served in Iraq and Afghanistan. A group of mothers has set up a support group. Now the fathers are starting to come, too.

The reservation - set in the second-poorest county in the country - grapples with unemployment, alcoholism and a methamphetamine problem, which gnaws at the tribe from the inside out.

"Brett's death wasn't a tragedy. It was a huge loss, but it wasn't tragic," said his uncle, Marlin Under Baggage. "Last weekend, three young people lost their lives here - one in an accident, one in a stabbing and one from an overdose. Those are the tragedies."

In a place only a few miles from the Wounded Knee massacre more than a century ago, many on the reservation openly question the cost of the current war - in billions of dollars and lives lost - while still remembering the battles that left them on the reservation.

"You go back and look at acts of terrorism. This country committed the first act of terrorism - on the Lakota people. At Wounded Knee," Big Crow said. "People say 'Remember 9/11.' I wish they would also remember 1890. Wounded Knee. Because Native American people were lost."

Still, they continue to serve. At last count, more than 60 Lakota from Pine Ridge were overseas. Recently, a tribe member from Rosebud returned after being shot by a sniper, but survived.

"This is for all of the things all of them have done," Ed Lundstrom Sr. said, of the room's dedication to his son. "Brett is the face of it, but this is for all of them. This is for all of the servicemen and women."

The drum circle played a song written for Brett Lundstrom by a Denver-based drum group called Good Feather - the same group that played at his burial service at Fort Logan National Cemetery.

Wanbli Ishnala, the song is called, Lone Eagle.

After the ceremony, Brett's grandfather, Birgil Kills Straight, looked around the room.

"It's not just four walls anymore," he said. "It seemed sterile to this point. And then it took on a life."

A few minutes later, Eddy and his best friend, Frankie Lugo, stepped outside for a cigarette.

"The songs," Lugo said, his eyes red. "That's what gets me every time, those songs.

"I wish I could understand the words.

"Did you understand it?" he asked Eddy.

The young soldier stared out at the brown hills.

"I understood Wanbli Ishnala, " Eddy said.

'You have to do what you have to do'

Later that night, inside a pizza restaurant in Rapid City, more than an hour's drive from the reservation, Eddy looked up at the television screen at a commercial for Flags of Our Fathers, the movie about the Marines who hoisted the U.S. flag at Iwo Jima during World War II.

"I read the book. I really liked it," he said quietly.

"It's sad what happened to the Indian, though."

Long before the book or the movie, most everyone around here knew the story of Ira Hayes, a Pima Indian who helped raise the flag on Mount Suribachi. He returned home a hero, but the quiet, shy man struggled with the attention. Hayes fell into alcoholism and died at 32.

Inside the restaurant, Frankie Lugo watched his best friend as Eddy wound his way over.

"Think of it. Every time he's introduced, people say, 'This is Eddy, he just got back from Iraq. His brother died over there,' " Lugo said. " 'This is Eddy, he just got back from Iraq. His brother died over there.' "

"I don't think he should have to be reminded all the damn time."

As the family prepared to leave the restaurant for a pool hall several blocks away, a snowstorm kicked up, and the family decided to drive.

Eddy shook off the idea, insisting on walking through the storm.

"But you have to walk across a major road," Lugo said.

"I'm not afraid of a few cars," he said. "They don't blow up over here."

By the time the Lundstrom family made it into the smoky haze of the pool hall, Eddy was already there, but he had a large bloody gash on the palm of his hand.

"I had to jump over a fence," he said. "It's no problem, though - all you have to do is cauterize the wound. In Iraq, you have to do what you have to do."

He took the cigarette from his mouth and mashed it into his palm, searing the wound, without flinching.

He then stuck the cigarette back in his mouth.

Sometimes, Eddy will order an extra beer and leave it on the counter without touching it. For his brother.

When people in the bar learned who Eddy was - which did not take long - they gathered around his table. When they found out that his new unit is scheduled to leave for Afghanistan within the next several months, their pride mixed with anger.

"Don't go back, man. Don't go back," said Alfred Leftwich. "We can only lose one Lakota per family. Only one."

"Somebody's gotta go," Eddy said. "Somebody's gotta go."

He took a sip of his beer.

"Don't worry about me," he said. "I got an angel watching over my shoulder.

"Yeah, I got an angel on my shoulder."

Bringing roses to Brett at Fort Logan

At the King Soopers on Sheridan Boulevard in Englewood, the cashiers recognize the soft face of the Lakota woman.

Inside the supermarket, the florist is one of the closest to Fort Logan National Cemetery.

"Every time I come down here I buy eight bouquets - one for all the Marines. Someone does it for Brett, so I do it for them," Doyla said as she gathered up the flowers. "We all just kind of take care of each other's kiddos."

Though many relatives at Pine Ridge wanted Brett buried there, Doyla knew her son always wanted to come to Colorado. When the Marines pulled up at her home in Black Hawk, S.D., she had already placed the house on the market. She recently moved to Broomfield, and she a collaborative model for change within their own juvenile justice systems. These steps include inviting and convening interested parties to participate; identifying the needs for youth services; achieving consensus; focusing on performance measures and outcomes; educating the judiciary and public; partnering with the community; and listening to youth.

The report concludes with 10 recommendations for judicial action, such as: judges must ensure youth in the system are screened and assessed; judges must be educated on the current state of practice in the substance abuse field; and judges must help identify or create positive pro-social influences for youth such as mentors, jobs or volunteer opportunities.

"This guide is written by judges and intended to be used by other judges, court administrators, government entities, community leaders and interested citizens," said Hon. Willard G. Martin, Jr., a judicial fellow for Reclaiming Futures and judge in the New Hampshire District Court and Family Division.

Reclaiming Futures is a $21 million initiative located in 10 communities including: Rosebud, S.D.; Anchorage, Ala.; Santa Cruz, Calif.; Chicago, Ill.; three counties in Eastern Kentucky; Marquette, Mich.; the state of New Hampshire; Dayton, Ohio; Portland, Ore.; and Seattle, Wash.

In its fourth year, early research indicates the program has significantly improved the coordination of juvenile justice and substance abuse treatment services in its 10 communities.

comes to the cemetery at least once a week.

Inside the supermarket, she turned to the red roses.

"I always bring Brett roses - a dozen red roses from me and a dozen from his brother, even though he was never here."

Two weeks ago, for the first time, his brother was there. He appeared from a different aisle in the supermarket, carrying two cans of Budweiser.

"I want to have a beer with my brother," he said.

The day after Eddy arrived from Iraq, his mother loaned him her cell phone to make a call. After speaking with a friend, he snapped the cell phone closed, and saw her screen saver: his brother's headstone at Fort Logan.

"He slammed the phone down and walked off," she said. "He said, 'I can't see that right now.' "

During the wake for his brother at Pine Ridge, Eddy spent much of his time alone, in the bleachers of the gymnasium at Little Wound High School, dressed in his combat fatigues.

According to the Department of Defense, any surviving sibling who has an immediate family member killed in action may request to be kept from further combat.

For Eddy, it was never an option.

"At the wake, grandmothers were hugging him, crying, saying, 'Don't go,' " his mother said. "He said, 'I'm going to go back.' He said, 'I have a job to finish, and I can't leave my buddies behind.' Of course, my thoughts were, 'What about your mom?' But I didn't say anything. I would have never said don't go, because I know that would have made it hard on him. I said, 'Dad and I understand.' "

Last month, after he arrived back from his tour in Iraq, Eddy was on a trip, driving by himself, when he saw an eagle from his car window.

"Mom," he told his mother later. "Brett was following me."

A rifle salute, 'Taps' and a shared beer

Inside Fort Logan National Cemetery, Doyla bent down and kissed her son's headstone. Then she laid out a picnic blanket.

Her niece placed the flowers on the graves of nearby Marines.

Eddy arrived and stood near his car for a few minutes before walking over. When the family first took him to the cemetery last month, he first refused to get out of the car. He eventually circled the grave, but he wouldn't look at it.

This time, he approached the grave slowly, staring mostly at the clean, gray backside of the headstone.

Finally, he walked around, looked at his brother's name and began to cry.

The silence was broken by the shots of a rifle salute from a nearby funeral. Moments later, Taps wafted through the cemetery.

Eddy drank half of his beer and poured the rest onto his brother's grave.

'All we can do is support him'

Near Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit, Eddy was assigned to a recovery team tasked with - among other things - cleaning up after the roadside bombs. He's told friends of working his way through the carnage of twisted metal and twisted bodies.

"He's been through hell and back," his mother said. "Well, I don't know if he's back yet."

She can't help thinking back to the words of his big brother.

"Brett was really scared for Eddy. He said, 'The Army doesn't train them like the Marines. He's not ready.' He said, 'I'll be all right - I'll be home in three months. It's Eddy you need to worry about.' "

Two weeks ago, she received a call in the middle of the night.

After spending weeks trying to hold his emotions, Eddy called from his bunk at Fort Sill, Okla., where he was alone, the first to return from leave.

"He said, 'Mom, I'm scared.' He was all alone and it was hitting him all at once," she said. "He talked about the nightmares. He told me what he was thinking."

He then described a place she recognized all too well.

"In the beginning, there was nothing, nothing that anybody could do for me. I wanted to die. Sometimes I think about it, and I still have those thoughts. That evil s-word (suicide) can creep into your thoughts," she said. "The pain was just so unbearable."

She heard the same worries in her son's voice. So she made a deal.

"I said, 'I know how you're feeling.' I said, 'You have to remember, I hung in there for you, and you've gotta hang in there for me.' I said, 'You're the reason I'm still alive.' "

Eddy's new unit is scheduled to leave for Afghanistan in five months.

"My first instinct was to get him out," she said. "But if he wants to go, then all we can do is support him again, be there for him."

Even though many in her own family argue against the Iraq war, she says she doesn't take a stand, other than to support her sons.

"I can't really blame anybody. Brett died doing what he wanted to do. He didn't want to die, but he was willing to die for us," she said. "He died doing what he was supposed to do. He died doing what they told him to do. That's what they do."

The tradition of the spirit journey

As Doyla packed up her things from South Dakota to move to Colorado, she found two coffee mugs she had planned to give to her sons.

"Happiness is . . . 'Iraq' in my rearview mirror," the inscription reads. She still hasn't opened the boxes of Brett's belongings that returned from Iraq. She had the Marines put them in the garage, with the word, "deceased" facing the wall.

According to Lakota tradition, she is supposed to burn all of his belongings, so his spirit doesn't return for them, to make it easier for the spirit to make the journey to the other side.

She can't do it.

"I still sleep with his shirt," she said. "Not every night now, but I still sleep with it sometimes. I just hold it like a pillow. It makes me feel better."

Tradition says that Brett's spirit can hear her sobbing, and feel her grief, and that it makes it more difficult for the spirit to make the journey to join his ancestors.

"Everyone keeps saying, be strong, don't cry," she said. "I guess you're supposed to be strong, but I'm not strong."

After she left the reservation, she followed Catholic traditions - both Eddy and Brett were altar boys - but she has recently fallen away from the church. A few months ago, she went through a healing ceremony at Pine Ridge - a ceremony that she says has helped her work through her grief more than any other.

"It's being torn between the way we believe and the way I grew up, the way I lived my life all these years," she said. "I find myself praying to God, and not Tunkashila, and that's where I still feel torn."

She stopped, and sniffled.

"It's basically the same person," she said of the two deities.

In January, she's scheduled to have another ceremony at Pine Ridge - one that signals the end of the official mourning period.

"I guess that I'm supposed to go through a 'wiping of the tears' ceremony at a year," she said.

"I won't be able to do it."

'Tonight will help us find that clarity'

Last Saturday, a nearly full moon rose over the Badlands, and a brilliant orange sunset stretched across the Pine Ridge reservation, painting the tarp on the tiny sweat lodge.

For hours, 24 rocks had heated in a bonfire, which still crackled as it slowly died.

Before returning to the sweat lodge, Doyla's friends and relatives gathered, giving thanks to the "grandpas" - the rocks that are reused for ceremonies. The grandpas, they say, were here before any of us and hold histories of their own. Still, sometimes the heat and water of the ceremony will crack them.

"In many ways, the rocks are like people," Glorianna Cordova said earlier. "You can only use them a certain amount of times before they break."

They had planned to hold a Wopila for Doyla - a ceremony where she would give thanks to the spirits for all the help they had given her through the process.

Instead, she had to wait, as she entered her "sacred time," her menstrual cycle, when tradition holds that her body's own regenerative power would interfere with the power of the spirits in the sweat lodge. Still, her family decided to hold a sweat lodge without her - until she could return for her Wopila ceremony - and send their thoughts through the steam.

In the heat of the "grandpas," the darkness once again enveloped them. They prayed for the ones left behind, and those whose journey have only begun.

For more than an hour, they prayed and sang, hoping to lend strength to the woman who waited at the nearby motel.

Afterward, draped in a towel, sweat still coating his body, Marlin Under Baggage looked into what remained of the fire, and thought of his nephew's spirit and his sister's tears.

"People mourn for themselves because they're left behind," he said. "If there is constant unhappiness, he hears that out there, and he wants to come back. It is supposed to be a joyous occasion, your birth and your death.

"Tonight will help us find that clarity, to work with it in a positive way."

Minutes later, once the sweat lodge was officially ended, the headlights of a car swept across the property. The woman with the soft face got out of her car, and stood on the ground where she grew up, the land she still knows in the dark.

As she walked into the cold night, Doyla wrapped herself in the warmth of the coat embroidered with a lone eagle, and looked up at the shining, fiery stars.

In the Lakota language, there is no word for "goodbye."

Hearing for slain Aquash against Graham delayed

By Carson Walker
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - A Canadian man charged with killing American Indian Movement activist Anna Mae Pictou Aquash earned at least a few more months of freedom by getting a judge to delay his latest hearing.

John Graham is on house arrest in Vancouver, British Columbia, and fighting extradition to South Dakota to stand trial for the 1975 slaying on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

At a court hearing this week, a judge with the British Columbia Court of Appeal granted a request from Graham's lawyer to postpone a hearing on his appeal until May 17. It had been scheduled for Jan. 29.

However, the judge did require Graham's lawyer to file paperwork by Feb. 28 outlining why he wants a judicial review of an earlier decision by a judge who ordered him to be committed for extradition.

If Graham's lawyer doesn't file that factum the U.S. equivalent of a written brief by the deadline, Graham must turn himself the next day and his bail would be revoked, said Lyse Cantin, spokeswoman for Department of Justice in Vancouver.

After that May hearing, a judge will decide whether the court's decision to extradite Graham will stand, though he could then appeal to the full Canadian Supreme Court, she said.

Another man charged with Aquash's killing, Fritz Arlo Looking Cloud, is serving a mandatory life prison sentence for a 2004 conviction in Rapid City of first-degree murder committed in the perpetration of a kidnapping.

A three-member federal appeals court has since upheld the conviction and denied his request for a rehearing.

Aquash's slaying on the Pine Ridge reservation came amid a series of bloody clashes between federal agents and AIM. She was among the Indians who occupied the village of Wounded Knee for 71 days in 1973.

Prosecutors said AIM leaders ordered Aquash's killing late in 1975 because they suspected she was a government informant. AIM leaders denied the accusation and blamed the government for her death.

June 12, 1983 - January 7, 2006

My beautiful son, Brett Lee.
It has already been 1 year since you left us to make your journey to the Spirit World.
Thank you for sacrificing your life for us. You are missed more than words can say.
A piece of me died with you that day in Iraq.
You are my hero, son.
I miss your phone calls,
your smile,
your laugh and your sense of humor.
I miss you and I look forward to meeting up with you one day.
The world is darker
with one more angel gone,
But you are home now.
Rest in Peace, My Baby
We love you !!!!

Local mentors honored, more mentors sought with When You Were 15 campaign

ROSEBUD - In January, National Mentoring Month, SGU Reclaiming Futures would like to thank all the mentors that have supported and encouraged the youth of the Rosebud Reservation and to encourage more of the public to consider ways they can contribute to the youth of our communities.

As part of National Mentoring Month, a new campaign called When You Were 15 is being unveiled on the Rosebud to encourage the public to seek out ways they can help young people achieve their full potential.

"By encouraging the public to think back to the time when they were 15 years old and how difficult those times could be, the radio and poster campaign should help more people realize that by simply keeping in touch and offering kind words to a teen they may be the deciding positive influence in their life," said Natasha D. Bordeaux, communications consultant for SGU Reclaiming Futures. The campaign originates from a Reclaiming Futures campaign in Oregon that has gone nationwide this month.

Reclaiming Futures has invited all tribal council members to lead the When You Were 15 radio campaign on KINI radio. "Our tribal leaders are the perfect representatives to encourage others to take an interest in the lives of our youth. Our tribal leadership have consistently acknowledged the importance of shaping today's youth into tomorrow's leaders. And sharing their personal experiences is just another way they can help our youth," Bordeaux said.

Each member will have an opportunity to share with their constituents, via radio recording, the person or people who positively influenced them when they were 15 years-old or so, and to encourage more people to reach out to our local youth in positive ways.

The goal is to recruit volunteers to mentor youth in the First Offenders Program, Wanbli Wiconi Tipi, Piya Mani Otipi Horsemanship Program, the Youth Wellness Program as well as to seek out other mentoring opportunities that exist outside of these public programs.

"A mentor is someone who cares for, encourages, supports, and guides another. You can become a mentor by simply being kind to someone already in your life. Talking to your teenage neighbor about how to earn money or how to balance a checkbook, or helping your niece or nephew with a school project are all ways to mentor," said Denise One Star, Outreach Coordinator for SGU Reclaiming Futures.

"You don't have to be perfect to be a mentor. You just have to care and be able to share that with the youth around you. If you can sing, speak Lakota, play piano, sew, bead, cook, fix a car, play basketball, play chess, catch a fish or tell a good story you may have something to offer the youth in your area," One Star said.

For more information on mentoring and volunteering contact Denise One Star with Reclaiming Futures at (605) 747-5269, or (605) 208-5269.

Reclaiming Futures would like to acknowledge the more than 75 local mentors who were nominated by several programs for their volunteer support of local youth. Organizer Marlies White Hat, director of Rosebud Reclaiming Futures Project, said the event was held "to show appreciation for the time these volunteers have given to share their life experience, skills, activities and words of encouragement with youth. Our youth need community mentors to become future leaders and these volunteers are wonderful mentors."

Native American Advocacy Program honored the following mentors: Steve Tamayo, Denise One Star, Gina Thompson, Charles Bull Bear, Denise Marshall and Earl Bullhead.

St. Francis community Youth honored the following mentors: Lynn Lefthand Bull, Tiffany Kills In Water, Edwin Young, Rita Kills In Water, Bernadine Kills In Water, Monica Whiting, Marie Edwards, Travis Eagle Deer and Russel Brave.

Sicangu Nation Employment and Training honored the following mentors: Rosalie Whirlwind Soldier, Homer Whirlwind Soldier, Roscoe Witt, PJ Witt, Tonya Whirlwind Soldier, Veterans Affairs (Orlando Morrison and Staff) US Forest Service (Dave McKee), Melody Herbert.

The 2006 North American Indigenous Games honored the following mentors: Gary Hacker, Mike One Star, Denise One Star, Tonya Whirlwind Soldier, Wopila Bad Hand, Connie Brushbreaker, Dave Brushbreaker, Tillie Black Bear, Buffy Grimshaw, Pete McCloskey, Julio Rodriquez, Lavera Brave, Sonny Farmer, Lisa Farmer, Neil Traversie, Jolene One Star, Willow Marshall, Totes Waln, Lino Spotted Elk, Lema Leader Charge, Cheryl Prue, Dana Marshall, Roger Crow Eagle, Calvin Iron Shell, Ursula Gabriel, Christine Valandra-Sully.

Dinner and door prizes were donated by the SGU Bison Program, Stadium Sports, Buches, All Stop, Family Dollar, Oyate Networking Project, Casey Family Program, SGU Bookstore and the RST Youth Wellness Court.

TCHS senior will serve as legislative aid

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - Her name is Katherine "Tootie" Herman and she seems to prefer using Tootie. The grand daughter of Gwen Herman and daughter of Teddi Rae Herman of Mission, Tootie left for Pierre on Sunday where she will serve as a legislative aid for two weeks. Her legislative name tag even says "Tootie." She is a senior at Todd County High School and was nominated by state Sen. Larry Lucas for the exciting opportunity.

The duties of the legislative aids are to answer phones, distribute legislative documents, do errands for legislators and assist in the legislative Post Office and attend committee meetings. They are reimbursed for living expenses, meals and housing. A page works either in the House of Representatives or Senate.

The young Sicangu tribal member has a distinguished academic record, thus far, and her role as a legislative aid will help her determine if she really does want to study political science when she attends the university next fall.

Apparently, another Sicangu high school student, Marie Short Bull, was also accepted as a legislative aid from the Rosebud reservation. She accompanied Tootie to Pierre on Sunday as they traveled to the capital city and met with officials who will acquaint them with their roles.

Grandmother, Gwen Herman, who is employed in the RST vice president's office also accompanied the two students and assisted in getting them situated. She noted that Tootie was greatly anticipating her experience. She said, "She was nervous about it because she didn't know what the legislative process is or any of the senators and representatives. It's a good experience, an honor. It will prepare her for political science. It will also give her an idea of what a legislative session is and what it means when a bill is introduced. I told her to pay attention. The next time she reads about a bill in the newspaper she will understand the process."

The students will receive a stipend for their work in Pierre; however, they had to pay their lodging and meal expenses first, as the stipend will be awarded at the end of their two week term. Having to pay upfront for those expenses appears to have the potential of creating a hardship on students. The daily rate of the stipend is set on the first day of the legislative session.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

My son has been having a tough time at school this season. He has been feeling down at times, more than usual over things that are going on as he tries to work toward some of his goals. Are these just obstacles? Will things get better for him as he struggles to work toward some of his goals in the near future?

Thank you!

Concerned

Dear Concerned:

Life can be that way. Some of what your son is going through can be avoided through disengagement. Other people's problems, noise, chaos and complaints are not your son's problem. He is young, and now is a very good time to learn how to be okay when everybody else seems not to be okay. People that are in chaos love to draw the rest of the world into their drama, anger, dissatisfaction, and unwarranted worry about the future.

This is a good time for him to learn how to have compassion, but not buy into other people's noise. Will Rogers said, "Most of the problems that I ever had in my life never happened." I find that a very large percentage of people spin their wheels, cry, whine, complain and generally forget to enjoy their life while they engage in problems that will never happen (I might lose my job, can't pay my rent, my husband/wife might could cheat on me….).

Your son's only problem is the worry he faces with other people's concern. It is a family trait and almost inherited behavior to worry about every body else and what they are doing.

He will be able to go through school very nicely. Although he does and will face some economic challenges he will make it. Another piece of advice: There is no such thing as "trying" to work towards some goals. There is only doing that - working towards goals. Everything one does on the path towards achieving personal recognition, rewards, success, love, etc. is part of that path and is not just a "try" but a "do and done." He is fine - quit worrying mom, you are not helping him by worrying, instead you are reinforcing his belief that he has something to worry about.

As proof of that, please check the last five things that both you and he were worrying about, you will find that all five things worked out, that there was no reason to worry after all, and that all worrying did was take away the enjoyment of living.

You're a good mom. He is fine. He will be successful. Don't get involved in his personal love life, help him as much as you can, and quit worrying.

Dear Anna,

I was going to ask you if my boyfriend is going out with some girl? Does he like my sis?

Does she likes him? Does he love me? Does he love me and does the boy I talk to on the phone like me?

Curious

Dear Curious:

WHAT? Does he love me or her? Do I love him or the guy on the phone? Does the guy on the phone love me or who? Who loves who?

Girl, please get a grip. Don't mistake teenage infatuation and sexual attraction for love. Your sister is flattered by his attention. The guy on the phone is interested to see if you are interested in maybe "hooking up," but not in a way that is love.

Your boyfriend likes you. He likes your sister okay too. He does not love either one of you.

How much do you know about hormones? What kind of education have you had concerning sex education? What do you really know about love?

Don't get too caught up in what is going on. The whole thing is that none of what you have asked me will make one bit of difference in six months. Within that time, you will have a new boyfriend, your sister will find someone else to like, and the guy on the phone/internet will be with another two or three girls.

Enjoy life, keep healthy, and don't mistake sexual energy as the basis for a sound relationship.

Dear Anna,

First of all I hope you had a Merry Christmas and a happy New Years!

I wrote you before and I believe everything you told me and trust your advice. I haven't got the book yet (reference: The Four Agreements) but I will try to remember next time I go to a book store. I've read other's questions and inquiries. So I'll just ask like they do.

Well I wanted to know if my mother is in a good place? I read what you said to someone about reincarnation. Has that happened with my mom? I was wondering if you know if she has visited me or my children? I have the feathers that were given to me and my sister's in my home. Is that right to keep my sister's feathers? I know were not supposed to do any bad things in the home with stuff like that but we drank on New Years? Is that bad? Sorry I really wish I knew our native ways. But I grew up in the church with my grandma.

Another question is about my sisters, will they eventually live a good life for their children? Do you see any blessings in their future? I wish I could win the lottery and help my whole family financially.

Now about my father, do you see him reuniting with us kids and our mother soon? How is he really doing? He writes letters, calls sometimes and never misses a holiday or birthday to send us something. He is doing a lot of good things and that tells me he's okay, but obviously he's in a situation where no one is really satisfied. That's why I ask how he is really doing?

This question I dread to hear the honest answer to but I want to know it. Let me tell you first that I have prayed to the Lord to give me strength for not letting my insecurities get the best of me. Here's my story: when me and my significant other first started dating, my cousin admitted to sleeping with him, to this day I have only spoken to her twice. She has cried to a few of our relatives about having sex with my boyfriend and I asked him the second I found out. He denied it, of course. That's where you come in, can you tell me once and for all if it's true? Please.

Another question is if he and one of his coworkers are flirting with each other? Does he like her? She is definitely his "type". I asked him and he said yes to all the questions. But I asked if he liked her and he said "No" because everyone in his eyes "have flaws". I just want to know if he is attracted and/or likes her?

Here is another question I didn't think of asking you until now. Has my significant other loved or cared for any other female besides me and his family? Also does he have children from anyone else? You may not answer that question, but I have a feeling he does and you know a woman's intuition. I have looked up girls on the net that he has been with, and see they have babies and no father, one of the girls has a daughter that looks almost like my daughter when she was born. So with that I definintely believe one of these days we will get a phone call, letter or knock on the door and it will be one of his children. Please can you answer that.

I always tell him that I love him more than he loves me, and he says he loves me more. But can you honestly tell me who loves who more? It's kind of a funny question but I can prove to him that I love him more. But who knows you may shock me and tell me he loves me more. Or maybe were equal.

Well I can tell you have a strong spirit. I really appreciate you for listening to my story and everyone else's. You have special gift. Thank you.

Dear Really Worried about your Significant Other:

Whew!

Love is not comparative. It just is. There are different flavors of love, kind of like ice-cream. It's all ice-cream, but slightly different. There is however, a difference in level of commitment and life paths.

Your significant other doesn't plan for his future the way that you do; he has a tendency to live more in the moment and doesn't plan for "forever." You are correct, however, you have more anxiety and "pushiness" and want to create and control a future where he is in it with you.

That is not necessarily love, but a preoccupation with security. Try just waiting to see how the future will be with him. What you are creating with your worry is the complete opposite of what you want. Your insecurity about him shows up in your voice, your attitude, your control issues, your whining and your "neediness." This is a sure path to defeat.

Your cousin. Well, if that matters at all, I would believe her. But the deal is, it was before you and he had any real agreement. So what does it matter?

It was the PAST. Everybody over the age of fifteen has a past. Let it be and let it go. This thinking isn't serving you well at all. It is only helping you to be miserable. It is all in your head - you are causing trouble by your obsession with who he was or might ever be with. Intuition? Yes, you have it.

There might be another child out there - but even he doesn't know that for sure. Now, let me tell you about your intuition and what it is really telling you: You are feeling and afraid that the relationship with him will not last. That is making you crazy and you are looking for reasons why it won't last. You are actually creating lots of reasons and aggravation, and are in fact working towards it not lasting.

The intuition is true. The two of you won't be together forever. Now that you know that, why can't you just be okay? Can you go to a place in the future where the two of you are not together but both of you are joyfully happy? Policing your life with worry and control only opens the door to misery and illness. Life will always offer you the best opportunity to be the best you can be, live in the best way, and always be in love.

Anything less, derived from control, will not be very happy.

If you want this man in your life, consider why you don't trust him. Want a man in your life that you are controlling, or one that is fine and doesn't need a policeman following him around to verify he is doing/being what/where he said he was. Be honest. Quit being crazy…and begin today, then the relationship stands a better chance for a clearer, longer, healthier future. Good Luck and God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I am writing to get some perspective on my future for instance I would like to know if you see me expecting a child soon? I've been hoping and waiting to be blessed.

Do you see a change of employment for me and if you do, what kind of work do you see me doing? Do I need to be putting in an application?

On the other end my child has been having some issues and everyone always tells me it's because my child gets whatever they want in life. I have a feeling it's more than that but I don't know how to reach it, what do you see? And what can I do?

Seeking

Dear Seeking:

I do see a pregnancy in the near future…probably summertime.

New employment? Well there is a change but I see it happening around next fall. Watch for various jobs that appeal to your energy, mind, heart, creative spirit, and love of the described tasks, and the service to others. You will see it on a bulletin board, probably at a Indian Health Services location.

Your child does need more structure and a determination of what is expected in a consistent way. Anytime a child whines, complains, and throws a temper tantrum (big or small) the results should be consistently directed to non-negotiable. Separation, and sometimes sleep are needed so that the child has a chance to be more lucid.

There is too much sugar and wheat in your child's system Monitor this more closely. Try and cut way back on wheat and wheat gluten. Cut out soda pop, but don't replace it with juice (also a strong straight sugar), instead teach the love of water. With these practices you should see a vast improvement in behavior.

Blessings to you.

Tribes rescind contract with law firm

Document filed in court could hurt trust status, damage Black Hills claim

By Archie B. Beauvais and Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Staff

PINE RIDGE - The Statute of Limitations was extended to Dec. 31, 2006 as the deadline for tribes to file Tribal Claims for accounting mismanagement based on their Arthur Anderson Report and little did anyone know that the litigation process would become even more complicated for several Lakota, Dakota and Nakota tribes.

When Congress passed the American Indian Reform Act in 1994 it required a full and complete accounting of their trust fund accounts. The accounting firm of Arthur Anderson was hired to do 20 year audits and those reports to tribes are called Arthur Anderson reports.

The New York law firm of McCarter and English apparently met the deadline by filing not one, but two complaints on behalf of the Standing Rock Sioux, Oglala Sioux, Rosebud Sioux, the Cheyenne River Sioux and all of the Oceti Sakowin Oyate tribes on Dec. 28, 2006 and January 2007. McCarter and English filed a complaint in the United States Court of Federal Claims and a similar, but longer complaint to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

Apparently some law firms offer pro bono work to some entities yearly and as the pressure of the deadline was approaching the prospect of not having to pay a fee was certainly a consideration. As it turned all of the tribes had not seen the document before it was filed.

As the Lakota, Dakota and Nakota prepared to meet the deadline, the whole issue was clouded by the fact that tribes practicing their sovereign right to select a law firm of choice were approached by several firms wanting to represent them. Some firms had little knowledge of Indian law and the Black Hills claim. It got even more interesting and controversial when one law firm tied the trust reform issue to a request for rental income for the Black Hills and asked the Federal District Court to end the trust relationship between the tribes and the BIA and put all the

Taking a peek at the NEW Prairie Wind Casino

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

PINE RIDGE - The newly built $20 million Prairie Wind Casino and motel is nearing completion with the grand opening planned sometime in the near future.

The casino has been built and is nearly ready to be occupied with some purchasing details still yet to be completed, said Michael Graham, casino general manager.

Graham and Wilson 'Buzz' Two Lance, of the casino, led the tour for this photo essay, along with the help of Lenart Brown Eyes, project manager.

They are awaiting the arrival of signs, machine stands and a few other construction items to be finished for the casino to be ready to moved into, said Graham. That includes the building to be accepted by the tribe.

The ground breaking ceremony and initial construction of the 40,000 square foot casino was in August of 2005 and since then has been slowly crafted to the beautiful structure it is today with the help of Peska Construction and the many tribal members.

The casino has been designed with the look of hewn wood and brick in the front and that same design crafted in the gaming area. Lakota design is incorporated in the interior of the casino with glass and arrow lighting fixtures, two illuminated tipis at the entrance, geometric designed carpet and earth tone colors.

The two tipis at the top of the front entrance were constructed by Paul Red Cloud.

Paintings and art has been already collected to decorate the walls of the casino. The restaurant has not yet been named but truly displays the environment of fine dining and a massive eating space. To add to the dining area, there is also a separate dining/meeting room with French doors for private events. The buffet area has been increased to a carousal style, two line buffet area.

The casino food is already considered fine dining so adding that to a beautiful, comfortably lit dining room will further enhance the experience of coming to the casino.

The casino is linked to the motel through a corridor near the dining area.

Tribes withdraw

tribes' land into fee status.

The courts, according to Oglala Sioux tribal member and attorney, Mario Gonzalez, have not fully issued a "judicial decision terminating all Sioux rights to the Black Hills" and therefore he notes that it is dangerous to wrongly tie Docket 74-A to the Black Hills as the McCarter and English complaint does. Docket 74-A apparently addresses the issue of the 1851 treaty land and the 34 million acres that lie outside of South Dakota and 14 million acres east of the Missouri. That land was never part of the Black Hills land claim.

Lakota tribes have unanimously refused over the years to settle for any monetary claims for the Black Hills, but continue to assert a claim to the land itself. By raising a claim that "The Black Hills are not for sale, but they are for rent" McCarter and English have risked a judicial decision that closes the door on the Sioux Nation's continuing and future land claims to the Black Hills.

In the complaint to the Court of Federal Claims, the attorneys for McCarter and English requested, in addition to rent on the Black Hills and other ancestral lands, a proper accounting of income generated from trust property. This request duplicated claims for trust accounting that have been filed on behalf of some of the Plaintiff Tribes by other law firms. The suit also asked for money damages amounting to at least $100 billion dollars and for money to pay McCarter and English for bringing the lawsuit.

The complaint filed by McCarter and English in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia asks for a declaratory judgment against the Congress of the United States declaring the unconstitutional seizure of land pursuant to the 1868 Fort Laramie Treaty, the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1851. The suit also requests an accounting of the trust fund status and an order dissolving the trustee status of the U. S. Department of the Interior for all lands held in trust for each member Tribe in the Oceti Sakowin Oyate. The successor Tribes to the Oceti Sakowin include 28 tribes in Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Minnesota and Canada, none of whom authorized or even knew about these lawsuits.

On the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation, the tribe never saw the two complaints before they were filed on behalf of the tribe. The Rosebud Sioux Tribe also took action to rescind any agreements with McCarter and English, while the Standing Rock Sioux did the same yesterday.

On the Oglala Sioux reservation, it literally has been a case of "dueling" law firms as one was terminated and replaced by another and one other was being considered because of its experience in Indian case law and its close work with the Oglala Sioux.

The minutes from the special session of the OST council on Oct. 20, 2006 reveal that the law firm of Herman and Mermelstein was terminated, while attorney Daniel Sheehan of the Lakota People's Law Office made a presentation to assist the tribe in litigating the case for free with the help of the law firm of McCarter and English of New York City.

At the Oct. 20 meeting, elders Chief Oliver Red Cloud, Floyd Hand and Marie Randall spoke to the issue of always remembering our takoja while reminding those present to use wisdom when discussing the Black Hills issue. The OST minutes document the fact that the McCarter and English proposal was adopted by a vote of 9 yes and 5 no and is listed as resolution number 06-93.

By the Nov. 20 OST special session there was deep concern about removing any reference to Docket 74-A and 74-B from the 13 page complaint as previously filed by Herman and Mermelstein. Attorney George Patton recommended that the council not go forward with utilizing the firm of McCarter and English because of their lack of expertise in Indian law. There was also discussion about retaining attorney Mario Gonzalez to litigate the issue.

On Dec. 6, 2006 OST attorney George Patton reiterated his concern about retaining the firm of McCarter and English and attorney Daniel Sheehan, in a memorandum to the OST council. His rationale was that the firm had no expertise in federal Indian law and that Sheehan had not informed the council that he would be raising funds to cover the cost of litigating the case.

On Jan. 12, attorney Mario Gonzalez entered the fray by posing some discussion points in a memorandum to OST president, John Steele. He pointed out several points in the McCarter and English proposals which appeared to conflict with the tribal trust funds mismanagement claim which his firm had filed. He warned that the two concurrent filings could lead to a dismissal of both claims, thereby, resulting in the tribe missing out on the Dec. 31 deadline.

The Dec. 31 deadline only applies to trust fund mismanagement claims based on the Tribe's Arthur Anderson reports, while the lawsuits filed by McCarter and English raise land and treaty claims which are not subject to that deadline.

Gonzalez outlines several differences between the complaints and wrote, "One of the most striking differences is the fact that the McCarter and English litigation seeks rental income from the Black Hills area, while our litigation goes out of its way to avoid raising any Black Hills claims (as we agreed to in our contract with the tribe.)" He goes on to say, "This is an extremely dangerous and unadvisable claim."

Gonzalez furthermore points out several misstatements about Sioux history in the McCarter and English proposal too numerous to mention here. The points do, however, provide an excellent history lesson for those uninformed about the evolution of the Sioux, its treaty making with the United States and what constitutes the membership of the Oceti Sakowin Oyate.

He ends by noting, "McCarter then ends with the most outrageous request of all. That being (1) the abolition of the contemporary reservations created in 1889, (2) the abolishment of the trust protections those lands now have, and (3) the return of all of the Great Sioux Nation land to all of the 7 campfires, including those Sioux Bands which never signed the 1868 Treaty. These demands were apparently put forth without the advice or approval of any of the Sioux Tribal governments."

Attempts to reach Rosebud Sioux Tribe in-house attorneys were unsuccessful, however, RST council representative from Rosebud community, Fern Bordeaux-Bolz said, "McCarter and English included all of the Sioux Nations' treaty lands. We contracted with Mario Gonzalez and excluded Docket 74A and 74B. We asked our attorney to draft a letter to the District of Columbia and the Court of Federal Claims to recuse RST from the claim." The action apparently occurred during the RST council meeting last Thursday.

Donna Salomon, Executive Secretary to OST President John Steele said that the OST Judiciary Committee had asked OST tribal attorney George Patton to contact the United District Court for the District of Columbia and the Court of Federal Courts of Claims and to ask that OST be withdrawn from the complaint as filed by McCarter and English. She also noted that the OST council had authorized attorney Mario Gonzalez to file an amended complaint to the one originally filed by the firm of Herman and Mermelstein.

The OST judiciary committee resolution reads, in part, "The Judiciary Committee of the Oglala Sioux Tribe hereby requests the Tribe's general counsel George Patton to contact McCarter and English and Daniel Sheehan and demand that the complaints filed in the lawsuit be withdrawn and the Oglala Sioux Tribe dismissed as a plaintiff in the lawsuit." It also requests that Patton contact the courts in Washington, DC and ask for dismissal of the cases and sanctions against McCarter and English and Daniel Sheehan.

Salomon also said that OST is consulting with Chief Oliver Red Cloud, Johnson Holy Rock and others involved in the treaty council in order to get their input. She added that "Chief Oliver Red Cloud has emphasized that we need to stand strong with the Black Hills treaty, our ancestors choose to whether starve than to sell out and he said we need to continue that commitment and honor what they stood for."

The Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe passed resolution 19-07 CR which reads, in part, "The CRST declares that these lawsuits were not authorized by the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe and that they were filed without the Tribal Council's knowledge or consent, and that Daniel Sheehan and the law firm of McCarter and English do not represent the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe." Furthermore the CRST asked to be dropped from the lawsuit.

Gay Kingman, a consultant with the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association said that the two claims if allowed to go forward would, "Do damage to the Sioux tribes, the Black Hills land claim issue and do away with our trust status. We pulled out of the lawsuit and sent notice to McCarter and English. We had not seen it and it was filed unethically on our behalf."

On the Standing Rock Sioux reservation, SRST council representative Avis Little Eagle, said that when SRST Tribal Chairman, Ron His Horse Is Thunder, saw the complaint he said that it was not a case of asset mismanagement. She explained, "I had no idea that McCarter and English was going to put all that in it. When we saw it, it was unbelievable. It was not asset mismanagement. We never got to review it." According to Little Eagle, the SRST rescinded any agreement with the firm yesterday.

Attorney Mario Gonzalez noted that the Jan. 12 memorandum to OST President John Steele was comprehensive in noting his concerns about the McCarter and English complaints and that it was acceptable to use quotations from that document. He also added, "I am serving as an attorney for the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. I have a coalition of attorneys from those three. We filed complaints for these three and 16 other tribes in their tribal accounts."

KILI Radio's new equipment arrives, set to return to full power in a week

KILI receives $47,000 for back-up generator

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PORCUPINE BUTTE - On Wednesday, Jan. 17, the long wait was over, KILI's new equipment showed up at Porcupine Butte just north of Wounded Knee on a semi from Illinois and a flat bed truck.

A front end loader on loan from O'Bryan Construction and later a bob cat and a boom truck from Skull Construction helped offload new analog and digital transmitters, a new antenna and a 350 foot transmission line. KILI Radio was hit by lightning in April of 2006 damaging the antenna, the transmission line and transmitter. Since May, the Pine Ridge Reservation based community radio station has been broadcasting with a temporary antenna, an exciter and a small amplifier putting out about 260 watts for broadcast purposes and using the internet.

"It is so exciting to see all of this new equipment finally arrive," said Melanie Janis, station manager, "it's been hard on all of us, people call everyday wanting to know when we will be back on the air with full power or they stop us in the street or at the store or at a ball game, everyone wants KILI back on."

Following the storm damage in April, KILI applied for a Department of Commerce Public Telecommunications Facilities grant for new equipment and a Corporation for Public Broadcasting grant for a digital conversion project, both were funded. The state committed to help with the required matching funds, knowing how important KILI has been getting information out to the community during emergencies. The official awards did not come until early fall, bids were announced in early October, were awarded in November and the equipment was manufactured in November and December.

"This has been hard on everyone, the board and staff at the station and the many people who count on us being on the air everyday," said Janis, "I can't tell you how many people have come up to us and told us that they never realized how much KILI had been a part of their everyday life and how much they missed the station."

According to the engineer, Tracy Krsnak, from Rapid City, the new antenna and line will go up on Thursday and it should take about a week to install both the analog and digital transmitters and balance and tune the whole system. Sometime the week of Jan. 22, KILI will be back broadcasting at 100,000 watts. With a full signal, KILI will be back in Rapid City at 88.7 as well.

In early December, KILI received a call from the South Dakota Broadcaster's Association about the possibility of KILI being included in a grant providing backup generators for stations across the state.

"Homeland Security provided some end of the year monies to the state who in turn saw our association as a vehicle to deliver the services statewide," said Steve Willard, president of the SD Broadcasters Association; "we looked at all of the major emergency broadcast stations (LP 1's) around the state and looked at covering all of the state and ended up awarding grants to 19 stations in eight different cities across the state."

After helping stations with back-up needs in Watertown, Huron, Sioux Falls, Aberdeen, Pierre and Rapid City, KILI was selected for the southwest corner and Sturgis/Spearfish for the northwest corner of the state.

The overall grant will total $47,000 with $21,000 going for an 80 kilowatt propane generator and the balance going for installation which will include some much needed electrical upgrade work. Interstate Power, a regional manufacturer with outlets in Sioux Falls, Omaha and Des Moines will provide the generator; if they have one on hand it will be here in four weeks, if not it could take as long as 12 weeks. Clark Electrical out of Rapid City will handle the electrical upgrade. The award includes an automatic transfer switch that will automatically put the back-up generator online when the electricity goes off.

"There are so many individuals and groups and organizations who have helped us get back on the air," said Janis, "we appreciate all of those who have helped us, it has been a strong united effort of people on and off Pine Ridge Reservation, many thanks."

Lady Thorpes, Mustangs cruise to wins both remain #2 in state

Red Cloud adds three wins, earns #7 ranking

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MISSION/PINE RIDGE - The Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes continued their winning ways this past week, knocking off Little Wound in the Rosebud Shootout on Saturday 82-49 in Mission and dusting off Lead-Deadwood 63-47 on Monday at home for their 11th win of the season.

The Lady Thorpes went up quickly in the first quarter 20-6 over Little Wound as Nichelle Red Owl and Christian Janis hit from three point range; by the half, Pine Ridge pushed the lead to 22 points 36-14 and were up by 35 after three quarters, 69-34.

"We have a good inside/outside mix on the team," said first year head coach, Bill Mendoza, "our team has the ability to pound it inside or shoot the three and we can rebound."

Red Owl, a sophomore transfer from Little Wound led Pine Ridge's balanced scoring attack with 20 points and two threes, Christian Janis helped with 15 points and three threes, Lacey Weston chipped in 15 also and led the team with nine rebounds while Robin Webber added 10 points. Little Wound's sophomore point guard Tawni Shay Shot with Arrow threw in 17 points for the Lady Mustangs while Kelsey Brave Eagle helped with 13. Little Wound is now 3-8 and travels to Pine Ridge on Thursday and hosts Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Saturday.

Pine Ridge opened a tough four game week by hosting Lead-Deadwood on Monday and it was business as usual for the 06/07 edition of the Lady Thorpes; Christian Janis scored 13 first quarter points in leading Pine Ridge to a 21-6 lead over the Lady Goldiggers on the way to a 63-47 win for Pine Ridge's 11th straight win of the season.

The game was basically decided by halftime as the Lady Thorpes held Lead-Deadwood to just 15 points. Janis finished with a game high 17 points and added five steals and four rebounds. Nichelle Red Owl and Robin Webber each helped with 10 points while Saudia Tasso chipped in eight points and led the team with 10 rebounds.

Pine Ridge is 11-0 and faces Little Wound at home on Thursday, hosts Custer on Friday and travels to Dakota Valley on Saturday for their fourth game in six days. Pine Ridge has maintained their number two ranking in the state, Milbank in ranked number one; looking down the road, Pine Ridge has a date with Bennett County on Feb. 1st in Martin, Bennett County is also undefeated and ranked number 3 in the state. On a side note, Pine Ridge knocked off Milbank in December of 1989 to win the 1989 State A girls championship.

Pine Ridge came to Kyle on Friday and worked hard in the first half to stay close with the Mustangs 25-23 but Little Wound came out in the third with a full court press and went up by 19 after three and finished with their ninth straight win of the season 79-49 over the Thorpes.

TJ McCauley led four Mustangs in double figures with 20 points but showed s definite all around game adding five steals, seven rebounds and an assist; Brice Hornbeck helped out with 17 points, eight rebounds, five steals three assists and two blocked shots while Rich Big Boy chipped in 17 and Devon LeBeau finished with 10 second half points. Jon Provost led Pine ridge with 15 points, four rebounds and four assists.

Little Wound in 9-0 now, ranked number two in the state, they will host Red Cloud on Thursday and Cheyenne Eagle butte on Saturday.

Red Cloud continued to roll towards their upcoming rematch with Little Wound on Thursday night as the Crusaders routed Wall 93-58 on Monday, blew out Winner 108-56 on Friday and handled Cheyenne Eagle Butte 79-56 on Saturday moving from honorable mention to number seven in the polls.

Everyone expected Winner to arrive on Friday and work to slow down the game and turn it into a half court game but Jim Drake, Winner's coach decided to try and run with the Crusaders; that backfired as Red Cloud scored 49 first half points, leading 49-24 and rolled through the second half scoring at will and finishing with a 108-56 win.

Christian McGhee led five Crusaders in double figures with 20 points, hitting three threes and going five for five from the free throw line, Billy Scott hit for 18, Lester Gotheridge finished with 17, Davis Giago added 16 and Brier Iron Cloud chipped in 13. Red Cloud finished with 12 threes and 11 players scored for the Crusaders, a team that is averaging 85 points a game while holding their opponents to 55.

In their third game of the week, Red Cloud hosted Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Saturday, the Crusaders held the Braves to two points in the first quarter and ran out to a 44-13 halftime lead finishing up with a 79-45 win for their seventh win in a row and a 9-1 record which earned the team a number seven ranking in this week's top ten poll.

Billy Scott set the tone for the game with seven first quarter points and two assists but it was the stifling team defense thrown at Eagle Butte that held the Braves to two first quarter points and 14 points at the half that really made the game statement for the Crusaders. Christian McGhee finished with 17 points, six assists, four steals and two rebounds, Brier Iron Cloud came of the bench with 15 points, Lester Gotheridge added 14 points, a team high eight rebounds, four steals and a blocked shot while Scott finished with nine points and six rebounds.

Red Cloud is 9-1 and travels to Little wound on Thursday and hosts Alliance on Saturday.

Harris delivers Rosebud I.H.S. report to RST council

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Shelly Harris, CEO at the Rosebud Comprehensive Health Care unit delivered the January report on Wednesday, Jan. 10 to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council and to the Lakota Country Times.

A significant portion of the report was devoted to explaining the staffing needs and the status of each vacancy. Also, there was a three month summary of third party collections as received during October, November and December 2006.

Antelope District 3 RST council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott, said, "They are doing the best job they can with present I.H.S. funding. The amount never changes." Scott said he would like to see some kind of balance achieved between paying down the deficit and the more immediate needs of the Sicangu people.

As an example, when income such as third party billing is received, it should be evenly programmed between past obligations and present spending for health needs of the people.

A continuing assessment of the staffing needs at the Rosebud I.H.S. unit is a concern of tribal members who desire improved health care and Harris' administration appears to be making gains to that end as witnessed by her report.

The pharmacy work space apparently is undergoing some reconstruction in order to afford increased work space as well as improved work flow.

For anyone who has visited the hospital administration office area in the last month or so, it is evident that additional work stations are being created also. The staff is professional and cordial to visitors who may have an inquiry and that part of the unit is not as unfamiliar as it used to be to Lakota people.

A chief supervisory pharmacist will be coming on board with a start date of Feb. 1. Two staff pharmacist positions have been advertised, one will be filled by a staff pharmacist on Jan. 21.

Shelly Harris delivers monthly reports to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council on the improvements of the hospital.

Some months ago, Harris reported that the Rosebud I.H.S. had received some construction money from the Aberdeen area office to redesign the emergency room.

The issue at that time was affording incoming emergency patients some privacy as they were being transported from the ambulance to the emergency room for triage.

There is a need for individual treatment rooms also as well as a medication room.

Harris also reported on the acute care unit, the dental department and the radiology department.

In other staffing needs being reported, there are two clinical nurse positions and one MSA being advertised for the acute care unit.

In the emergency unit, there is one RN position open with an application received.

There are two part time positions being announced along with two MSA positions which have been closed.

There is a need for three nurses in the surgical unit. Among the medical staff, there is a need for two emergency room medical officers, two CRNA's, an OB/GYN medical officer and two nurse midwives.

An emergency room medical officer will be starting on February 1. The facility received a panel which had four applicants for a midwife position.

Vacancies also exist for two family practice medical officers and two dentists. A third dentist has been selected and is scheduled to begin in February.

As far as third party collections were concerned, for the months of October, November and December 2006 the total amount reported for Medicaid, Medicare and Private Insurance payments totaled $2,791,477.00 for that period.

If they were to collect $10,119,158 in Third Party Collections the facility would be projecting a deficit of ($1,425,179).

There is currently a "Continuing Resolution" and if the continuing resolution remains in effect there will be no increases in the allowance for FY07. The facility is currently operating on emergency spending and trying to eliminate excess expenditures. It is vitally important for those individuals that are eligible for Medicare/Medicaid to contact the Benefits Coordinator at the facility for assistance in submitting an application.

The facility is currently finalizing their Strategic Plan. The Governing Body has identified the following four initiatives: Revenue Generation, Access to Health Care, Recruitment & Retention, and Preventive Health Care/Shared Services. The focus groups will enlist employees within the organization to become part of the focus group.

Each focus group will begin by conducting a SWOT (Strength, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats) Analysis. Upon completion of the SWOT the focus groups will be identifying ways in which to improve services.

The Strategic Plan will be based on a 4 year plan for improvement and it will be updated on an annual basis to ensure that the needs of the customers will be met.

Finding My Voice

'Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter'

Dana Lone Hill

Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter

This past week on Jan. 15, we observed Martin Luther King, Jr. as a national holiday. I don't even have to write and tell you of the accomplishments of Dr. King and what a great man he was. We all know this, as a nation. Well, except for in Rushville, Neb., where they don't observe the holiday and still send the kids to school. Don't ask me why? I questioned them so much about it last year, but never got an answer. Though I can say, after living there for a year, I am not surprised.

Anyway, Dr. King was a powerful speaker, no matter who you were or what color you are, you believed in yourself and your abilities after listening to him speak. He was so powerful, I believe, that his power radiated off of him and spread to those around him.

I remember seeing Rev. Jesse Jackson when he came to Pine Ridge, back when I was a youngster. I remember how when he spoke, the people responded and really believed, as he said…that they are somebody. I can still hear the crowd chanting "I am somebody."

I once talked to an elderly lady about this and she told me "We Indians just don't have anyone powerful enough to speak for us like that. How can we advance when there is no one powerful to motivate us like that?"

I didn't answer her of course, only listened. I don't know where you're from, but where I'm from you don't answer elders like that.

I did ponder on it and let it simmer for a few years.

I believe that with more than 500 tribes in North America, and even eight different reservations here in South Dakota, finding one person to speak for all of us, as a people, when we all have so many different issues, would be hard.

I don't know how it is where you're from, but where I'm from my immediate-extended family can't even get along for more than three months straight. We will all be getting along fine and next thing you know there is a silent fight over who was not included in the recent casino outing, or who owes who a block of cheese.

So with that being said, how do we as the Native people of America look up to one person to speak for all of us. We have many different tribes, reservations, nations, etc., over this vast land, how do we unite long enough under one person? How do we find that one person to make us realize we are somebody? To make us see that we can make a difference? To show us that we can make this world a better place?

I say that one person is within our selves.

We are the person that can change the world. We can start right here at home.

We are the person that can show the world what strong people we come from. We can show the world how we can make a difference on our reservations, for our children, and for ourselves.

To make a difference, you don't have to give a speech. You can make a difference by doing small things around your community everyday. Things that show you are proud of who you are and where you come from. Run an errand for an elder, pick trash, volunteer. I make my kids pick trash all the time, no matter where we live.

(I would highly recommend picking trash, as a sign blew in my yard last week that said Indian Tacos with a big arrow under it, and it was pointing at my door. The last thing I need is a line at my front door.)

Anyway my point is, instead of waiting for that person that is strong enough to make a difference, be that person.

As Dr. King says…

"Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter."

Empowering Yourself

The five languages of apology

By Patty Pourier

My husband will sometimes apologize to me by saying, "Patty, I am sorry you are mad at me." Even though the statement is true, it just doesn't do it for me. I had another relative write me a letter forgiving me for all the things she found wrong with me. At the end she hoped I would accept her apology. That didn't do it for me either. Another time I had a relative apologize for his wife's actions. Again that lacked something. I also had a person apologize and then say, but I may do it again. In each of the above situations, it was the language of the apology that really lacked something to me.

I read an article by Dr. Jennifer Thomas, co-author with Dr. Gary Chapman, of the book The Five Languages of Apology. It was an "Ah ha- moment". I found help and healing in the five steps she talked about. The article was in a magazine called "In Touch."

The five languages as they appeared:

Apology Language #1-

Expressing Regrets-"I'm sorry." Acknowledges the hurt your action caused the other.

Shows remorse. (Not "I'm sorry you …. Or I'm sorry if…" but rather, "I'm sorry that ….my pride, feat, laziness, self centered ness, anger etc. hurt you and our relationship."

Apology Language #2-

Accepting responsibility: " I was wrong". Names the mistake and takes responsibility for it. (It's easier to say, "You're right" than "I was wrong," but the latter carries more weight.) "I made a big mistake. I didn't think about what I was doing, but in retrospect, I see that was precisely the problem-I should have thought before I acted."

Apology Language #3

"Restitution/Making Amends: "What can I do to make it right?" Asks if any compensation to help is needed for the wound to heal or for the other person to get back up on his or her feet. Asks how you can restore that person's confidence of your love. "I know it's not enough to just tell you I'm sorry. Is there anything I can do to make up for what I've done?"

Apology Language #4-

"Repentance: "I'll do my best not to do it again." Understands that repentance literally means turning around 180 degrees. Engages in problem solving and communicates your desire to change and to prevent the same predicament from happening again. (Excuses such as "Well, my day was just so tough" don't work.) "How could I say that in a different way so it wouldn't come across as critical? What would you like to see me change that would help you start to rebuild your trust in me?"

Apology Language #5-

Requesting Forgiveness: "Will you forgive me?" Expresses recognition that forgiveness is needed and that you are willing to be patient in seeking reconciliation. (More time or greater clarification of your authenticity may be needed. If so, the ball is now in their count.) "I know I've hurt you, and you have every right to be angry.

I value our relationship and am so sorry I've damaged it-so I'm hoping that in time, you can find it in your heart to forgive me."

I clipped the five steps out and have them on my refrigerator.

I am trying to incorporate these into my language.

I hope you find them helpful and find healing in them as well.

You are the change you wish to see made

Dear Editor:

Recently, a criminal complaint was filed with the U.S. District Attorney in Rapid City, S.D., citing 24 Oglala Sioux Tribal elected officials, political candidates, and tribal employees with fraud, election fraud and tampering, conspiracy, and embezzling. These are serious charges that carry maximum sentences of up to 100 years.

A few people have criticized the plaintiffs for taking action. However, the decision to take this complaint to the federal level was not made lightly. Any time you air your "dirty laundry" to the outside "world", it is somewhat embarrassing. However, when people feel like they have exhausted their remedies and have no other recourse, the only plausible option is federal court, as federal monies are involved.

As it has been stated before, this case isn't about personalities, one candidate over another. There are no "sore losers" involved. This case is about the pursuit of justice. Lakota ancestors fought and some died to protect what many take for granted today.

It is in that same spirit that this case is based on. You might ask yourself, "what is at stake?"; "why should I care?"; "can things ever change on Pine Ridge?"

Well, let's address that first question. Everything is at stake. If we allow this illegal election and civil rights violations to stand, it will set a precedent for future crimes against the Oglala oyate. Voter confidence is at a near all-time low. Many feel that the current political environment is nearly as bad as the early 1970's.

Why should you care? Well, that $90 million that trickles down from the federal government, that is YOUR money. That belongs to the entire tribal membership. Not to a handle full of elected officials or finance office workers. Importantly, these few corrupt officials and employees are playing with YOUR grandchildren's future. Have you tried to get a financial report from YOUR Tribal Treasurer and be told no? You have a right to know where your money is being spent!

Have you attempted to distribute a letter to your elected officials, only to have YOUR Tribal Secretary take it and prevent the distribution? Do you think that elected officials are aware that she is withholding documents from them?

That is censorship.

Although there has been a dark cloud over the OST political scene since 1934, it is never too late for positive change. 2007 is destined to be the "year of political transition". The grass roots oyate are comprised of scholars, lawyers, visionaries, and wisdom keepers. Let us come together to be the change we wish to see made!

A View From the West

Cultural philosophy is nearly gone

By Ivan Star
Special to the Times

I am challenging anyone reading this to try something that is next to impossible in these modern times.

Think of an ehankehan wicoti (ancient encampment) along some river or creek in the Great Plains area two or three hundred years ago. Now, try to imagine what life was like in such a settlement.

If you are drawing a blank, you are not alone. The reason for the difficulty in trying to visualize life back then is very simple; we have all but forgotten our old ways. Federal "Indian" assimilation policies and wicked stereotypes have altered our cultural perceptions so much that we cannot imagine, much less remember, how our ancestors lived.

According to modern distorted views perpetrated by the federal educational system and Hollywood filmdom, such an encampment is haphazard and comprised of tattered canvas tipi coverings stretched over long tree branches.

Amidst the disorganization are disheveled and grimy "Indian" people dressed in brown leather clothing.

This is a powerful image suggesting that "Indians" are less than human. Whether we agree or not, most people today think of "Indians" as intellectually challenged and pitiable people.

We, as Lakota people, continue to endure the damaging effects of this prevailing alteration of character every single day of our lives.

Contrary to such devious imagery, I have to argue that our ancestors were very clean, organized, dignified and devout people.

The inspiration of MLK

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

As I look back to the time of Martin Luther King's "I Have A Dream" speech, it was a time when many people of color were simply awakening to the power and spirit within. The power to dream is an awesome responsibility because it takes you by the hand and let's you know at least what might have been.

To have lived through that turbulent time, as they say, is historical to begin with. As a late teen I wasn't aware of the tremendous change that was occurring within our nation. The Vietnam War was in full tilt and many people were questioning the direction of the country as we had lost so many young men for a cause that really didn't matter back home here.

When you see pictures of Dr. King, he looks and sounds like an older mature gentleman, but in fact, he was a relatively young man.

Did you ever wonder what inspired him to write his speech or if anyone gave him feedback as he wrote his first drafts?

It is equally interesting to have lived through the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Robert Kennedy. They were all heroes to me as they were important to Lakota people.

We enjoy many of the same freedoms of speech and assembly that Dr. King believed in and we need to share that with every one of our Lakota students.

We need to make sure that they understand why he was a great man.

Everyone once in awhile we have great men and women come along and make such a lasting impression on our people. In Lakota country, we forever point to the wisdom and contributions of such great leaders as Crazy Horse, Red Cloud, and Spotted Tail, to name a few.

As an educator, I sometimes wonder who is moving the spirit of our young Lakota who are coming this way. I hope that they are studying the text and content of what our forefathers have passed on. Sometimes the inspiration we get from others doesn't have to be a great leader, but someone we respect and love.

I am certain that there are many in our own communities who also have a dream of what Lakota society should look like as we move forward. Even many of our young people may have ideas and philosophies that need to be recorded and shared. We just need to give them a chance and opportunity to share and be creative. I hear a lot of ideas and sentiments as I roam around and listen to people. Some are good and others are on the verge of being innovative and long lasting. Most of us don't take the time to reflect and think about the survival of Lakota society and we need to do that.

We have many contemporary thinkers and writers who can reflect on the past and apply it to the future and many of those are young Lakota people who need to step up to the plate very soon. I did a 45 minute interview on KINI with Richard Iyotte last April and over the holidays it got a lot of play.

As I listened to it, I realized that we touched on a lot of interesting topics and was happy that the station afforded the Lakota listening audience a chance to hear it, especially the young folks.

I think I achieved a goal in some ways with that as Rocky Shaw came up to met at the ALCO store in Valentine and she said she had listened to the interview.

Her daughter had just completed her bachelor's degree and she was hoping that she might have the opportunity to listen to my story and be inspired to study further.

We all have a dream and we need to share that with other Lakota people.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Titla's dream: Opening the media doors to Indian youth

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Mary Kim Titla is a slender and attractive member of the San Carlos Apache Nation and she remembers how hard it was to break into the mainstream media. When she finally made the breakthrough she soon realized how much Native American news was deliberately omitted on a daily basis as she toiled at the NBC affiliate television stations in Arizona.

Armed with a Bachelor's Degree in Journalism from the University of Oklahoma and a Master of Communications Degree from Arizona State University, she set out to open doors for her people in the mainstream media, but like most Native American journalists that have made this same transition, she soon ran into executives with little or no knowledge about Indians and with little or no desire to hear their side of the story.

Early on Titla ran into news directors who said, "We don't have the audience for a lot of Indian news and we cannot discriminate by having a reporter or news aimed at a specific minority." Her initial experiences reminded me of my own.

When I first signed on as a cub reporter with a local South Dakota daily newspaper one white editor told me that I could not cover Indian news objectively because I was an Indian. My response, "You have white reporters covering white news every day. Are they not being objective?"

Throughout her 20 years in television Mary Kim Titla managed to open small doors and soon her face and name became familiar to most Arizonians.

But as she gained in popularity she still felt stifled and unfulfilled by the congregation of media moguls too steeped in mediocrity and lacking in vision to further expand opportunities for Native Americans.

On July 1, 2005 Titla kicked off the venture that had become her dream goal. She resigned from her position as television news reporter and started the online Native Youth Magazine.

One year later, over a cup of coffee in Tulsa, OK this summer, she told me about the difficult times she and her family have faced since starting the magazine. "If it wasn't for the free labor of my three sons and husband and our willingness to work 24/7 to move this project forward, I think we would have had second thoughts," she said.

Titla said her online magazine was developed in order to give voice to those without the resources or opportunity to have their points of views taken seriously.

She said, "Native Youth Magazine showcases the talents and lifestyles of Native youth. It's a positive place for our young people to go to, but it's not just for Native youth. It's for anyone who cares about Native youth. We want the world to know our young people are alive and well and they're having healthy fun."

Titla's early goal was to build a successful website. Now she is looking to morph into a print magazine and she is entertaining a proposal for a television show. "Wow, and to think the original vision was just a website."

Explaining how the idea of a website for Native youth began, Titla said this on her personal website, "The idea of a website for Native youth began in my home. I'm a mother of three boys, Jordan 20, Micah 15, and Bear 10. They all jump on the Internet almost on a daily basis. I noticed they weren't going to websites that catered to them as Native youth and I discovered why. There just aren't many websites for them. Those that exist are niche sites for those who have special interests like writing, sports and entertainment. There's nothing wrong with that, but I wondered about all the young people like my sons who wanted a place in cyberspace that not only catered to them but also offered one stop shopping. That's when the vision began."

When Titla read the message board during the first days of Native Youth Magazine the simple message "I love NYM" from a Native teenage girl, nearly brought her to tears. It assured her that Indian teenagers did read the online magazine and they did enjoy it.

Titla and her husband John Mosely, Assinboine Sioux/Paiute, have invested most of their savings into the project. She credits her sons and a core group of Indian youth for building the website. "They gave me their input into the layout, design, colors, content and products for an online store. A handful of youth contribute articles on a regular basis," she said.

A logo and essay contest drew many hits and generated what she called "awesome entries."

As it passes the halfway point on the way to its second year Native Youth Magazine.com is now averaging about 2 million hits per month and more than 1,000 unique visits a day. Titla expounds, "Not bad for such a young website."

President John F. Kennedy once said, "The American Indian is the least understood and most misunderstood of all Americans." Titla hopes to change that perception.

Mary Kim Titla had a dream and she is just awakening from that dream and dealing with the tough realities of keeping a website business online.

I strongly encourage you to join her in that dream and visit her website at Native Youth Magazine.com. You can contact Titla directly at marykim@nativeyouthmagazine.com.

Yes, having health concerns, they developed, and implemented some highly effective culture-based sanitation methods. After all, hundreds of people resided in these villages. They did not simply pitch a tipi anywhere they pleased.

One point to consider is the absence of major epidemics among native peoples, such as the Black Plague. Unsanitary practices by residents of the densely populated towns of old world Europe brought on these fatal outbreaks.

It was not until contact with the European newcomers that disease became a serious factor for indigenous people.

Contrary to what we learned, war alone did not bring indigenous people to the edge of extinction.

A variety of diseases, for which native people had no immunity, decimated native people across the North American continent. The European newcomer had transported their lethal old world diseases across the Atlantic Ocean.

At any rate, with so many people living in one place, there had to be some planned organization. For instance, camp moves were according to both spiritual and physical dictates.

The winter and summer solstices were very much part of Lakota life. At the core of this lifestyle was a belief system based on a Lakota perspective of creation.

All of these combined formed the foundation of Lakota life.

Included were unwritten rules of conduct, called wowahecun (kinship terms). This system is comparable to a city's statutes that govern how people should behave and treat others. Wowahecun was not only effective, but it was a beautiful way to maintain high moral standards within a large group.

These are all but gone. Today, life is completely void of those ancient values here on the Pine Ridge. Some of us, exposed to these old ways, have had to endure humiliating situations. For example, a daughter-in-law did not talk to her father-in-law and a son-in-law did not talk to his mother-in-law in traditional times.

Many modern-day "Indians" believed this particular rule of conduct was primitive and highly inconvenient.

Consequently, a contemporary daughter-in-law will talk directly to and will even tease her father-in-law. A son-in-law will argue directly with his mother-in-law. Thus, Lakota life became incoherent and chaotic.

Another aspect of this cultural deterioration emerges in how we treat Unci Maka (Grandmother Earth).

The badlands-viewing site atop Red Shirt Table along BIA 41 presents a good sampling.

It is an excellent site and offers a beautiful view of the badlands. One day I stopped there and walked closer to the edge for a better view.

I was appalled by the site there in the immediate ravine: eleven discarded automobile tires amidst a large amount of household trash.

Apparently, local Lakota residents discarded the rubbish.

I have seen travelers parked there taking photographs of the beautiful badlands and surely, they have seen the hidden mess too.

It does not end there. The waste disposal site in Oglala is a mess. First, a fire destroyed the new fencing around the site. I thought trash burning was against tribal law. Also, on many an occasion, I had to clean up someone else's mess just to get to the dumpsters. The most peculiar practice of dropping bags of trash near the dumpsters but not in them is mind-boggling.

In reality, one can see bags of trash and debris just about anywhere. Our road's ditches, especially, are popular dumping sites for household trash and other waste.

The new road north of Oglala is looking good; however, its ditches too are slowly cluttering with trash.

The great variety of discarded alcoholic beverage containers ought to be cause for concern.

The following phenomenon takes its place among the unusual and certainly deserves mention. People tend to buckle their seat belts only when leaving the reservation and remove them as soon as they return.

Some seem to think this is freedom while others perceive it as sovereignty.

In a highly realistic sense, reservation residents use alcohol and other controlled drugs more than we may think.

One time I saw three vehicles parked at our dumpsite and several "cheerful" people were smoking marijuana and having a good time. Perhaps our dumpsite has become a local "party" spot now, of all places.

The low-rent housing complex in Oglala has become a discouraging eyesore. I did a drive-through the other day at the trailer court and now I hesitate to use the name of the local Oglala man who lost his life to the 1999 tornado: the park is named in his honor. The mobile homes are a result of the disaster.

Governor's housing and the houses along the old Highway 18 seem to be doing better.

I sincerely hope these homes stay that way. They may serve as examples of how to maintain a home. They certainly stand out as pillars of hope and optimism.

I, for one, am weary of seeing these conditions. I do not know how to address it effectively other than holding them up for everyone to see.

Chances are some district members will simply continue to look the other way hoping things will get better. Some may be offended but my hope is that the others will have enough dignity to do something about the situation.

It would be great if we could revive the old ways. For my own well-being, though, I must resign to the fact that we will never again be like our ancestors. We have lost so much that we are even incapable of implementing this modern way of life, as proven by our current situation.

Things have definitely taken a turn for the worse.

Prairie Wind Casino

The casino was made possible by a $20 million loan from the Shakopee Mdewankaton Sioux Community in Minnesota.

Prairie Wind celebrated their 12 anniversary last fall and averages $2.3 million a year. The casino now employs 204 people and will add another 26 to 35 employees for the motel.

The construction of the 72 rooms and six suites motel is still ongoing and will be opened at a later date. The rooms are nearly done and furniture has been moved into the motel but there are projects within the motel that are still being worked on such as a large conference area in the downstairs area and stairwells. The conference area will have several large rooms for workshops. The motel has not been named and will not be under a franchise which allows for more profit and personal decision making.

Each room's color scheme is rich in earth tones with wood and leather furnishings and flat screen televisions. Native American art prints adorn the walls and wrought iron lamps are fashioned with arrows.

The motel will have an indoor swimming pool and hot tub with a guest laundry and small video arcade. The motel rates will be designed to be competitive with other motels.

The casino is currently advertising for a hotel manager who will coordinate the motel opening and the additional employees needed.

The old casino will be used for marketing and plans are still being developed as to what it can be used for. Ideas generated include a skating rink along with promotional events..

Pine Ridge Village recieves $15,000 grant for economic development

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribe Office of Economic Development received a late Christmas present of sorts thanks to a $15,000 economic development donation from Golden West Telecommunications.

The funding was made available as part of Golden West's annual economic development program created to target funds toward projects and programs within its service areas that help create or enhance local employment opportunities.

The project submitted in 2006 by the OST Office of Economic Development will see the funds used to establish the Pine Ridge Village Community Development Corporation, Inc. with the purpose of promoting economic development in the Pine Ridge Village District.

"Our goal is to establish community-based economic development corporations for each of the nine districts of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation," said Herb Wounded Head, Director of the OST Office of Economic Development.

"In doing so, each district will have opportunities to enter into partnerships with Small Business Administration or other commercial financial institutions to encourage growth and development throughout the Pine Ridge Reservation."

"Creating jobs is important throughout our service area, especially in an area with such a high unemployment rate," said Golden West Customer Services Manager Jody Bielmaier. "We hope the project submitted last year by the OST Office of Economic Development will help achieve that goal."

Golden West began in 1916 as a stock company providing telephone service between the communities of Quinn and Interior.

The company has grown over the years to become the largest independent telephone company in South Dakota and the 35th largest telecommunications company in the nation. The Company now employs nearly 350 people statewide offering services ranging from local and long distance telephone service, high-speed and wireless Internet, cable television, 24-hour answering service, Internet help desk, networking services, wholesale Internet services, paging and business phone systems to digital video recorders and security monitoring.

Lakota Funds receives $5,000 from Golden West

KYLE - The Lakota Fund started off the year on a positive note with a $5,000 economic development donation from Golden West Telecommunications.

The funding was made available as part of Golden West's annual economic development program created to target funds toward projects and programs within its service areas that help create or enhance local employment opportunities. The 2006 contribution brings the total received over the past seven years by the Lakota Fund to $30,000.

"We realize that the future of our company is dependent upon the success of the individuals and businesses in our service area and that's why we're excited to help the Lakota Fund in its projects," said Golden West Customer Services Manager Jody Bielmaier.

The project submitted by the Lakota Fund will see the funds used to engage economic development on the Pine Ridge Reservation through small business training, technical assistance and loans.

District 3 Antelope council representative "Whitey" Scott on issues

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Cyril "Whitey" Scott, Rosebud Sioux Tribe council representative from District 3 Antelope has that high energy "thing going on" as they say.

"Whitey" says he was fortunate to get into the trucking business in 1989 hauling livestock and gravel. His mother, the late Mona Shepherd, is known as someone who owned the Maverick Motel in the 1970s and 80s and who worked in social services for many years. His business WP Trucking has been temporary turned over to the management of Roger McMath so that there is no appearance of impropriety or conflict of interest while he is in elected office.

He earned a GED and attended the Rocky Mountain College and studied business management and trucking for a year and a half. When asked what kind of preparation he had that may have motivated him to run for tribal office, he said, "I like to help people of the Rosebud Sioux tribe and to give them the tools for economic development."

With respect to his duties as an RST council representative, "Whitey" appears to understand the Lakota concept of sharing and generosity. He said, "There is some adversity to it. The main challenge is the demand for assistance. We cannot micromanage programs." He also noted that, "The RST grocery store that is scheduled for construction is going to be a tremendous help to the tribe."

Cyril 'Whitey' Scott

Scott also said that with the amount of land that RST has in trust, some 988 thousand acres, there has to be some way to use it for irrigation, farming, ranching and an ethanol plant.

He would like to see the tribe invest in a feedlot and maybe even do its own butchering and cattle sales.

One of Scott's greater concerns this day was the fact that the RST judicial system is in need of additional public defenders. He noted that there are an adequate number of prosecutors, but there is a need to hire more public defenders in order to afford due process for offenders who find themselves without adequate legal counsel. He said, "We need to re-visit the budget and hire more. With their work load someone isn't going get their due process. In addition to serving on the RST judicial committee, Scott also serves on the land and natural committee, and sits on the social service committee.

Commenting about the satisfaction he derives from serving on the RST council, Scott said, "When it comes to helping people, I wake up and say yesterday I helped someone overcome a problem that they thought they couldn't settle. I set a goal of helping at least five people each day."

On the council floor, Scott noted, "We have overcome some hurdles. You don't hear of any bickering or fighting. We are all looking for the same things. We are all doing the best job with the means we have."

Scott also spoke of the recent paycheck to RST from the Rosebud Casino that was somewhat lower than usual and said, "I don't believe one person can turn it around. We need a management team. We need stronger marketing and customer service needs to be improved.

Finally, Scott there is a need for continuing economic development as well as funds for refurbishing houses. Community cleanup should be an ongoing activity, all year long, he said.

Scott was not willing to offer any commitment about tribal elections in the fall, except to say that he greatly enjoys helping people and they have come to expect that from him.

Elder mentors nurture Rapid City students

RAPID CITY (AP) - Gertrude Hutchinson's gentle touch on a shoulder was all it took to bring Heath Peneauxs attention back to his teacher's civics lesson.

After sharing a brief, hushed conversation with Peneaux, Hutchinson, an elder mentor in Central High Schools Lakolkiciyapi classroom (pronounced la-coal-key-chee-ya-pee), moved on to watch other students work while the teacher, Robert Cook, continued his lesson.

Looking down at blank notebooks, Richard Gerry, 75, whispered to a pair of students, ``You need to take notes.''

During a closing quiz, Lucille Runsafter, another elder mentor, stood in front of a cluster of students reminding them not to look at each others papers.

Now in its fourth year, the Lakolkiciyapi Room targets incoming freshmen identified as low achieving but with higher abilities. Primarily American Indians, the students spend half of each day for one semester in the classroom for their core classes (English, social studies, science and math). The programs goal is to improve student attendance and reduce drop-out rates by giving them the advantage of a smaller classroom experience in the large high school and introducing elements of Lakota culture.

Last spring, an elder-mentor program was introduced in the classroom as another method to help students form a connection with school.

About 12 percent of the Rapid City School Districts 13,000 students are Indian, but only about one-fourth of the 242 students who started the ninth grade four years ago will graduate from high school this spring, according to the Red Stone Education Group. Consultants John Haas and Mitchell Stone are supervising the districts office of Indian Education.

About 17 percent of Central High Schools 2,200 students are American Indian.

Mentoring was one of the first areas examined as an intervention to help keep kids in school, Stone said.

``Its so simple,'' Haas said.

Theres a common misperception that todays kids have lost their values and strayed from their families, but that isnt true when it comes to elders, he said.

``No matter what race, kids always respect elders,'' he said. The mentors have a calming effect on the classroom and develop bonds with the students.

The program was originally intended to build out-of-school relationships, but it is working effectively in the classroom, Stone said. In fact, teachers in other classrooms at Central and other schools in the district are all clamoring for mentors.

``We could use 50 more,'' Stone said.

Centrals principal Pat Jones is pleased with the program.

The people that we have here now are wonderful mentors to the students,'' Jones said. ``Theyre very positive role models, and they are very serious about our kids getting an education.''

Jones said that having the mentors in the school makes a difference for the entire school.

``They come down and eat lunch in the commons, and theyll stand outside after school and help keep an eye on things,'' he said.

The mentors, who are retirees, spend as much time as they can in the classroom. They receive a small, tax-free stipend that does not interfere with their Social Security.

Gerry spends about four hours each morning at Central.

``Its about the best thing I ever did in my life,'' Gerry, a retired construction and steel worker, said. His image as a grandfather is very important. The kids pay attention when he tells them to behave, he said.

`Hutchinson and Runsafter visit the afternoon class two to three times a week.

``They're our uncis (grandmothers),'' Lisa Good Iron said. ``They give us advice and tell us what not to do. It helps to have them here.''

``They want us to get our work done and hand it in on time,'' Heath said. ``They give good advice and help us and stuff like that.''

A solid family or even a grandmother is something many of the students in the class lack, the elders said.

Runsafter said the students need someone to set expectations for them.

``Its very important,'' she said.

``The power of the grandparent is not something to take lightly. They are very good at what they do, and theyre very good for our kids,'' Jones said.

Gerry would like to see more retirees become involved in the program and discover the pleasure he has found in working with the students.

``If we get enough people interested that love children and being around them and would sacrifice their free time. ... We need more people. Its real important for the kids,'' Gerry said.

Woman sentenced to 14 years for role in drug ring

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ A woman accused in connection with a major cocaine ring on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation have been sentenced to 14 years in federal prison.

Jean Merrival, 36, was sentenced Thursday in U.S. District Court in Rapid City.

In October, she pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute a controlled substance.

Merrival will be on supervised release for five years after she is released from prison.

In October, Merrival testified in the trial of co-defendants Geraldine Blue Bird, Colin Spotted Elk, Marvella Richards, Flint Thomas Red Feather and Rusty Richards. They were convicted and face at least 10 years in prison when they are sentenced.

Seventeen people were indicted in the investigation of the drug ring. Most pleaded guilty, and several testified against the ringleaders.

Authorities said the drug ring made at least $1 million by selling more than 20 kilograms of cocaine since 2002.

Prenatal care, reduced tobacco use is key to reducing infant mortality rate, which is high in native teens

PIERRE, S.D. – Getting pregnant women to stop smoking and get prenatal care are the keys to reducing infant mortality rates in South Dakota, according to a just-released report. The report is the result of an analysis of the state's infant mortality date by a group of physicians and health officials.

The group was appointed by the Department of Health in response to an infant mortality rate of 8.2 infant deaths per 1,000 live births, well above the national rate of 6.8 deaths. The department's just released 2005 Vital Statistics report shows South Dakota's rate has declined to 7.2 but is still above the national rate.

"We found the infant mortality rate was six times higher for moms who received no prenatal care than for those mothers who got prenatal care in the first trimester. And for the neonatal period, from birth to 27 days, the rate was eight times higher for mothers who received no prenatal care," said Doneen Hollingsworth, Secretary of Health. "The numbers clearly show that early and regular prenatal care improves pregnancy and health outcomes for both the mother and child."

Hollingsworth said the post-neonatal infant mortality rate was also significantly higher among women who smoked during pregnancy. Women who were younger than 19, had not finished high school, were American Indian, or lived in a frontier county also had higher infant mortality rates.

The group made the following specific recommendations to meet South Dakota's Health 2010 goal of reducing the state's infant mortality rate to 6.0:

*Develop an education campaign to help women identify pregnancy signs and risks and emphasize the importance of getting prenatal care and not smoking. The "I Didn't Know" campaign is expected to launch in the next few weeks;

*Establish a training program to help doctors diagnose critically ill children and emphasize the importance of prenatal care and quitting tobacco for pregnant women;

*Enhance the relationship between the Northern Plains Tribal Healthy Start program and state programs;

*Work with the South Dakota Trauma System Steering Committee to improve medical response for sick and injured infants in the state's rural and frontier counties; and

*Strengthen existing services for teens and young mothers.

In addition to Department of Health staff, the members of the work group included Dr. Ed Mailoux, Sioux Valley Clinic pediatrician; Dr. Jeffrey Boyle, Sioux Valley Clinic obstetrician/gynecologist; Dr. Larry Fenton, Sanford School of Medicine USD Pediatrics Department Chair and neonatologist; Dr. Nanci Van Peursem, Coteau Des Prairies Clinic, Sisseton; and Willeen Druley, Aberdeen Area Indian Health Service women's health consultant.

For a detailed data and additional information about the recommended activities, view the group's full report on the Department of Health's website at http://www.state.sd.us/doh.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am sorry for writing again, but I have to ask you a question. I am so tired and I think I am in trouble.

I really don't know what to do. I'm just stressed out and I don't know who the father is and I'm kinda feeling bad about that. I just wanted to know if you have any idea who it is.

I am just worried. Thank you.

Worried

Dear Worried:

It looks to me that the father is a junior - that is, named after his father and young.

There is no lecture that goes along with this - you already know the moral of the story.

Dear Anna,

I am a 34-year old Lakota woman. I have been in two long-term relationships; both relationships ended because the men couldn't behave in a good way. I have been single for three years, and I want to be with an Indian man; but I am seriously considering "shopping" for a non-Indian because I can't seem to find any respectable Indian men on the reservation - except the married ones.

Why is this? Where are the good men? Why are so many men so messed up?

Do you see a Indian man in my future?

Gonna Give Up

Dear Gonna Give Up:

Of course there are good, clean, sober, spiritual men on the reservation. You are correct though, most of those are taken.

There are many reasons that statistically the good sober women, who are educating themselves or are educated, are the leaders in programs and the community, and are successfully raising their children or have raised their children far out number the men.

Oppression and depression, lack of economic opportunity on the reservation, co-dependency, adult children of alcoholic parents, and indulgent women (they allow men to treat them badly and in the case of their adult sons mask and enable bad behaviors) are the obvious reasons behind a large number of chaotic men.

We all know the obvious answer - TREATMENT - on a mass scale for the adult men, and counseling and life-coaching, and a strengthening (educating) of the cultural heritage with emphasis of the Traditional Ways (inipi's and ceremonies) particularly among the young boys and men can turn this around especially when combined with strong women who won't put up with, for any reason, bad abusive behavior.

It sounds simple enough, but it is a long-term huge undertaking to rectify the damages conceived in genocide and implemented with alcohol and drugs as tools of destruction of a total race.

Take heart.

Women across the reservation and some strong men, combined with many men of medicine, are slowly creating a healing path for the Lakota children and adults.

The destructive past combined with today's tough gang-like mentality, degenerative television, hard-case music, and immediate gratification society make this job bigger and tougher than it has ever been.

A western culture that centers on purely physical values (i.e.:breast implants, women as total sex objects, casual sex for recreation and power through intimidation of both money and physical prowess) demonstrates a country with a society of low self-esteem.

I do see an Indian man in your immediate future.

He lives in Rapid City, originates from the Pine Ridge Reservation (somewhere near Kyle), has several children from three past relationships, is currently completing his formal education (completing his bachelors at the same time as beginning to accrue credits for his master's degree) and is clean, sober, handsome and charming.

He is probably in his early 40s. He is concerned with the health of his people, and works in social reform and raising the consciousness of the youth.

You will be with him by next September.

Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

My mom and dad have raised about 27 children. Nine of them are their birth children with the rest mostly being related. All the children (now adults, except two), are doing well, and work hard and are good people. Now that mom and dad are getting older we are all fighting about taking care of them, and everything else that we can fight about.

We are not getting along.

What do you see?

It makes my mom cry when she sees how much we fight.

Will we ever get along?

Sick of fighting

Dear Sick of fighting:

No. You will never all get along.

There are petty jealousies and also a very strong fear that somebody will get something more than somebody else will.

Combined with that there is a lot of anger over who has the control.

I do see most of you resolving these issues, or putting them aside, by calling several family meetings, stating that it is recognized that you don't get along, but deciding to be rational adults rather than insecure teen-age mentality siblings.

It will be all right.

Your mom and dad are quite healthy right now, they have quite a long time to live, they are quite capable of taking care of themselves right now, and quit worrying over who is going to get their life-insurance, property, house, barn and horses.

It may be 20 years before any of that is an issue.

They are fine.

You guys have 20 years to grow up.

Good luck on your journey!

Easy Sage bread and commodity pizza!

A River of Recipes is a collection of Native American Recipes from tribes across North America.

Some of the recipes provide new and different ways to prepare USDA commodities, in addition to traditional recipes. Traditional recipes include bison recipes, blue corn recipes, and traditional breads.

Most of these recipes make use of USDA's commodities that are provided to recipients who participate in the Food Distribution Program on Indian Reservations. The cook book can be found at: http://www.fns.usda.gov/fdd/recipes/hhp/fdpir-cookbk_river1.pdf.

Most of the time when a recipe calls for certain spices, those spices can be found at dollar stores for 50 cents. Like nutmeg, cinnamon, sage, ground onions, paprika, and there are great substitutions we share next week.

Wild Sage Bread

Makes 16 servings
1 package dry yeast
1 tablespoon sugar
2 teaspoons crushed dried sage
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon baking soda
2½ cups all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons egg mix + ¼ cup water
(or 1 egg)
1 cup cottage cheese
1 tablespoon melted shortening

1. Preheat oven to 375ºF.
2. In a large bowl, combine yeast, sugar, and water. Let stand until foamy.
3. Add oil to yeast mixture. Gradually stir in nonfat dry milk, salt, and enough of the flour to make the dough stiff enough to pull away from the edges of the bowl.
4. On floured surface, knead dough 2-4 minutes, until smooth and elastic. Cover dough and let rest for 10 minutes.
5. Roll dough in 12 x 7 inch rectangle. Roll up from narrow end to form loaf and pinch edges to seal.
6. Place loaf in greased 8½ x 4½ inch glass loaf pan and cover.
7. Fill a large shallow pan half full with boiling water on counter top. Place baking sheet over pan of boiling water.
8. Set covered bread dough on baking sheet and let dough rise 20 minutes or until doubled in size.
9. Bake in 375ºF oven for 25 minutes or until golden brown.
10. Remove loaf from pan and cool on rack. Slice with serrated knife to serve.

Baked Scrambled Eggs Supreme

Makes 4 servings
½ cup green bell pepper, diced
2 green onions, sliced
½ pound sausage
1 cup water
2 cup instant nonfat dry milk + 1 cup water (or 1 cup nonfat milk)
¾ cup egg mix + 1½ cups water
(or 6 eggs)
½ cup grated cheese

1. Preheat oven to 375ºF.
2. In non-stick pan, brown bell pepper and green onions using cooking spray. Set aside.
3. Cook sausage in skillet until crumbly. Pour out excess grease. Mix with bell peppers and onions.
4. Prepare egg mix using 1 cup of milk and 1 cup of water; mix thoroughly.
5. Add egg mixture to sausage mixture and mix well.
6. Pour in 8 x 8 inch glass baking dish that has been sprayed with nonstick cooking spray. Top with grated cheese.
7. Bake at 375ºF, turning once or twice until cooked thoroughly.

You can also add salsa, bacon bits, diced mushrooms, white onions in place of green onions, cut up diced pork, etc.

Commodity Cheese Pizza

Makes 8 pieces of pizza
3 cups baking mix (see page 22)
¼ cup water
½ can (15.5 ounce) can spaghetti sauce
2 cups grated cheese

You can add cooked ground beef, sausage, or ham; onion, green pepper, mushrooms.

1. Combine baking mix and water. Pat dough mixture with greased hands onto a greased pizza pan or cookie sheet.
2. Pour sauce over crust. Sprinkle with cheese and optional toppings.
3. Bake at 450ºF until golden.

Soft Oatmeal Cookies (with Raisins)

Makes 3 dozen cookies
1 package (15 ounces) raisins
½ cup evaporated milk
2/3 cup shortening
1 tablespoon vinegar or lemon juice
1 cup brown sugar
½ cup sugar
¼ cup egg mix + ½ cup water
(or 2 eggs beaten)
½ teaspoon vanilla
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
2 cups oats

Preheat oven to 350ºF, ptu raisins in pan and cover with water. Heat on high until boiling. Drain and cool. Beat envaporated milk, shortening, vinegar or lemon juice, sugars, eggs, and vanilla well. Add dry ingredients and gently stir in raisens. Drop by spoonful on cooke sheet. Bake at 350 for 10 to 12 minutes.

KILI Radio installs new equipment, on air Monday

PORCUPINE BUTTE - KILI Radio is quickly gearing up and will be on the "airwaves" on Monday, Jan. 29 at 100,000 watts of power. It will also be on in Rapid City at 88.7 FM after all of its equipment has been installed. Last week KILI had the necessary equipment delivered to get it back up and running, including new analog and digital transmitters, a new antenna and a 350 foot transmission line and transmitter.

Melanie Janis, station manager, said they will work out the programming and the contracts they have already will continue. She is asking all volunteer deejays to fill out an application and training dates will be set for the deejays to get training for the new equipment. She encourages former deejays to fill out applications also.

'Tribes dodge a bullet' on complaints to U. S. courts

Law firm files for dismissal of complaints

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - In December 2006, the law firm of McCarter and English of New York City filed two complaints against the federal government; one in the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia and the Federal Court of Claims on behalf of four Lakota, Nakota and Dakota tribes.

The complaints were to have been confined to tribal trust lawsuits, but as it turned out, that was not the case. The suit contained a host of issues which if allowed to proceed forward would have severely damaged tribal sovereignty and treaties.

The complaints as originally filed were based upon a Dec. 31 deadline which was explained to the Oglala Sioux, Rosebud Sioux, Cheyenne River Sioux and the Standing Rock Sioux.

The Oglala Sioux tribe and the Rosebud Sioux tribal councils had actually passed resolutions approving the services of McCarter and English who offered to file the two complaints pro bono or free of charge. The two tribes also subsequently rescinded their previous council actions and were to have sent notices to the law firm to withdraw the complaints and remove their names. The Cheyenne River Sioux also took the same action and the Standing Rock Sioux were to follow suit.

A. Gay Kingman, a tribal consultant with the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association was very active in helping to sort out the sometimes complicated issue.

Kingman highlighted the issues which the complaints as filed would have wrongly asked for. The complaint asked for the dissolution of the federal government's trust responsibility relative to the land and also asked that the plaintiffs land be converted to fee status and that would have subjected tribal lands to state taxation. The Lakota tribes named in the complaint were horrified to find out that the suit also wrongly tied the Black Hills land claim and Docket 74-A and 74-B to the tribal trust filing which asks for a proper accounting of tribal trust assets.

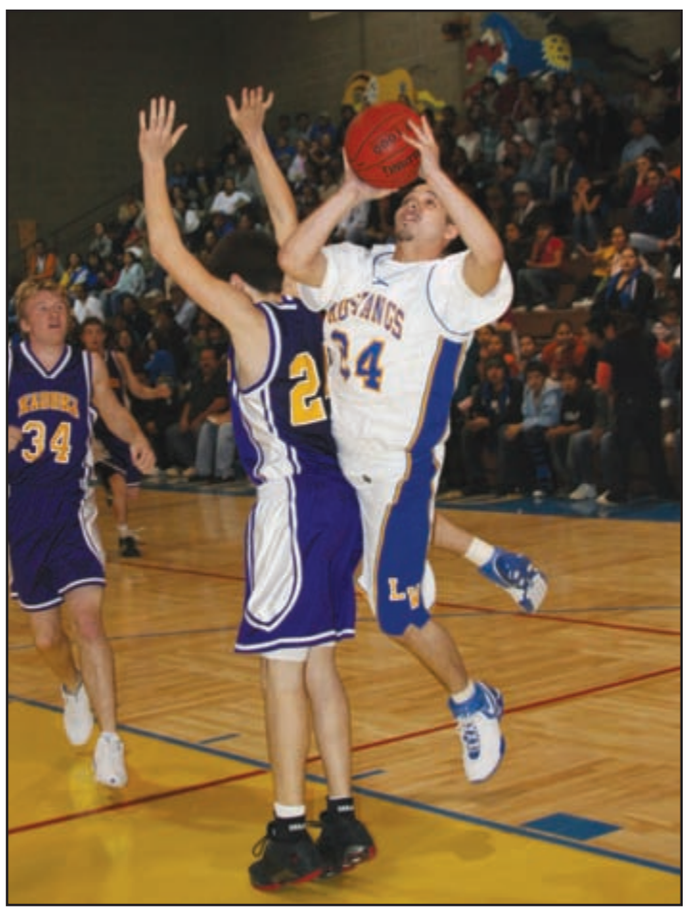
Mustangs, Lady Thorpes make history with No. 1 state ranking

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

KYLE/PINE RIDGE - When the state basketball rankings came out on Tuesday, the Little Wound Mustangs had moved from number two to the number one position. With two more wins this week, home wins over Red Cloud and Cheyenne Eagle Butte and top ranked Madison's loss to St. Thomas More in the Hanson Classic in Mitchell on Saturday night before a standing room only crowd in the Corn Palace, the Mustangs eased into the top spot with a 11-0 record.

While the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes kept winning, four games in six days to move their record to 14-0, the number one ranked Milbank Lady Bulldogs were beaten by West Central Saturday night. Milbank's loss coupled with Pine Ridge's four wins put Pine Ridge into the top spot, just ahead of the undefeated number two ranked Bennett County Lady Warriors.

"In thinking back, I can't remember a time when two Pine Ridge Reservation teams were ranked number one at the same time," said Roger Toland, sports editor of the Rapid City Journal, "we have seen Pine Ridge, Little Wound and Red Cloud ranked in previous years but not at the same time."



Pine Ridge girls opened the season with some votes in the pre-season poll, nowhere near the top ten though. With their 30 point win over Cheyenne Eagle Butte for the Lakota Nation championship and undefeated record with several strong wins, the Lady Thorpes earned the number two ranking in the first regular season poll and remained at number two until the top ranked Milbank team lost last weekend..

"You know I can't remember when Pine Ridge girls were ever ranked number one before," said Tiny DeCory, "I have been digging through Doni's scrapbooks but I haven't found a thing, I thought they might have been ranked number one in 1988 but I can't really remember."

The Lady Thorpes have gone to State seven times

The controversial document which the plaintiffs did not see before it was filed in Washington, DC goes on to ask that the historical 1851 and 1868 Fort Laramie Treaties be declared unconstitutional. Furthermore, it makes claims without the knowledge or permission of the plaintiff tribes as well as the Crow Creek, Flandreau, Sisseton and the Sioux Nation. The document also contains a host of inaccurate historical facts about the Sioux as well as the fact that it duplicates the tribal claim as filed by the separate tribes on their own behalf.

Attorney Mario Gonzalez issued a memorandum addressing the filing on January 12 to Oglala Sioux tribal president, John Steele, and it further revealed the problems with the legal complaint as assembled by McCarter and English. His memorandum was equally as helpful in sorting out the issue for Lakota people as it originally was unclear what the December 31 deadline was all about.

Gene Scheiman and Rob Bernstein of the McCarter and English law firm sent out an email notice on Friday, Jan. 19 in which they filed a Notice of Dismissal and Electronic Filing Confirmation in the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia and were in the process of preparing the same request to Court of Federal Claims.

The notice to the courts lists the four plaintiff tribes as well as the Sioux Nation of Indians (aka "the Oceti Sakowin Oyate.") and named Dirk Kempthorne, Secretary of the Interior, the United States government and John Snow, the Secretary of the Treasury as defendants.

An attempt to reach attorney Daniel Sheehan was made, however, he was in California and did not return our call by press time.

Sheehan acted as a go-between when the original offer of pro-bono services by McCarter and English was made to several tribes.

Sheehan will be contacted in the future to see if he might comment on the issue.

KILI Radio

Staff onboard includes Melanie Janis, station manager; Tom Casey, development director; Mitch Wisecarver, programming; and Derrick Janis, production.

The station was struck by lightening during a storm last April and it suffered considerable damage. KILI apparently has been missed by many people who have voiced their concern about its being absent from the airwaves. It has been an invaluable service in announcing school closings, community events, local and national news, not to mention the excellent contemporary, western and Native American music format.

Since April, the station had been broadcasting with 260 watts and its range was quite limited, however, it also could be heard over the internet.

In April KILI embarked upon its fund raising efforts to replace the damaged equipment and was ultimately successful in applying to the Department of Commerce for a Public Telecommunications Facilities grant for new equipment. They also applied for a grant for a digital converter from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The state also provided matching funds so that KILI could purchase a generator.

Foster grandparent program still going strong, more needed

HOT SPRINGS - Grand parents in the classroom has been a win win situation for many, many years for both the student and the foster grandparent.

The Black Hills Foster Grandparent program is still going strong at Pine Ridge, Oglala, Porcupine, Kyle, Wounded Knee, Wanblee and Martin. In addition, the program at Rosebud, St. Francis, and Spring Creek is off to a good start. There are a total of 32 Foster Grandparent volunteers, including eight foster grandpa volunteers, who are helping children for 20 or more hours per week at schools and head starts in their areas. The program covers western South Dakota and half of the grandparents work on reservations schools and the rest in the Hills area.

Louie White Horse works with students at Martin Grade School in reading and Dora Hernandez works at Wolf Creek School. The foster grandparents work mostly with children in elementary schools and the head start centers.

Deb Russell, foster grandparent coordinator, of Hot Springs said the program has been working successfully for schools and grand parents for many years. Elaine Quiver, formerly coordinated the program at Pine Ridge for 27 years, before she retired last spring. Two years ago, the program started on the Rosebud reservation.

Program monies come from the federal funds of the Corporation for National and Community Service, said Russell.

She said they try to meet with the foster grandparents once a month and say in close contact with them. She emphasized that the stipend they receive is just that, a stipend, and by law the stipend can not be counted against their eligibility regarding other benefits such as rent and other income. This may be an issue regarding grandparents who are interested in volunteering as a foster grandparent.

Foster grandparents volunteer at schools, head starts and non profit early childhood organizations helping children get ready for school and helping children succeed in school.

"They are always under the supervision of a teacher and provide an extra set of hands to keep the children going in the right direction," Russell said.

"Many of the foster grandparents have delighted in teaching children the Lakota language and culture and are amazed at how fast they start using the Lakota words," she said.

Foster grandparents receive a stipend for the hours they volunteer and many sites where they volunteer help arrange for bus transportation to help them get to and from their site. Some of the other benefits volunteers receive are paid holidays, earned sick leave, earned vacation leave and paid training. The benefits the children receive are immeasurable.

Everyone wins with this program said Russell.

The grandparents get hugs and smiles from the children, the school sees progress and growth in children's academic performance and the children have another adult to praise their success.

Russell encourages more grandparents to participate in the volunteer program. "More foster grandparents are always welcome to offer smiles, encouragement, and wisdom to the children," she said.

Russell said the program has four foster grandparents from Pine Ridge, Dora Hernandez, Mae Clifford, Dorothy Kocer, and Sophia Yellow Boy and others at Wanblee, Kyle and Martin. Dora and Mae work at Wolf Creek and the others at the Head Start at Pine Ridge. Mary Rose Dillon and Louie White Horse, both work at Martin Grade School. Another long standing grandparent is Edna Short Horn at Little Wound Elementary.

At Wanblee, there is Ben Long Soldier and Matilda Little Killer who volunteer at the head start center.

Belinda Ready, elementary principal at Martin, said Dillon and White Horse were 'awesome' and she said they are good resources for the teachers and her. "They can visit with the kids culturally. If I have questions I can go to them. They are good role models for the kids.

It seems like they have always been here. Louie works in the library, he reads to the kids or have kids read to him, he checks the hallway," Ready said.

"Mary Rose works in the preschool room and they are both pretty valuable assets," she said.

White Horse, 78, said he has been with the program a long time. He had worked with the Bennett County School system before becoming a part of the program and has enjoyed his work since. "I help with the kids in reading by listening or reading to them," he said. He promotes reading and said he also learns from the kids, from interacting with them in the library and on lunch room duty. Most of the kids call him grandpa.

"The reason I wanted to do something for the kids, is to give back to the school," he said. His son Wyatt attended Bennett County Schools and went on Augustana College and now works for the Indian Health Service in Wanblee.

He wanted his son to attend a school that will provide a sound academic educationa and achieving that, enjoys giving back to the school.

White Horse attended Rosebud Boarding School in Mission, where a whole lot wasn't based on academics but life skills.

He then entered the Marines when he was 17 and later in life attended Oglala Lakota College for three years.

He received a honorary high school diploma from Little Wound High School and said that was one of the nicest honors he has received.

White Horse encourages grandparents to be a part of the education system with the foster grandparent program.

The next meeting for the foster grandparents will be hosted by Martin foster grandparents on Feb. 7.

If you are 60 years of age or more and would like more information or would like to enroll in the Foster Grandparent Program, please all Darbi Cram at the toll free number of 1-877-613-4016 in Sturgis or Deb Russell at 745-3408 in Hot Springs.

winning it all in 1989 and earning the runner-up trophy in 04 while the boys have been ranked number one and have gone to State 18 times earning championships in 1936, 1962 and 1987.

"Over the years I've followed the Mustangs and I don't think they have ever been ranked number one," said Marcel Bull Bear, a Kyle resident and long time Little Wound supporter. "it is not that Little Wound hasn't had good teams but the polls and the rankings seem to favor East River teams."

Little Wound boys have been to State five times finishing no higher than fourth and finishing seventh last year. The Lady Mustangs made their only appearance at State in 2003.

"Our goal has been to do well in the regular season, make it back to state this year and win the state championship," said Jamie Feather Earring, Little Wound head coach, "we peaked just at the right time last year and earned the trip to state, it was great experience and this year we are set to put that experience to work on a championship trophy."

Little Wound opened the preseason poll at number eight and with their undefeated record and beating last year's state champ and preseason number one St. Thomas More in the LNI championship game earned a number two ranking in the first regular season poll. The Mustangs stayed at number two until number one ranked Madison went down to the Cavaliers on Saturday.

Little Wound hosts St. Francis on Thursday and plays Beresford in the Canton Classic on Saturday while Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes travel to Todd County on Thursday, to St. Francis on Jan. 30 and to Bennett County on Feb.1 for a match-up of the number one and two teams in the state.

RST Liquor Commission grants casino and fuel plaza liquor license renewal

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST Liquor Commission held a public hearing at the RST Veterans Affairs building on Thursday, Jan. 18 from 1 to 5:30. The purpose was the pending renewal of the liquor license application from the Rosebud Casino and the Casino Fuel Plaza.

Glenn Yellow Eagle was present on behalf of both businesses and apparently provided appropriate documentation to the commission, including figures on liquor sales. The Rosebud Casino at present is advertising for a general manager, while the Casino Fuel Plaza is advertising for an assistant manager position. Alma Valandra is serving in an acting capacity as the general manager.

The public was invited to provide testimony either for the license renewal or to voice their opinion as to why it should be denied. The hearing was not carried over KINI FM as was the case previously and impacted the number of people who testified at the hearing. Tillie Black Bear of the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society apparently presented testimony against the issuance as she had in previous hearings.

According to Anthony Bordeaux, Jr. the Liquor Commission, after hearing public testimony, went to into a private session after 5:15 p.m. and made the decision to renew the liquor licenses of both outlets. Three members of the commission were present for the hearing and voted 2-0-1 in favor of the renewal.

According to Bordeaux, Jr. the RST Liquor Commission was to conduct an on-site visit to the Rosebud Casino on Tuesday. On Wednesday, Bordeaux, Jr. reported that the casino and fuel plaza had passed their on-site inspection.

The purpose of the visit was to ensure that there was proper inventory controls in place at both businesses with appropriate documentation to account for the liquor products on the shelves.

The members of the RST Liquor Commission are John Charles Arcoren, Theresa Stead, Pete Reynolds and Anthony Bordeaux, Jr. They meet the first Wednesday of each month.

Recognizing early symptoms can prevent diabetes from further developing

By Javier H. Alegree
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux Tribe Diabetes Prevention Program will be launching a very comprehensive awareness campaign within the first quarter of 2007. The focus of these new strategic efforts will be not only on the general public and youth of our reservation, but more directed toward the medical service providers industry in order to start testing and diagnosing pre-diabetes.

The goal with identifying pre-diabetes is to prevent the onset of the disease from ever happening.

How do you know if you need testing for pre-diabetes? Good question. The truth is you may not know. It's our human nature to wait until our body produces a pain or ache before we visit the doctor's office. With pre-diabetes, noticeable symptoms like frequent thirst and urination may not occur until the disease has progressed and is already causing considerable damage to your body. Most Type 2 diabetics don't have symptoms because the onset of diabetes is very slow.

Your physician can determine if you have pre-diabetes with two common tests. The fasting plasma glucose test and the oral glucose tolerance test. Both require an overnight fast.

The good news is that you can likely prevent diabetes with early detection and proper care (diet and exercise). It has been proven in a recent study that if pre-diabetes is diagnosed; you will have a 58 percent higher chance of never developing the disease.

Don't wait 'til it hurts. Ask your doctor about pre-diabetes and have your blood sugar checked every six months if you are at risk

For additional information on pre-diabetes and/or early symptoms, visit us on the web at www.rstdpp.org or call us at 605-747-4600.

Bush addresses NCLB, Congress to act on meth help for Indian country

We are not quite seeing a "lame duck" administration, but with the Democrats now in control of the Congressional agenda, it will be difficult for the President of the United States to accomplish many of his remaining goals. It is well known that each administration will attempt to tailor some of the domestic and foreign initiatives to meet the parties' priorities.

With the 2008 elections coming up next year, it will be interesting to see how the Democrats, in turn, create programs that will be of benefit to the general population, as well as Lakota people.

On Tuesday, Jan. 23, President George Bush gave his State of the Union message, which is his annual address to Congress of his agenda.

For certain, any changes or modifications in the No Child Left Behind Act will impact tribal schools which are already struggling with its mandates. Dr. Richard Bordeaux of Todd County Schools was recently quoted as saying that even for those bigger schools that are achieving adequate yearly progress, the standards could get tougher for them. At that point there may be an outcry to modify the legislation.

Bush called for expanding and continuation of the NCLB Act, however, past criticism of the law includes the fact that funding was never fully committed to the states as had been anticipated.

The president is also calling for a tax to fund health care costs, but some say that it would not reach the underinsured that really need it.

In fact, it might discourage young workers from seeking work if they had to pay too many taxes. Universal health care is always desirable especially among the underpaid and underinsured.

However, in reality it has never been seriously considered for all Americans, much like they do in Canada and other foreign countries.

The United States is such a rich nation even with us having to pay for a war, that everyone family could have adequate shelter and there would be no homelessness.

For some reason it just never happens even with rising health care costs and the tremendous housing needs right here at home.

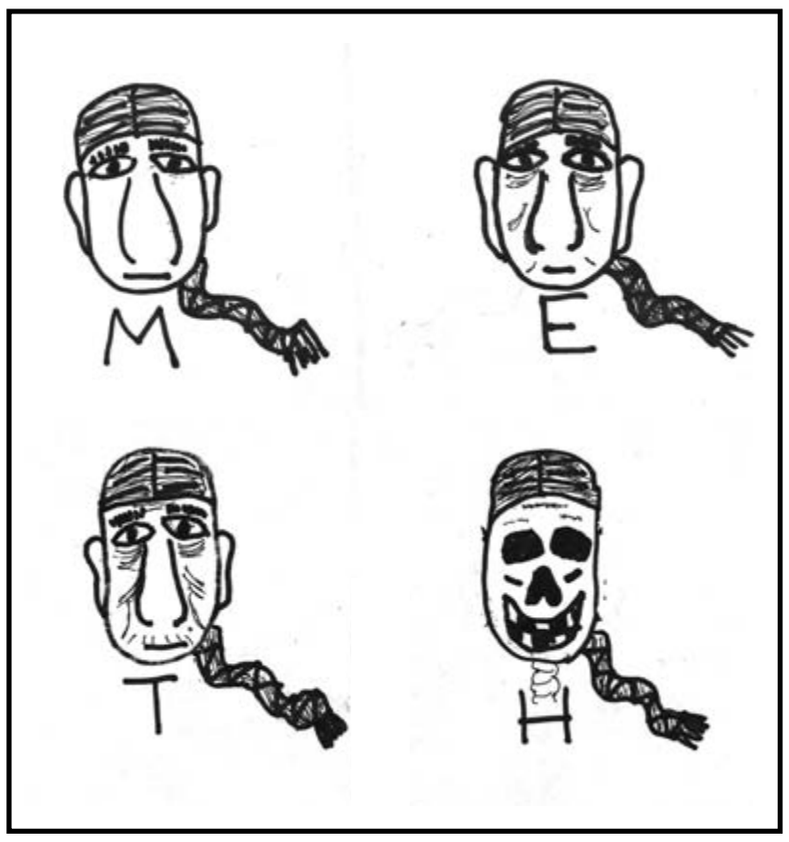
The cost of the Iraq war and the fact that it is becoming increasingly unpopular according to American public opinion will be interesting to see what long term goals continue to be put forth.

The fear used to be that Iraq might become our next "Vietnam" but perhaps a Democratically controlled Congress will alter that view in the next year or so.

Lakota people will continue to send their young men and women to war as we also strive to protect our homeland, but somewhere down the road the end must be in sight.

Congress to act on meth legislation

Meth use is a very big problem in Indian country, we doubt any reservation or community has escaped the terribly consequences this home made drug does to families and to the strength of tribes.



Congress has been addressing this issue this past year on the national level and this month has been looking at four bills aimed at the growing problem in Indian country. Two measures have been designed for tribes and the other two has provisions related to the tribes.

The Native American Methamphetamine Enforcement and Treatment Act is a bill that was introduced this month that will help tribal governments receive federal funding for programs that are already open to states.

The Indian Tribes Methamphetamine Reduction Grants Act is legislation that is sponsored by Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.). McCain has been vocal about meth abuse and the rising rates of crime on reservations on the national level.

Another legislation calls for the Department of Justice to report on the drug in Indian country. And still yet another measure will require the Department of Health and Human Service to report on numbers of pregnant and parenting women in need of meth treatment. But the big issue will be finding money to so these pieces of legislations can be funded.

It's a problem that will not go away and our legislators within our tribes need to take the bull by the horns and support the people who are crafting laws to protect our children.

Empowering Yourself

'This ain't no restaurant'

By Patty Pourier

It is not hard for me to make a New Years resolution. I usually have the same ones every year.

Lose 25 pounds, get in shape, eat healthier, take more time to read spiritual books, and get a better prayer life. It is not hard to make them, but it is a bugger to keep them. From statistics, I am not unique. Most of you are just like me.

It is the fourth week of January, and I have exercised one time. You see I wanted to do more, but, I have been busy, plus it was almost 0 degrees all last week, and that is just too cold to walk. Plus I think I have a little arthritis in my right knee, and heel spurs. Plus I am really busy. There is my income tax that is really stressing me. I am really busy at work and one of the people in the office that does a lot of things just quit, so I will be having to cover her job in three weeks. By the time I leave work, I am too tired to go exercise, and promise myself I will rest tonight, and get up early tomorrow to hit it!

Because I have worked hard all day, I am way to tired to stop and get the healthy groceries I have on my "healthy eating grocery list" I printed off the Internet. Besides its cold outside.

I get home; pop a chicken potpie into the microwave for my husband and I. Then we plop down on the couch, flip on the set and scan with the remote. I pick up my "spiritual book and settle in. I read a couple lines, get interested in a TV. Show and before I know it, I have dozed off, and its bedtime.

As I trudge upstairs to bed, I resolve to set my alarm clock early, telling myself that I will start tomorrow on my healthy living plan. I will get up early and exercise, pack fruits and veggies to snack on and my new life will be on its way. I will have new resolve tomorrow morning, when I am rested. I set the alarm for 5:30 a.m. and go to sleep.

BEEP, BEEP, BEEP, its still dark. My groggy mind musters a thought, "Why is that thing going off already". I hit doze and roll over …repeating the scenario six more times. I finally look at the neon digits, and its 6:30 a.m.! I crawl out of bed knowing I have no time to exercise this morning and resolve to do it after work tonight. I will have to pray while I drive to work.

This scenario has repeated itself. as described, day after day now for 24 days in January.

This may not seem that bad, but in the long run, it could kill me. The more stress I have the higher my chances of high blood pressure. The more I weigh, the less energy I have, and the harder it is on the arthritis in my knees and my chances for diabetes increases. The more fatty foods I eat the chances of some cancers are raised. Not to mention the low self-esteem that comes from not being able to fit into my clothes every morning and having my pants hurt by afternoon.

I heard a spiritual person explain the above desire and failure to achieve results This world is instant in so many ways, with internet, microwaves and credit cards, we get used to wanting it one minute and getting it the next.

Life changes take discipline and commitment. They usually come slowly. They take effort, this ain't no restaurant where we can order something up and have it served to us.

In both my spiritual and physical life I want to eat right, exercise and stay focused on the goal, not the immediate, shallow, gratification of some TV show or an extra half hour of sleep.

That show or half hour of sleep will make not difference in the scheme of my life, but an hour of prayer or growth through literature, or a half hour of exercise a day could make me actually live longer, with a higher quality of life.

Clemency for Tim Caffrey

Dear Editor:

I have been searching for the right words to comment on the Tim Caffrey case and to address the question of whether clemency after 26 years served in the South Dakota State Penitentiary for the shooting death of his adoptive father, is deserved. There are no perfect words. All I can do is respectfully explain why I believe Tim Caffrey did not receive justice at his trial in 1981; why he is not receiving it now; and why the people of South Dakota are not provided justice if Tim Caffrey is kept behind bars for life.

Taking a life is a brutal, abominable act. It warrants strong discouragement through severe punishment. Tim has received that strong punishment as he continues to serve a life sentence for manslaughter, a sentence that is now going into its 27th year.

While a long prison sentence is an appropriate strong deterrent to the crime of taking a life, what also seems to result in cases like this is that we stop at the door of the act itself. We seldom give any time or thought to the root cause or to real equity in meting out prison sentences to the guilty. South Dakota Attorney General Larry Long, who tried the case in 1981 as a first time prosecuting attorney, said in an article in the Sioux Falls Argus Leader on Jan. 7, 2007, "Part of the reason we send people to the penitentiary for life is to make a statement about what they did. Part of it is simply punishment. We don't let everybody out who has been rehabilitated."

I say, "Then why call it rehabilitation?"

Tim Caffrey is Oglala Lakota. Born on the Pine Ridge Reservation and adopted by a non Indian couple, when he was 11 months old, he was raised in Martin and lived there his entire life until being found guilty for the crime of killing his father when he was just 17.

Since 1981, he has been imprisoned in a state that is one of only two to hand out life sentences for manslaughter. Caffrey received a life sentence, in great part, because the judge who tried his case did not realize that the life sentence he was handing down was NOT mandatory. Caffrey was tried and incarcerated as an adult even though he was only 17 at the time of the crime - for which he should have been tried as a minor.

Tim was not a hardened criminal. He was a troubled, confused, and abused teenage boy. This tragic event was his first and only criminal offense.

What is also tragic is that Caffrey has had virtually no contact with his own people or culture. According to people who knew him and knew the Caffrey family, Tim was not allowed contact with blood relatives. He was told he had to "choose between his white family and his Lakota ancestry." This same person recalls the peculiar habits of the Caffrey family and how, as a 14 year old teenager, Tim had an 8 p.m. bedtime. It was said he was commonly slapped, insulted, humiliated, bullied and intimidated. He did not grow up in a normal, loving, nurturing home. What he did experience was a distorted and brutal relationship, particularly with his alcoholic non Indian father. Eye witnesses say Tim was often hit and said have abusive things like "The biggest mistake we ever made was when we adopted you, you stupid Indian."

In every instance where I've been in contact with people who knew Tim and his father, Lakota or non Indian, said Tim's father was "an ignorant bully," and that Tim was a smart, sweet, and good kid. Many of these people still live in Martin. Some live half a nation away but feel just as strongly today about Tim's case as they did in 1981.

They say Tim was a good kid. Some, who haven't lived in South Dakota in decades but who were told of the Argus Leader story about Tim, have vivid, personal memories of Tim and of how his father treated him.

They feel strongly, as many of us do, that enough time has been served.

Let us not forget; Tim Caffrey was also victimized.

An abusive, alcoholic father victimized him. He was victimized by racial prejudice expressed by the one person whom he should have been able to trust and rely on most. He was victimized by a pitifully inadequate, ambivalent defense. Even today, he is victimized by an Attorney General who uses inflammatory language when discussing the case.

For some strange reason, Larry Long has a powerful chokehold on this case and a tragically dated, distorted belief that he is saving South Dakota from a cold-blooded killer. Fact: In 25 years, Larry Long

Border towns have been a bittersweet experience for Lakota, horror stories or good stories

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I and my son traveled to the reservation border town of Valentine, Neb. last Friday to conduct some business and do a little shopping before we returned home "up on the reservation" as the white folks are fond of saying. My son was actually born at the Cherry Country hospital, so he calls it his hometown.

On the way home my son counted 105 cars in a stretch of 30 minutes. It was after work around 6:30 p.m. and maybe some of that traffic was headed for the casino to play bingo. I couldn't figure out what the occasion was, but it made me think of what that kind of traffic flow may have been about. I guess I will never know.

Over the years, we have been guilty of patronizing the town's businesses for many of our insurance, dental or shopping needs. We are like most Lakota families, in that we combine our business and personal shopping with some leisure time. We occasionally go to the movies or spend time in the park, especially during the autumn and late summers. In Lakota, when speaking of movies, the word is "wa'bazo" and it makes reference to the act of something being shown. I remember my mom saying that to me when I was a teen and headed up town in the evening. I used to interpret her as meaning that I was cleaned up and was going to show myself off. It's hilarious to think I was wrong all those years

Valentine and the Rosebud reservation didn't always get along the way we do now. During the "sixties" there were times when the high school football and basketball teams had conflicts which spilled over the respective communities. There was a rumor that the two towns quit playing each other for a time in sports, but it was one that I never checked out.

There were also stories of folks drinking in the bars until the wee hours of the night and other rowdy behavior. We all have relatives who may have had other experiences in Valentine; one of my brothers recounted a time when he was chased by the county sheriff to the state line. What a hilarious image. This past summer I saw a tourist with a big SUV pulling a new trailer and it pulled onto the street just ahead of an oncoming sheriff's car. Despite the closeness, the tourist was not pulled over and I thought he should have been. In my view, it is a little risky and wreckless to pull into a street when the law is coming and especially if they might have to slow down to accommodate you.

I drove around looking for the sheriff's car that was on the roadway and when he returned to his office, I stopped in and asked him about the incident which perhaps he didn't see and maybe it was not an incident at all. I may have seen something from a perspective that didn't border on illegal at all. I was willing to concede that. Anyway, I don't know if the officer in the office was the one in the car, but I asked him if that car had "67" plates on it and the driver was a Lakota man, would he have pulled him over. He said no and he didn't see anything illegal.

I was willing to settle for that explanation, but I simply wanted to hear it from the officer as to whether or not I would be treated any different if I were to have pulled onto the road way like that.

Valentine as a border town, I have to admit, has been relatively free of racial incidences and any kind of widespread tensions with Sicangu people. I think the business and community people had to have sat down together years ago, maybe in the 1970s and decided that they needed Lakota patrons to thrive.

There's no way to estimate reliably the economic impact of the Rosebud reservation community on the city of Valentine. I don't believe that our presence has caused the social fabric of the community to suffer. I do believe that we have spent millions of personal income and tribal government finances to support the creation of new business and the improvement of others.

I guess the whole scenario as it evolved is good for the city, but not necessarily good for Rosebud. We have been discussing the idea for years of building a tribal strip mall or perhaps attracting more enterprises such as Walmart or other big names businesses. We still have that need, so that we can offer our own people the opportunity to spend at home and use the money to reinvest in small business development. We have the critical mass of people to support new enterprises by our young entrepreneurs who may want to start a new business.

Actually, I am looking forward to shopping at our new tribal grocery store when it becomes reality next summer. Reportedly, it will offer more healthy food alternatives and fresh produce. That will be a great service for our young families as they learn to realign their thinking processes as to what healthy eating is. Being healthy is a learned process that could take years to adjust to.

Border towns have been a bittersweet experience for Lakota people as our experiences have ranged from horror stories to those who have acted civil to our people. I see a need for such towns to give back to Lakota people if they are to continue to see our patronage. They could contribute more to our youth and elderly projects and even do more advertising with us. I noticed that some will advertise with us and some will not and, yet, others simply take it for granted that we will stop in and continue to eat their food or purchase their vehicles without giving back as we are taught in the Lakota community.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

'Which one was it,' a mother asked

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

Perhaps there should be a new recruitment motto for the military personnel that are about to become George W's "new surge army." It might be "This is not just a job, it's an occupation."

When President Bush proclaimed "Mission Accomplished" he was partly correct because the actual ground war, the invasion, was over. Something new happened after that and it should have been classified immediately as a "guerilla war," not as an insurgency. It was a guerilla war in every sense of the word.

Iraq has become a country occupied by a foreign army that is under siege by an independent group of guerillas intent on forcing it to abandon their country. But the twist is that the guerillas are also intent on killing each other in what has become a sectarian war. If the guerillas would stop fighting each other and turn a united front against the army they consider to be the occupiers, things would be much worse for the American army.

The American soldiers and marines are caught in the middle of not only a guerilla war, but also a sectarian civil war. They are situated on the lands of a people who do not want them to be there. They are also considered to be infidels and crusaders by the Muslim insurgents. If they are to bring democracy to a people yearning for a theocracy after years of living under a dictatorship, their stay in Iraq will be a long one and will, in all likelihood, end in failure.

Nineteen young Americans lost their lives to this futility only last week.

Sunday, a one-year anniversary memorial service was held at Kyle on the Pine Ridge Reservation for a young Lakota Marine named Brett Lundstrom who lost his life to a sniper in Iraq.

Brett was young and did not consider the politics or the sectarianism of the fighting in Iraq. He was a warrior sent to Iraq to bring a new democracy to a country that did not want it. Did he die in vain? We would hope that a life lost in a cause, whether it is noble or ignoble, is not a death to be disrespected. After all, the intent of the soldier or marine sent into combat is to carry out the orders of the president of the United States of America. If the orders are wrongful, it is not the fault of the soldier.

Hundreds of Lakota turned out for the memorial because they do honor their heroes. A Lakota memorial service means many things. It is first a time to honor a fallen warrior. It is second, a time to remember. And third, it is a time to release the spirit of the warrior so that it may continue its journey to the Spirit World.

In the traditional Lakota way of life a family had a small, leather pouch in which a lock of hair from the fallen was kept so that the spirit of the dead would be with the family to help it through its year of mourning. At the end of that year the pouch is opened and the spirit is freed to continue its journey.

The chart of those who died in Iraq places South Dakota second in the number of deaths in combat per capita. Vermont leads the list. Three Lakota have died in Iraq. The first woman to die there was a Hopi Indian woman from Arizona. Among the dead you will find several Navajo Indians and several from the Indian nations of Oklahoma. The people of Indian country have always considered themselves one, so this brings the war a little closer for all of us.

Brett Lundstrom wasn't just a faceless soldier to me. His Lakota mother, Doyla Under Baggage, was my foster daughter and Brett spent many happy hours laughing and playing in my house long before he became a Marine. Death is the final arbiter, and like many others, it has drastically impacted the way I feel about Iraq.

Doyla Under Baggage, a wonderful woman who picked herself up from a life of poverty and despair to become a good human being and a caring and loving mother to Brett, grew up in my home district, Pejuta Haka, on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

Perhaps she will never understand the politics behind the "insurgency" in Iraq. She said, "Before Brett left for Iraq he told me he had a dream that he was going to be shot. He was scared. He didn't think he was coming back." He was 22-years-old. Standing in the wings is his brother Army Specialist Eddy Lundstrom, who just turned 22. He has been to Iraq once and is scheduled to head back once more. He also was in Iraq when his brother died.

While driving home on the reservation Doyla got a phone call from a neighbor. Cell phones don't always work in these wide-open spaces. She knew something was wrong so she called her ex-husband in Detroit. When he answered the phone he was crying and she begged him to be calm. She said, "Which one was it?" She said, "That was the worst, not knowing which one it was and knowing that I had just lost a son."

Brett, whose Lakota name was Wanbli Ishnala, Lone Eagle, is now free to continue his journey to the Spirit World. The highest award he received was to be honored by his own people.

And several other mothers got that call this week and I am sure that at least one of them asked, "Which one was it?"

How many others will die in the name of an "Occupation?"

has never spoken directly to Tim Caffrey. Fact: Larry Long does not possess the professional medical credentials to make the claim that Tim is a "psychotic cold-blooded killer". Fact: Larry Long has never had Tim Caffrey evaluated by psychiatric professionals who could make that determination, or likely, once again disprove it, as they did back in 1981. Fact: Disproportionate sentencing is evidenced here. Tim Caffrey received a much stiffer sentence than perpetrators of crimes equal to or even more heinous than Tim's.

In a biography of Cherokee Medicine Man, Rolling Thunder, written by John Boyd in 1973, are the following words from a friend and contemporary of Rolling Thunder, Tuscarora Medicine Man, Mad Bear. His wisdom is timeless and timely. He says,

"If you have a sense of opposition - that is, if you feel contempt for others - you're in a perfect position to receive their contempt. The idea is not to be a receiver. You people have such anger and fear and contempt for your so-called criminals that your crime rate goes up and up. Your society has a high crime rate because it is in a perfect position to receive crime. You should be working WITH these people, not in opposition to them. The idea is to have contempt for crime, not for people. It is a mistake to think of any group or person as an opponent, because when you do, that's what the group or person will become to you. It's more useful to think of every other person as another YOU - to think of every individual as a representative of the universe. Every person is plugged into the whole works. Nobody is outside it or affects it any less than anybody else. Every person is a model of life, so the true nature of a person is the nature of life. I don't care how low you fall or how high you climb, economically or academically or anything else, you still represent the whole thing. Even the worst criminal in life imprisonment sitting in his cell - the center of him is the same seed, the seed of the whole creation." -- Mad Bear

When I read this passage, I thought about Tim Caffrey. It is time for the State of South Dakota to think about Tim too, to show compassion, and to recognize that Tim has already paid his debt to society.

It's time that we recognize that this tragic crime would likely never have occurred if there had not been an abusive and alcoholic parent, but rather, the kind of father figure that Arnie Berkeland has truly become as Tim's nearly sole visitor and mentor during Tim's 26 years in prison. If Arnie Berkeland and two parole boards feel that Tim Caffrey deserves another chance; we should too.

Tim's crime did not go unpunished. He has spent 26 years remembering and repenting for what he did. He grieves for his father. He recognizes the irreparable damage he caused his family. But he has also matured to be a self-reflective, caring, and humble man. He only wants a chance to be a good citizen too.

It's time to heal. It's time to grant Tim Caffrey his freedom.

Mustangs, Lady Thorpes keep rolling, all the way to number one

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

KYLE/PINE RIDGE - It was a tough week for the Lady Thorpes, they had four games in six days including a home game on Friday night and a road game on Saturday on the other side of the state, Pine Ridge kept rolling with easy wins over Little Wound and Lead-Deadwood and tough wins over Custer and Dakota Valley.

On Friday night, Pine Ridge squeaked by Custer 51-47, last year's LNI champ, a team who had just knocked off 5th ranked St. Thomas More earlier in the week. The Lady Thorpes opened with a 16-11 first quarter lead as Christian Janis, Lacey Weston and Robin Webber all hit two baskets each but Custer came right back to lead it 27-25 at the half as Breona Ziolkowski and Megan Turner lit it up. Pine Ridge held a one point lead after three and relied on Janis, Weston and Keisha Brewer in the fourth to get the hard fought win.

Weston finished with 16 points, seven rebounds and four assists, Webber hit two threes and 14 points, Janis helped with 12 points, four rebounds and two steals while Brewer added nine points and 12 rebounds. Ziolkowski knocked down 23 points to lead all scorers and Turner finished with two threes and 10 points.

Pine Ridge survived a long cross state trip and a tenacious Dakota Valley team to pick up their 14th straight win 55-51 at the Dakota Valley Classic on Saturday in North Sioux City. Down 16-8 at one point, the Lady Thorpes scrapped their way back for the win.

"All of our big girls really contributed," said Tiny DeCory, "Keisha Brewer, Lacey Weston and Saudia Tasso all helped us against Dakota Valley's big front line."

Before a standing room only crowd on Thursday night in Kyle, the number two ranked Mustangs shut down the number seven ranked Red Cloud Crusaders 79-63. In an earlier game Red Cloud had taken the lead on the Mustangs in the second and third periods only to have Little Wound come on strong in the fourth period to win at LNI; Thursday, Little Wound started strong going up 16-11 as Rich Big Boy led the way with strong play in the post scoring seven early points. Brice Hornbeck hit 10 first half points to help Little Wound to a 32-18 halftime lead. The teams played even up in the second half with Big Boy's dominating presence in the lane a big factor leading the Mustangs with 24 points and 14 rebounds. Hornbeck chipped in 19 points and eight boards while Shilo Pierce added 15 points and TJ McCajuley 10. Christian McGhee led Red Cloud with 17 points, five rebounds and three assists, Billy Scott added 16 points and seven rebounds while David Giago helped with 14 points and five rebounds.

Little Wound came back on Saturday night and thumped Cheyenne Eagle Butte 87-54 and on Tuesday knocked off Kadoka 119-64 for their 12th win of the season. McCauley hit for 21 while Big Boy and Hornbeck added 12 each as Little Wound turned a 45-19 halftime lead into a 87-54 win.

Tuesday Kadoka stayed close to Little Wound in the first quarter down only 24-22 but the Mustangs opened up a 47-31 halftime lead and scored 40 points in the fourth for a 19-64 win. Hornbeck finished with 22 points and 10 rebounds while McCauley knocked down 37points hitting 15 field goals and going 7 for 7 on the free throw line. Ty Lunderman helped with 14 points and Shilo Pierce who came off the bench Tuesday night finished with 13. Little Wound is 12-0 and hosts St. Francis on Thursday and travels to the Canton Classic on Saturday to play Beresford.

After being out-rebounded 42-27 against Little Wound on Thursday night, Red Cloud bounced back on Saturday against Alliance, a school three times the size of Red Cloud and ran to a 77-61 win for their 10th of the year. Red Cloud spent Friday working on rebounding so when they went up against a front line of 6'5", 6'5" and 6'3" they could hold their own. They not only held their own but out-rebounded the Bulldogs 35-16 and used their usual balanced scoring attack with four players in double figures to knock off the 9-4 larger Alliance team.

Lester Gotheridge, a 6'3" forward led the way for the Crusaders with 22 points and 12 rebounds while Christian McGhee helped with 17 points, seven assists and five rebounds, Scott added 12 points and eight boards and Giago chipped in 11 points. For Red Cloud it was their 10th win of the season against two losses; Red Cloud travels to RC Christian on Thursday and Todd County the following Thursday.

Car buying tips

By David Leftwich
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Businesses from across the country have again sent prospectors into Indian Country to relieve unsuspecting natives of their treasures.

As most natives are receiving their income tax returns this time of year, dealerships have descended upon the reservations like the plague, and sent thousands of fliers proclaiming their wishes to help us get into a new vehicle. Like the gold miners of old they have only one intension to relieve you of your possessions, and line their pockets while laughing all the way to the bank.

Be wary of these people who are your friends but once a year and entice you with trinkets and are never heard from again.

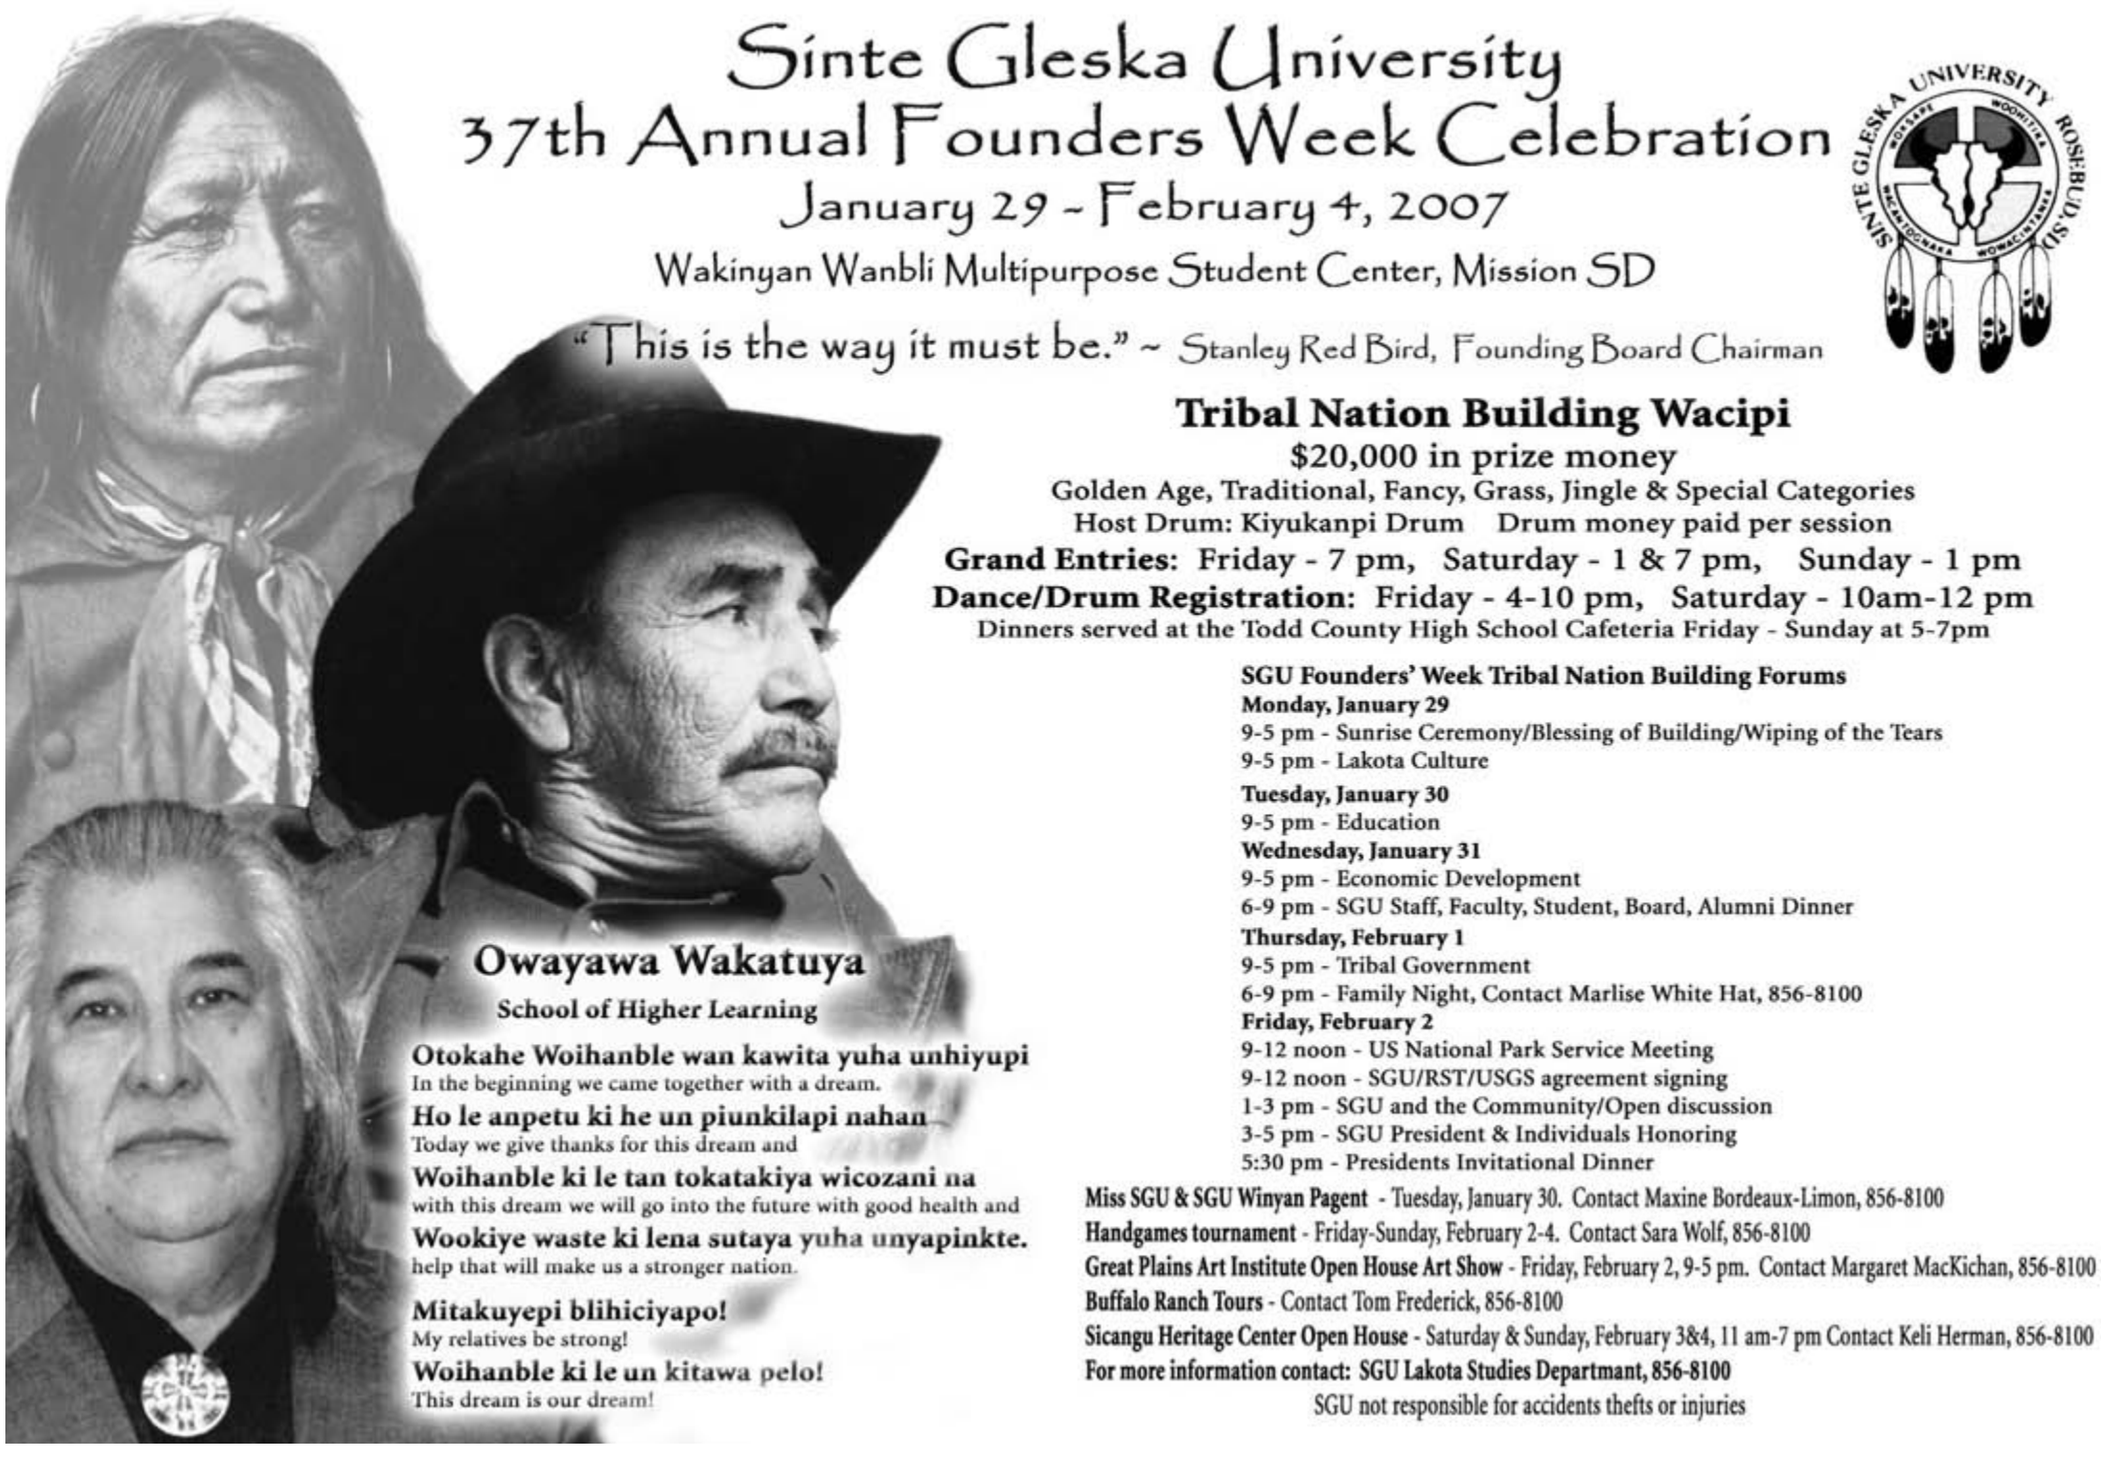
Stories abound of persons buying bingo packets, grills, meals, and promises of wanting to help the poor Indian folks. Just fill out this credit application and we'll take care of everything! Sound familiar?

I've been in the sales business for a short time and can't begin to count the number of horror stories of trading posts that have taken Natives for a ride. I would like to again stress that you be wise with your wealth when it comes to purchasing a vehicle.

This same trickery is often practiced on young naïve soldiers, who suddenly find themselves with money and little or no experience on auto matters. My first sergeant, whose job it was to watch over his troops once told us this rule of thumb:

For buying cars outright, fairly and realistically speaking you should get 1,000 miles for every $100 you pay for a car. If you bought a car for $200 dollars you should only expect to get it to last another 2,000 miles. $1500 =15,000 miles.

Anything over and above is gravy and most cars will go above and beyond this.



If you finance an auto, it should last longer than the loan. There is nothing worse than paying for a vehicle that doesn't work. Do not over extend your self with payments you can't afford. Remember the longer you finance, the more it will cost you in the end. What happens most often is when people go to trade, they still owe more than the vehicle is worth. Putting more money down and financing over a shorter period will help immensely.

You may want to consider and extended service contract if the factory warranty has run out or near its end. Know your budget and stick to it.

You'll want to deal with a reputable dealer and with a salesman you know and trust. It is your money and most wasicu want to make it theirs. If it sounds to good to be true, it probably is.

I would like to say pilamaya to all who support the Lakota sales representatives.

Tribal chairmen elect new leadership for the great plains region

ABERDEEN - The Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association held their first quarterly meeting for 2007 in Aberdeen on Jan. 11.

Roger Trudell, secretary for the association, called the meeting to order and a quorume was established with 11 chairman present and five absent.

The following Tribes were represented: Joseph Brings Plenty, Chairman, Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe; Lester Thompson, Chairman, Crow Creek Sioux Tribe; Michael Jandreau, Chairman, Lower Brule Sioux Tribe; John Yellow Bird Steele, President, Oglala Sioux Tribe; Robert Cournoyer, Chairman, Yankton Sioux Tribe; Myra Pearson, Chairperson, Spirit Lake Tribe; Ron His Horse Is Thunder, Chairman, Standing Rock Sioux Tribe; Mitchell Parker, Chairman, Omaha Tribe; Roger Trudell, Chairman, Santee Sioux Tribe, Alex Taylor, Ponca Tribe and Matthew Pilcher, Chairman, Winnebago Tribe.

The first matter of business was the election of officers. Ron His Horse Is Thunder is the newly elected chairman of the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association. The vice chairman is Robert Cournoyer chairman, Yankton Sioux Tribe. Secretary is Chairman Mitchell Parker, Omaha Tribe and Treasurer is Joseph Brings Plenty, chairman of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe. Roger Trudell, chairman of Santee declined to run again.

The new officers of the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association will have a challenging responsibility to protect and advocate for the 16 Sovereign Indian Nations in North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska. The Association was founded on the principles of unity, cooperation and respect for the member Tribes, "to preserve and maintain our homelands, defend our Tribes inherent rights under our Treaties… and to uniformly promote the common welfare, culture and sovereignty of the Indian People of the Tribes of the Great Plains."

Chairman Ron His Horse Is Thunder brings an impressive resume to the position of Chairman of the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association. He is a member of the Hunkpapa Band of the Lakota Sioux Nation. His Lakota name is Tasunka Wakinyan-His Horse Is Thunder. He majored in criminal justice at Sitting Bull College before earning a degree in political science at Black Hills State University and a law degree from the University of South Dakota. His Horse Is Thunder has worked in private law practice and with Indian education. Past responsibilities included raising funds for all tribal colleges throughout the United States through the American Indian College Fund and as president of the Sitting Bull College on the Standing Rock Reservation. He was elected chairman of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe in September 2005.

In addition to holding elections, the Chairman addressed some priorities for the New Year. They took official action on the 2007 Appropriations and developed a Regional Position Budget to submit to Congress. The budget includes opposing the decrease of program funds with an increase in management funding, especially when the population living on the Reservation in the Great Plains has increased by 8.4 % up to 163,565. According to the BIA Labor Force Report for 2005, over 85% of the Indian population are living below the poverty level. The Tribal Leadership said this is not acceptable and passed a comprehensive Budget for 2007. The Association called for restoring funds for Range management, Irrigation Projects and Water Management funds. Due to the drug infiltration and increased meth production, funding for Law Enforcement, Tribal Courts and Human Resources must be increased.

Resolutions of support for funding for the United Sioux Tribes Development Corporation and United Tribes Technical College were passed. The GPTCA will hold

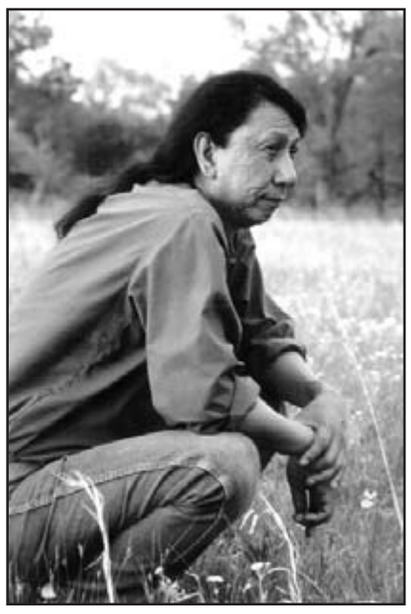
OLC to host Wounded Knee exhibit



KYLE - Oglala Lakota College will host Arthur Short Bull's "Wounded Knee Exhibit" from Jan. 15 through Feb. 23, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The exhibit will be on display at OLC's Historical Center at the Piya Wiconi administrative center.

Arthur Short Bull's great-grandfather was Grant Short Bull, brother of He Dog and uncle to Amos Bad Heart Bull. In 1930, the last of the old men who rode with Crazy Horse, He Dog and Grant Short Bull were two of Marie Sandoz's sources of her work on the life of the great Lakota leader.

Arthur has long been recognized for an ongoing series on Wounded Knee and images of the Ghost Dance.

Short Bull (Oglala Lakota) is a recipient of the First Peoples Fund 2006 Cultural Capital Grant. Through his grant project he has been able to use his series of paintings and poems as a vehicle to promote Lakota Culture and history.

Arthur Short Bull's exhibit will be featured at Oglala Lakota College's historical center beginning Jan. 15

First Peoples Fund Program Director, Nico Strange Owl recently said that "Arthur Short Bull is a brilliant watercolorist whose vision strives to capture the spirit of his Oglala heritage. His work is a stark contract of beauty and reality that strikes at your heart."

Short Bull hopes to educate and remind us of Native history, especially in regards to Wounded Knee. Short Bull's watercolors focus on mourning or death, sometimes accompanied by brief poems that are a memorial to the nearly 150 Lakotans who fled during the Wounded Knee massacre only to die from exposure to the freezing temperature.

Short Bull grew up on the Pine Ridge Reservation near the site of the mass grave.

Marilyn Pourier, OLC's Development Director stated, "My hope is that this exhibit will attract the attention of the teachers on the reservation and in the surrounding schools and they will bring their students to see the Wounded Knee Exhibit as part of the teaching of the history of the Lakota people. The exhibit is a work of art and Mr. Short Bull has created some very emotional pieces to represent this period of our history."

The Historical Center contains historical photographs and artwork displays that chronicle the history of the Oglala Lakota from the early 1800's through the Wounded Knee Massacre in 1890. An audiotape of this history provides greater meaning to the displays that you will see.

KINI FM radio on the Rosebud celebrates 29 years with powwow

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - Last Friday evening marked the "kick-off" of KINI FM's radio's 29th birthday celebration. A Christian concert was scheduled for the evening at Digmann Hall where all of the weekend activities were held, however, it started later than anticipated.

On Saturday evening Richard Iyotte, station manager at KINI FM radio said, "I didn't think there would be that many people there. There were a lot of families at the powwow. I want to thank the singers, Sandra Black Bear and Chris Eagle Hawk among others. We have a whole year to plan the next one." Several people pledged donations to next year's 30th birthday celebration.

"Eyapapa" Pat Bad Hand of Two Strike kept things lively while waiting for the evening session. He was assisted by former KINI deejay Archie Little as the singers sang several warm up songs in anticipation of the evening session. Pat occasionally teased those in the audience and "name dropped" as new people entered the hall. He said, "When you come through that door, leave all your troubles and negative thoughts behind and have good time this evening."

Phillip Little Thunder, Father John Hatcher and Richard Iyotte led the evening grand entry during KINI radio's 29th birthday celebration powwow at Digmann Hall last weekend. The weather could not dampen the enthusiasm and spirit of all as the first annual celebration was a success.

The atmosphere at Digmann Hall was quite informal and as more people arrived by the time dinner was over the crowd was estimated around 100 people.

The evening session was even more fun as it commenced with the grand entry. Richard Iyotte carried the KINI staff, while Father Hatcher, Mike Valandra, Mike Cross, Perry DeCory, Robert Doody and other KINI personnel and former deejays joined in the procession, while also accompanied by the Sicangu royalty in attendance. Brittany Gunhammer, Miss Milk's Camp, Michael Garnieux, Ms. SGU "Wikoskalaka" and Ms. Antelope.

After the invocation was delivered by Father Hatcher, Mike Cross offered a traditional prayer in Lakota and a veteran's song was sung. Pat invited Richard Iyottte to speak and he thanked all of the deejays and station managers over the years that made KINI possible. The crowd was responsive and congratulatory in their response.

RST council representatives Robert Moore of Antelope community and Patsy Valandra of St. Francis community were invited to speak to the crowd and congratulated them on their 29th birthday celebration.

The Ironwood singers arrived and set up their drum and the fun began. Father Hatcher, Richard Iyotte, Mike Valandra and Mike Cross were given women's shawls and they had to dance a fancy shawl dance, much to the delight of the crowd. Upon completion of the song, the fancy dancers were given a wild ovation.

The host drum was Crazy Horse from Oglala, along with Eagle Voice, Eagle Creek, Red Leaf, Lecala Wakan, the Ironwood drum, Leca Wakan, Lakota Tribe, and Kiyukanpi.

Crazy Horse composed a new "KINI Song" and Chad White Feather created a stir with his Randy Wood hand drum song.

the next meeting on Feb 20 to address the 2008 Appropriations. This will give the Tribes and their staff necessary time to analyze the Presidents Budget which will be released on Feb. 5. Recommendations will be finalized for the next GPTCA meeting and a consensus paper for 2008 will be submitted to Congress.

Other matters of business included directing the Regional Director, Mr. Bill Benjamin, to off-set costs for the GPTCA and the staff. The Association took action to delegate Chairman Mike Jandreau and Chairman Ron His Horse Is Thunder to the National Budget Advisory Council. Alternates are Chairman Robert Cournoyer and Chairman Roger Trudell.

The Tribal Chairman discussed the lack of Consultation by the Department of Interior and Bureau of Indian Affairs. The most recent examples were creating the new Division of Justice Services and placing Tribal Courts in with Law Enforcement under a separate line of authority than other BIA funded programs. Tribes were not appropriately consulted about this and the reworking of regulations governing Secretarial elections without including tribal input.

After much discussion of the law suit filed by the firm of McCarter and English and Attorney Daniel Sheehan regarding tribal trust funds and asserting land claims including a demand for dissolution of the trust and return of all lands in fee simple title, the association took action to set up a meeting of the Sioux Nation so it could be discussed with all tribes and people. An official resolution was passed to inform the courts that the tribal nations were unaware of this representation in the law suit and to request it not be advanced.

Appreciation is extended to the former officers of the association who served admirably on behalf of the Great Plains Tribes: Harold Frazier, former Chairman of the GPTCA and Roger Trudell, Secretary of the GPTCA.

The Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association represents the 16 Tribes in the states of North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I've been interested in your column for awhile now, it seems all the older women are talking about your articles and the information you gave from your look into their lives and problems.

I don't have a specific question really, I was just wondering if maybe you can tell me a some things about my future? I am very confused and lost at my age, I'm not a good decision maker or anything like that.

I'm only fifteen years old after all and I have the whole life ahead of me but it would be nice to get a heads up before it all comes so fast I can barely catch my breath.

I struggle sometimes with decisions I need to make and the things I need to say and do. I'm hearing one thing from someone and another from someone else about what I should or shouldn't do, how I should or shouldn't be, and whether I want to be the bad person or the good one. I want to make my family happy but not if it costs me what makes me happy. It's nice to see them smile upon me but I'm different from them in many ways they cannot understand.

They are stubborn and very firm about what they think, sometimes they find it hard to embrace my perspective's, if not tolerate them. I am the disappoint-er. But I look around this rez I live on and I know they have me so wrong, I am nothing but an angel compared to what some people do here. I'm not battling drugs, I'm not running with a gang, I myself am not living with abuse, and I do not have a bad reputation for doing anything.

I get good grades in school and I'm not one to start the fights and I'm not disrespectful to my elders. I actually have a lot more respect for things than people may think, and I DO have a good head on my shoulders. I know I do. I maybe be wrong in a sense of what people believe to be wrong. I'll admit I do smoke weed and drink sometimes but that's it, nothing more than a few laughs and giggles with some of my friends.

And I am never in the face of danger or deceit when I'm doing either- I'm perfectly safe among my homies. Back onto the topic, I was just wondering how to handle my ways? I have no idea what to do, I want to be accepted for who I am...weed is a part of my life, my friends are a part of my life, my family is a part of my life, I like drinking with my friends, and on some days I am without weed and some days I am with my mary jane...and either or can be very good days for me. There are a lot of people pointing out what will happen in my future or can happen and I'm just wandering around looking for some words of comfort or a word of advice.

If you can maybe help me out a little and let me know what is going to go on in the future for me please tell me. I imagine things I want to happen but I can't really focus enough, nor do I consciously know, what can happen..whether it's next week, next month, or in a few years. If you can tell me something that provides solace for me then that would really help me out.

I hope you think about what I wrote, it would mean a lot to me...

Pilamaya,
Searching for the answer

Dear Searching:

Many things have happened to you in your young life; your perspective and approach is that of a person much older than the years you tell me you have. You are someone very special, and you have the potential to be anything you want, and the insight to take you to individual greatness.

The responsibility of your life ultimately and always rests with you. Your parents and family members that offer advice and work hard to make sure that you have a good life and come out okay are the guides and the teachers.

They help instill values and protect you from rough outside influence. They desire for you a good life (Wiconi) and so all of their decisions for you and about you are based on their relationship and understanding of what a good life for you would be.

Parents and relatives usually draw on their own experience for the guidance they offer. Many times that is limited in its scope and understanding.

On the earth at this time there are many young ones that are especially gifted, talented, and will sooner or later have great spiritual understanding. They have been given to the earth, or to the people, because we need them to help guide us through the times that are coming.

They are old souls, or grandmas and grandfathers with special potential. Many of these children will make it finally, in understanding and compassion, to be who they really are. Many will be lost along the way; specifically to drugs, alcohol and complete loss of identity within those abuses.

Life is a journey to self-realization. Within that journey there are bumps, challenges, and blocks that provide the individual with opportunities to enhance their understanding of alternative approaches (broadening of perspective) or can shorten or even end the journey. Self realization is not an entirely selfish, self-absorbed journey.

The quest for self is found only one place - and that is inside the relationship with the Creator. Inside of that, each person will find the path for completion through love, compassion, respect and thankfulness. Each person that combines their own God-given talents with the power of the Creator will over come any and all that is presented to them in a good way. They will learn and know of their own responsibility to others; to help enhance all others lives, and to, somehow at the same time, honor the life-force within them-self enough to be tolerant and loving and appreciative to the Creator for the life they have been given.

You are one of the special ones. You have the potential for individual greatness. You are asking the questions at 15 that most people ask at 40. Please understand, you do know yourself better than any family member could ever know you.

Please understand that each family member means well. Please understand that at your age you can only begin to explore the possibilities of self in this lifetime. Please understand that it is very difficult for a prophet to be a prophet in his home town. Everybody has a very hard time understanding that greatness can appear ordinary; and it is not a matter of earning the right, it is a matter of inherent right.

Education is your biggest ally. There are many approaches to education; including both formal and original. I see you choosing first, formal, and then within the happenings of life, original education.

Original education is personally designed, experiential, and arranged by Providence (God's Design). Original is invaluable; formal helps to make a living and broaden perspective.

Drugs and alcohol? You want me to endorse that behavior? Anything that you do to yourself, that does not settle well, is not well nor good. Moderation in all things, some wise man said...but certainly that does not incorporate such things as heroin or rat poison. We are human beings. We become very stressed out within the normal activities of life, we reach out to erase stress, and we use substances to help to do that.

There is not a condemnation from me for moderation in drugs and alcohol; but neither is there approval. You are very young. It is very easy to lose oneself inside the feeling created by drugs and alcohol. It is very easy to lose direction, and realistic ambition within the haze of substances. No person wants you to suffer the losses associated within that framework of substances. Statistically, I could offer good evidence why creative avoidance of that entire road is preferable than the experience of abuse and recovery. Be smart, be responsible and be open to accept your responsibility for creating the way you will live. Right now, your parents and family are sensitive because of what they see and know: A good percentage of the youth are headed right for under the bridge in our big cities across the nation. They are choosing prison and poverty because they are choosing drugs, alcohol and party, party, party. They think, "it won't happen to me...I won't be like that," but it does happen. Many of your friends will spend many years in misery and addiction because they think that drugs and alcohol are cool. They are addictive. They have a personality and intelligence of their own; they are equal opportunity destroyers.

I see you following the law line of education...starting to pursue the line of education and law...

Then I see you including human relations and behavioral sciences. Are you thinking of a criminal forensic pathologist - doing profiles of criminals. This will lead you to advocacy for the youth; to help them avoid the pathologies that are now so rampant, of crime and criminal minds.

Good luck to you. I will pray for you. You are special and you are blessed, and your parents won't understand you for about another twenty years - so accept that, life your life in a good way, never make a decision you have to lie about or feel bad about and you will succeed.

Dear Anna,

Hi how have you been? I hope all is well. Well I just wanted to ask you a couple questions about me. Will my ex-boyfriend and I ever get back together?

I am I going to be strong if we aren't. How is my high school year looking for me? Am I ever going to find some one as special as him? Take care.

Sincerely Heart Broken

Dear Heart Broken:

Ain't that just the way it is. Let me tell you something that I know - in five years the guy that you so love would be an embarrassment to you.

That is to say, you would be embarrassed to admit you ever even liked him, let alone wished to be with him. Let him go.

He parties too much and unless he changes a lot he doesn't have a very good future. You will have a new boyfriend just before school is out.

He is a good young man and your summer can be filled with fun with him as your choice.

This school year looks pretty good.

I see you deciding to study harder and get good grades, and I see basketball.

Keep playing it makes a difference for you next year. Please change your mind - math is not impossible; a lot of it depends on how good your teacher is. A good math teacher can make math understandable; and once you get the basics, math makes sense.

Please get some help with your math.

It allows you to follow your dream in college.

Good Luck!

Two Rosebud youth die in one week

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Last year, there was great concern over the fact that several Rosebud reservation youth had committed suicide, not to mention those who might have died in vehicles accidents.

The deaths prompted several suicide prevention meetings in the tribal building, at the alcohol treatment center and elsewhere and are continuing.

Community residents, tribal officials and several mental health therapists came together to plan strategy to combat the apparent epidemic.

It is a concern that is evident in other reservation communities and each one is creating ways in which to address the problem.

This year has started off in a similar vein, as Rosebud Law Enforcement Services, Chief Charles Red Crow, released information surrounding a stabbing homicide which occurred on Saturday, Jan. 27 at 3:30 a.m.

The incident happened on the Rosebud Fairground field west of the police department.

The victim was a 15 year old female and two juvenile female suspects are in custody. Red Crow said, "The FBI and the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services are actively investigating…We are still doing interviews."

Red Crow also described the death of another Rosebud youth. He said, "A call came in from a female on a cell phone. She wanted an ambulance. She found her boyfriend hanging in the bathroom.

The EMS and Rosebud police responded and the victim was pronounced deceased on the scene."

The incident occurred on Jan. 24 at 12:15 p.m.

Because of the fact that the victims are juveniles their identity was unable to be revealed by Rosebud Law Enforcement Services.

Red Crow however noted that once an indictment is handed down in the homicide, details of the crime and those involved would be released to the public.

Legislation passes to help backlog of tribal funding

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U. S. House of Representatives passed a Continuing Resolution which will continue to fund the government for the next eight months.

It also funds government programs for fiscal year 2007 going back four months.

The office of Representive Stephanie Herseth in a press release noted, "The Continuing Resolution is a lean bill that holds most programs at their FY 2006 funding levels and strips all "earmarks" from the spending bills that were passed by one or more members of Congress.

Funding for some of South Dakota's most important programs, such as the Lewis and Clark water system, Indian Health Services and the recently authorized Cellulosic Ethanol Loan Guarantee Program will continue into the next fiscal year."

According to A. Gaye Kingman of the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association, the fact that the previous Continuing Resolution had been passed by the Republican controlled Congress allowed the budgets to be carried over without any action on any spending bill. Presumably, after the 2007 fiscal year had progressed four months into its term, this created a backlog of funding and interrupted funding to some tribal programs.

Some of the highlights which directly impact Lakota people include, Indian Health Service, which will receive an increase of $125 million over last year's level and which will fund patient care and prevent any reductions in clinical services.

Head Start will receive an increase of $103 million to help prevent a decrease in Head Start enrollment. There will be an increase of $615 million to help 5.3 million college students pay their college tuition costs.

There will also be an increase of $200 million to assist school districts which serve children with disabilities and special needs.

Veterans health care will see an increase of $3.6 billion to meeting increased health care costs and an anticipated of 325,000 patients.

$125 million will target

Michaud fights through injuries for final go at state wrestling

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Many people know Dave Michaud as Bulldawg the fierce linebacker or the powerful running back in football or as the tenacious wrestler on the mat or the impenetrable backstop on the ball diamond but few know the quiet Pine Ridge High School senior as the academic and 4.0 student or the potential valedictorian of his senior class.

"It has been a pleasure to have Dave in my English classes during the past two years," said Ronda Neugebauer, a teacher at Pine Ridge high school, "he always goes above and beyond for each class and more so he works with the other students to help them through their difficult times."

Michaud went all the way to the state championship match at 160 pounds as a sophomore two years ago and now for the second year in a row injuries may frustrate his goal of winning a state championship.

Last year a neck injury slowed him down in the middle of the year and made it difficult to be competitive at the state meet; this year a shoulder injury from the wrestling meet at Lyman in early January may derail Michaud's goals again.

"We tried to have Bulldawg wrestle at Winner but it lasted 30 seconds, the pain was too much," said Dave Michaud, Pine Ridge wrestling coach and young Dave's father, "after a couple of examinations it looks like he separated his shoulder at Lyman and has a slight tear of his rotator cuff. He'll be able to keep running and lift light weights, we have ordered a shoulder brace for him - he won't wrestle again until regionals in Huron on Feb. 17 and will probably need surgery after state the following week.

Bulldawg will wrestle 189 in Huron even though he has been wrestling at 215 for most of the year. By wrestling at the 215 level, Michaud was able to go up against tougher competition and by moving up other Pine ridge wrestlers were able to participate at the 189 level The most recent wrestling ranking showed Michaud as the number one ranked wrestler at 215 in Class A.

"Injuries are a part of every sport, last year Bulldawg was in the best shape of his life and out of the blue the neck injury derails the season, this year in football and now in wrestling, Bulldawg has overcome a lot," said the elder Michaud.

Bulldawg topped off an outstanding football season with a first team all state award at linebacker and was named 11A All American this year as well.

On the other side of the coin, Bulldawg has carried a 4.0 grade point average through school and is

Boxing advocate brings South Dakota Golden Gloves match to Manderson

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

MANDERSON - Big boxing will soon be coming to the heart of rez in March.

The South Dakota State Golden Gloves Tournament will be held at Manderson at the Wounded Knee School on Saturday, March 10.

Bouts are scheduled to begin at 5 p.m. on Saturday with weigh ins from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m. There will be a junior/novice division, an open men's division and awards will be given to all fighters. All boxers must be registered through the USA Boxing, USA sanctioned.

Chissie Spencer, counselor and activities director at Wounded Knee District School, has been coordinating boxing events in the area for the past ten years. He is currently the regional director for the Golden Gloves for South Dakota and has worked on coordinating the Golden Gloves tournament in March.

Spencer who is Seminole, enjoys coaching and promoting boxing among youth on the reservation. He has helped coordinate the boxing matches during Lakota Nation Invitational in December with teams coming from Sioux Falls, Mclaughlin, Lower Brule, Little Wound School, Hot Springs and Spearfish. There were 26 fights with jackets and t-shirts awarded. Some of the boxing matches were featured on Oglala Lakota College's KOLC television station.

Last year, Spencer's boxing team, Nation of Outlaws made it to the nationals where Josh Steele won Midwest Region Golden Gloves champion for his weight class of 178.

"We have attended junior Olympics, Men's U.S. Open, and also to the Silver Gloves National twice, and for the second year in a row, we made it to the Men's U.S. Open," he said. He averages ten boxers in his team in ages from nine to 25 years old.

the leading candidate to be valedictorian of his class come graduation time. Young Michaud has applied for the Gates Millennium Scholarship and has a good chance to earn one of the top scholarship awards made in Indian Country.

"The Gates would really help me for next year, it would open up the options since it is a full ride," said Bulldawg,"I'll know later on this spring whether they will offer me a scholarship at South Dakota State for football, I'd probably play safety there, I'm not big enough to be a linebacker at the level but the Gates would give me an opportunity to maybe go to the University of Wyoming and walk on with their football team.

Bulldawg has enjoyed journalism and plans to major in journalism in college, he says he likes the news.

"He took a class in journalism and really liked it and is now talking about sports-writing and broadcasting," said Neugebauer, "Dave is partnering with South Dakota Public Broadcasting this spring on a piece, he will be an onsite reporter for a piece to be completed in May."

After 15 years in wrestling, Bulldawg is ready to graduate high school and go to college, to do school and to play football in college, I'm really looking forward to it, he said. I want to play defense, probably safety.

"This year's football season was really frustrating. We had the talent but just couldn't put it together, our team would get intimidated by bigger or off-reservation schools, we really had the talent to do much better than we did," said Bulldawg.

While the rest of the team participates in wrestling meets in Stanley County, Philip and Todd County, Bulldawg will wait for regionals in Huron in mid-February and hopefully state the following week.

"Bulldawg has had the good fortune to have two parents who are involved in education and he has used that support to excel, so many young people fall through the cracks and Dave has been a role model through his willingness to put the hard work into what ever he wants to achieve whether on the playing field or in the classroom," said Melvin Smiley Sierra, Pine Ridge School principal (superintendent), "he is an asset to the school, his family and community and to our nation as a whole."

"Dave is really focused on what he sets as his goals and he makes the teacher want to be a better teacher," added Neugebauer."

"After we made it into the nationals last year, we got notoriety and that notoriety is landing the big match in March."

Spencer grew up in Los Angeles and came to this area in 1994 and has been promoted a sober lifestyle for the past 15 years.

He chose recovery as he didn't want to die or end up in prison. "I watched too many of my family members and what happened to them," he said.

Back in the late 1990s, I put a sign up at the post office and thought I would try it to see the interest and started coaching with one bag hanging from a tree and it took off from there.

His boxing experiences come from his adolescent years and he had a desire to work with kids.

"One of my commitments was to work with kids. Using it as a method to reach them in letting them know that there is some thing else to do," he said.

He said he has never been paid for doing this, he does it to promote the sport and promote alcohol and drug free lifestyles.

Since that time in Kyle, he has coordinated 18 boxing smokers in the areas and more in the Manderson area in the last several years.

He said now they have certified judges and referees that are local. That way they get a fair shot at competing he said.

A smoker comes from the 1930s and 40s, when there would be boxing fights and the arena would be smoke filled, thus smokers. He emphasized a smoker is a boxing match and not a tournament.

"What I am trying to do in promoting boxing is to establish that there is a lot of native guys out there interested in going pro. For them it seems it stops at the amateur level," he said.

He is planning to acquire a South Dakota commission's license to become a professional promoter so for example, when the casino is finished, that could be an event at the casino.

For two years, he coordinated the Danny Garcia Memorial boxing smoker. The money we got from there, we gave to the school as a scholarship in his memory. Danny attended Little Wound School. Danny was a boxer.

Spencer is also known for his radio shows on KILI Radio on Porcupine Butte, where he would promote youth empowerment through interviews by encouraging youth to live a positive lifestyle and be empowered.

"There is a reason why I got into all this and I always think about that. To give kids an outlet of same type, because they walk around with so much anger," he said.

"When I was young, I wish I met someone who took time and worked with me, the way I work with these kids. That way they don't have to go that way of using alcohol and drugs as their outlet. Working in school with youth, helps me to help them," he said.

The proceeds from the concessions from the Golden Gloves will go to help the eigth grade at Wounded Knee District School.

He said recently he travels on the boxing schedule and his companion Angie Apple travels with him, and with most of his time coordinated around boxing, she too is now certified as a judge and as an official.

Of all his travels, he said the loudest fans are right there at home in Manderson. Community members enjoy the bouts and come to watch them.

Spencer is a spiritually connected young man who promotes that with his team and with the youth he works with. He encourages self empowerment through being balanced in one's spirit.

In May, he will be hosting the Regional Junior Olympics with teams from Wyoming, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota at Lower Brule.

Spencer is also a member of the Two Nations, which is a non profit organization for boxing.

He organized the Wounded Knee District School boxing club which Josh Steele helps coach.

The other two coaches registered are George Apple and Joe Brings Plenty. Apple works at Little Wound School and has a team from there, Brings Plenty was recently elected to the chairmanship of Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe. Brings Plenty team's is Wolf's Den.

assistance to the 6,700 schools which failed to meet the criteria as set forth by the No Child Left Behind Act in the 2005-06 school year.

The money will be used to implement improvement activities, such as tutoring programs, curriculum upgrades and teaching training.

Title I K-12 grant program will see an increase of $125 million for 38, 000 additional low-income students performing below grade level with intensive science and math instruction.

The COPS or community oriented policing services will receive an increase of $70 million to a total of $$542 million.

Kingman who is a consultant with the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association sent a notice out to tribal chairmen informing them that the resolution affects all tribal programs and budgets via the Indian Health Service, HUD, the Veterans Administration, Head Start, etc.

The Continuing Resolution in the new Democratic controlled Congress will allow them to take up the 2008 Appropriations Bill at the end of the year.

The GPTCA will also create a Work Group comprised of tribal attorneys or other representatives who will submit recommendations for the 2008 budget.

The GPTCA will take up the budget on February 20 and a form will be sent out to each tribe for their input.

Todd County Schools considering four day school week, seeking community input MISSION - Community residents are invited to give input on their opinion of a four-day school week for students of the Todd County School District.

Discussion on a possible four day school week for Todd County schools filled much of the time at the Jan. 22 meeting of the TCSD Board of Education.

The four day concept has been considered for quite some time, but more seriously recently.

Superintendent Dr. Richard Bordeaux said there is not a total consensus on the issue yet, even with administrators, and surveys have not been done with students or community members.

But the bottom line is, a four day week would give teachers one day to do their planning, collaborate to make the time in school more effective, he said. Student/teacher time would still be the same, and it would be up to the administrators to make sure the school days are used for teaching.

He said the district would have to meet the minimum minutes of class required by the state, and one way to do that would be to start school at 8:30 a.m. and get out at 3:50 p.m., or an additional 50 minutes of classes each of the four days.

Currently, of the 36 weeks of school, 27 are already four-day weeks, considering holidays, Rosebud Fair, Inservice Days and Gift of Time Days, so there would only be nine more weeks to change to four days.

One elementary teacher noted that teachers are always being pulled out of class for professional development, and with the four day week, that wouldn¹t happen, and there wouldn¹t have to be so many substitutes hired for those days.

Board Member Troy Heinert said he thinks there are a lot of other issues to look at.

Friday and Monday meals are pretty important to the students, he said.

There are also other community concerns, such as daycare, babysitting. We need more community discussion on the issue.

Dr. Bordeaux said that Head Start and Sinte Gleska University have no classes on Fridays, so the babysitting issue is not so big.

Board Member Charlie Moe asked how it would affect maintenance, bus drivers, cooks, etc.

Dr. Bordeaux said most of the drivers are also maintenance, so would still work five days, custodians would still be on duty. He said the administrators felt the cooks should also be kept on to feed staff, for cleanup etc.

Discussion was also held on early buses, late buses, the breakfast program, how local businesses will be affected.

As far as sports are concerned, Dr. Bordeaux said that those schools who are on a four day week, schedule games on Fridays. Several schools in the state do have a four day week, most recently neighboring Bennett County.

He said that No Child Left Behind was at the center of the discussion about the four day week, and administrators felt that teachers would have more time to do collaborative planning, and therefore, do a better job of teaching on the four days in the classroom

We need to realize that the teachers will have the same amount of minutes in the classroom, and without the interruptions for staff development, etc.

My biggest concern is what to do with the children on Monday or Friday, Board Pres. Marlon Leneaugh said. But statistics show that attendance is better with a four day than a five day school week.

He invited the public to contact members of the board with any opinions regarding the issue.

South Dakota Indian Business Conference Feb. 21

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) - A conference aimed at increasing business development in Indian Country has been scheduled for Feb. 21-22 in Rapid City.

``This is an exciting step in the economic development of Indian Country,'' Richard Benda, Tourism and State Development secretary, said in a statement. ``This is more than a conference. It will provide applicable tools for South Dakota.''

The South Dakota Indian Business Conference will focus on developing tribal legal and governmental systems to create and sustain private businesses, according to the release.

Tribal leaders, economic development officials and people from the tribal judiciary are expected to join state and federal officials, community development groups, educators and others at the gathering.

Bear Butte alcohol ban offered

PIERRE (AP) - An effort is under way again in the South Dakota Legislature to ban the sale of alcoholic beverages and issuance of alcohol licenses within four miles of Bear Butte State Park, with the exception of those businesses within the existing boundaries of Sturgis.

Similar legislation failed last year.

Those who are behind HB1227 say Bear Butte is sacred to American Indians, and they are not happy with biker campgrounds and bars that draw thousands of rowdy people during the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally each August.

SGU to re-enact President Bordeaux's first inauguration

37th Annual Founder's Day in progress

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - "Otokahe Woihanble wan kawita yuha unhiyupi" - "In the beginning we came together with a dream..," (SGU Founding Chairman Stanley Red Bird.)

SGU President Lionel R. Bordeaux often recounts that fateful day some 34 years ago when two gentlemen from the Rosebud Sioux reservation knocked on his door at the University of Minnesota where he was successfully pursuing doctoral studies. Stanley Red Bird, SGU's Founding Chairman and Gerald V. Mohatt, Founding President, were looking for someone to lead Sinte Gleska College on the Rosebud as it was called at that time.

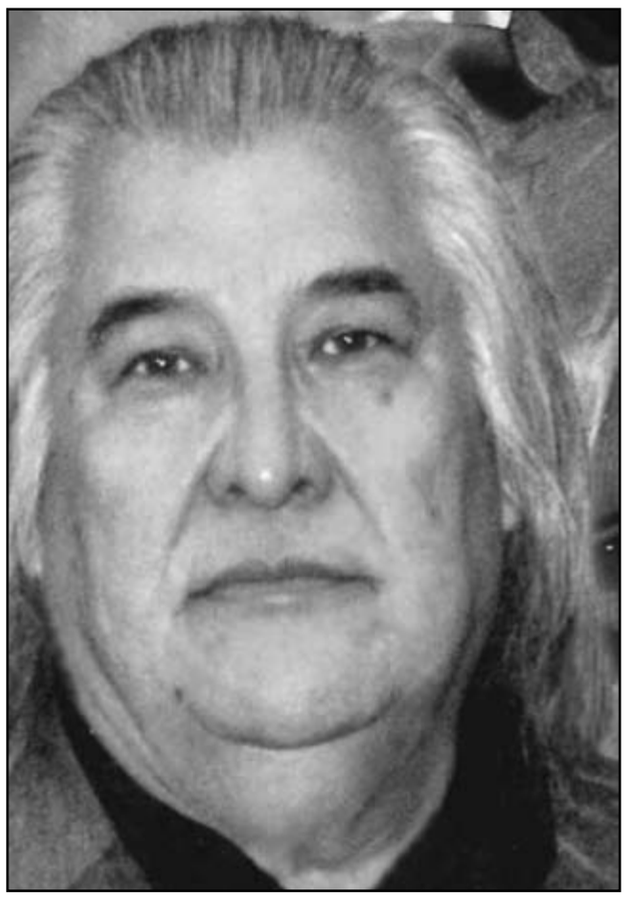
In the early 1970's Indian Country was seemingly "abuzz" with talk of self-determination and dreams of other young Lakota people daring to think of a college education. With the Vietnam War quickly winding down, it would mean that other young Sicangu men would be looking to also use their GI Bill to improve their chances of employment. There were very few Native role models with college degrees and that had to change.

President Bordeaux had excelled while working in the Bureau of Indian Affairs on the Jicarilla Apache reservation in New Mexico and other places. He could expect a comfortable career in educational administration after catching a ride out of Rosebud due to a lack of work. There had to be work elsewhere. It was a scenario that would repeatedly play out on the Rosebud and provided great impetus and rationale for the tribal college movement.

Instead, Bordeaux accepted the challenge, returned home to stubbornly lead an institution, raised a family and succeeded in being one of the nation's longest running college presidents at 34 years.

Stanley Red Bird was looking for someone who could boldly lead and put into practice many of the dreams he envisioned for the Sicangu Lakota people. He was concerned that too many young people were leaving home and returning after being disillusioned by the allure of off reservation colleges. He reasoned along with other board members that a college created at home could better serve the needs of Sicangu tribal members as they would not have to travel off-reservation. He desired to see the foundations of Lakota language and culture preserved, while examining other models through tribal law and customs, education, bringing economic development, together and a range of education and tribal governance.

Bordeaux, fluent in Lakota having been raised by proud parents, Alex and Mary (Jordan) Bordeaux, accepted the challenge of creating an institution out of a dream that lives on today and continues to touch the lives of many Sicangu people and others, who understand the need to grow their own. There is something to be said for self-determination when crafted by those who will benefit the most.



Over the years, Bordeaux worked tirelessly in collaborating with other educators, RST tribal council members and students in guiding the university to its present campus. He is often cited as the guiding force behind the tribal college movement as it is known today nationally, while SGU serves as a model for educational self-determination for other struggling tribal nations.

Tribal colleges have their own data base of educational resources which chronicle the work of tribal colleges, their students and respective tribal communities. The Tribal College Journal is a great resource for interested researchers, educators and students, alike.

The rest is history as they say; SGU was the first tribal college in the nation to be accredited at the bachelor's degree level in 1981 in teacher education and in 1989 it was the first to be accredited by the North Central Association of Chicago, IL to confer a Master of Education (M.Ed.) That first graduate class in 1989 included six Lakota women, many of whom continue to be prominent educators on the Rosebud today.

President Bordeaux has gained national prominence as a great visionary in tribal higher education and is highly sought after as a gifted speaker in both Lakota and English. His advocacy on behalf of tribal colleges has resulted in some powerful networking with congressional delegations and benefactors who have helped to build the university into a leading institution.

As such, he is also promoting a national tribal university with Senator Daniel Inouye to be located in the Black Hills. He also traveled to New Zealand and helped to found an international tribal university called, "World Indigenous Higher Education Consortium (WINHEC) with the Maori tribal nation.

There will be a re-enactment of Lionel Bordeaux's first inauguration ceremonies

During SGU's 37th Annual Founder's Day this week, there will be a re-enactment of the initial inauguration ceremonies when President Bordeaux accepted the sacred pipe from traditional Sicangu leaders and agreed to bring the university into the future.

Many other Sicangu people, traditional leaders and educators have also contributed to the dream that is SGU and they will be remembered this weekend.

"Ho le anpetu ki he un piunkilapi nahan.., Woihanble le ki unkitapo pelo" - "Today we give thanks for this dream.., This dream is our dream." Stanley Red Bird.

OPINION PAGE

Our Views

The 'word' can be powerful to Indian country

We are currently in our third year of publishing an independently owned weekly newspaper that is geared to news in Indian country in western South Dakota. In essence, we are known as an Indian newspaper.

Not only do we serve as a community newspaper but we do our best to sustain a watchdog status, not only for current events but for the future of our children.

We have said this before and will say it again, the reservations of South Dakota have access to powerful tools of media with the numerous Indian newspapers, a television station, radio stations and media websites and we need to use those tools to make positive change.

We have a responsibility to understand the profiles of our readers. By looking closely at our readership we can be responsive to the interests, needs, and expectations of our public.

In putting it another way, as tribal media, we need to stand above our readership of tribal citizens and keep an eye out… a truthful vision, not one of misinformation.

If we all took that watchdog status seriously and follow through with that responsibility for the tribal nations we serve, we would not only be serving our readership by keeping them informed on legislation being introduced that will have long-lasting effects on Indian Country, but we would also present more complete information from the Lakota standpoint to mainstream media, and not be afraid to do that.

We need to promote positive information and continuously push the language and cultural values that give identity to our future generations.

Our readership should be informed on issues that are important to us and that affect us, not only in our daily lives, but in developing a better future for our children.

The news we give to our readers should give them the opportunity to get involved in the issues that affect us and serve to unite us as an Indian Nation to the rest of South Dakota, the Nation and the World. We could be a powerful force for change.

Not only should we serve as an E'yapaha, but we also take seriously our role to look after our societies, to look after the people or be on guard for them, wakta icun po

In that sense, we need to be watchdogs.

Just think, if we adhered to that responsibility how much more power we could give our nations in the form of information. Information is power.

The Lakota Country Times is a newspaper and we do our best to report the news as accurately as we could can. The opinions of individual people are kept on the editorial and opinion pages. Those pages are for our columnists and letters to the editors, which are personal opinions or opinions about issues that affect our readers.

The Lakota Country Times offers those pages to our readership to 'stand on your soapbox' and state your opinion on an issue that you may feel needs to be said. We do reserve the right edit those articles, to protect against libel and slander.

In nearly every newspaper, personal opinions are kept on the editorial or personal opinion pages to separate them from news articles, except for tabloids. But a tabloid is just that, a tabloid of personal opinions and "that" is not a "news paper." Personal opinions should never be allowed to pass themselves off as genuine news stories because they are not.

We encourage letters to the editor but we reserve the right to edit as necessary.

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor and Opinion Pages are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

Words from the 'trenches'

Together we all light the sky

By Connie Smith-Blanco

There's no need for a formal introduction. My name is Connie Blanco and I'm a green-eyed, blond haired LaCreek District tribal member born and raised in Martin.

Oh, and to keep things honest, although born blonde, I still periodically remain blonde (when I haven't been a redhead and a brunette) with the help of modern hair care products. And the eyes are still green, but you'll never see them without glasses. Oh, and that honesty thing again… I wear bifocals but they're the invisible kind, I think I fool myself with that concept, I figure if you can't see them, then I must not be that old to need them.

This honesty thing is something that hasn't come easy in the last "50-odd" years. I have to admit I have a lot of help from my higher power.

And my reward is this, people can expect me to tell them what "I" perceive to be the truth and sometimes they get the honor of seeing me with not one, but both feet in my mouth.

There were many years when I wished my feet were a few sizes smaller. And there was no sense wishing for a bigger mouth because I was blessed with that already.

I'm thinking my higher power thought giving me a big mouth would balance out my big feet and perhaps I would walk a better, "balanced" life. Nothing could be further from the truth. But who am I to argue. I just keep trying.

Several people I know have wondered when I was going to jump in and "write" something for this paper that Amanda and I labor over every week, after all I've been here two years now.

Well, now I can say I've written something...

For what it's worth, I'm no expert on anything, and every lesson I have learned (or think I've learned) has been very expensive and the cost to me was plenty of embarrassment, laughter, tears, and yes, anger. Did I mention that I was blessed with a large temper? Luckily through the years I have found the "on and off switch" for the temper, but I still struggle with the volume control.

So the editor of this paper, Amanda Takes War Bonnett, and I have decided (by push and shove) to make a go of this paper. Publishing this newspaper every week, means we see each other more than our own families. Ask my new husband and he'll tell you. He may have to come to work for the paper so we can see each other more often.

We've toiled behind the scenes this past two years to publish something we can be proud of and try to make a difference in our reader's lives.

We want to make the difference by telling honest "rez" stories, for "rez" residents with "rez" humor, compassion, and honesty. We try to have the highest goals we can achieve on our "shoe-string budget in our one-room newspaper and computer packed office" (soon to be a "all the way at the top of the stairs 'two' room office.")

Amanda also recommends a "moral" or thought for the day at the end of a column, so here goes.

Be yourself, and once you figure out "who" you are, then work on being the best "you" you can be. No matter what color we are, or what dress or shoe size we wear, we all have the right to be a star in the sky.

Some stars will shine steady, some stars will blink on and off….and on again, and some stars will resemble falling stars, but it doesn't matter, together we all light the sky.

My mouth has already gone over the word limit that Amanda has "recommended" so until and "if" I write again, happy reading from me, "in the trenches."

Connie Smith-Blanco, Oglala Lakota, is co-owner, business manager and marketing director of Lakota Country Times, and has a marketing and fine arts background. She has pursued a music career in Oklahoma, Tennessee and lived near her sister in Texas, and after 30 years moved back to her roots in South Dakota with children.

Finding My Voice

Six little things to remember when moving home

Dana Lone Hill

I was born and raised on the reservation, here in Pine Ridge. I have been gone for the last 16 years and I can say coming home has been wonderful. There are a few expectations to remember when moving home, when you see them, they are comforting and make you feel at home.

1.) Dogs:

I moved into my house and instantly now am the owner of three dogs.

I named one Fugly, the other two are yet unnamed. They eat all the stuff my kids won't, like brussell sprouts, poor dogs. I think I seen it all though, the other day when I was with my mom.

We was in the parking lot at Big Bat's and seen a gang of five dogs, hopping on three legs, with the same leg hurt. My mom's first thought, "Some kind of gang initiation."

My first thought, "I wonder what truck hit all five?"

2.) Gossip:

"They said…" I admit my ears perk up when I hear those words. Sometimes in line at the store or in the hospital parking lot. Don't worry though, I don't repeat gossip, you know, because they said…

3.) Knocking:

Nobody knocks. Everyone pulls up out front and honks.

I noticed the closer I am related to someone, the closer they pull up on my yard to my front door, and honk.

My ex knocks and so did my uncle, just in case they read this. (Mental note to self: fence.)

4.) Commodities:

I don't care who you are, if you get them or not. Everyone has a secret stash.

I can go to anyone I know and ask to borrow a can of corn and get led to a closet I didn't know was there, like magic. T hen they say help your self. What glory.

I can Iron Chef-"Commod" Style. Last week I made Kung Pau Chicken all with "commods", only the soy sauce was not. Who needs China Buffet?

5.) Relatives:

After living many different places where I knew no one, it's easy to forget you have so many relatives when you come back. Don't try to snag, people will try and figure out a way you are related.

A grandmother's plea for help

Dear Editor:

My name is Henrietta Bedeau, I am the grandmother of Aaliyah Iron Cloud born to my daughter Shalene Iron Cloud whom are both enrolled members of the Oglala Sioux Nation of Pine Ridge.

The father of my granddaughter is non-native and we are presently in a court system in Clearwater County in Bagley, Minn. fighting to keep parental rights for my daughter's child.

When my granddaughter was born, the father denied that the child was his, and did not make an attempt to see the child or sign her birth certificate as her father.

He did not in fact claim the child and DNA test proved he was the father and the court adjudicated him as the father, and ordered him to pay child support.

Since that court order (the child is now two years old) we have been in a constant court battle over custody and he was awarded joint custody of the child even though he and my daughter were never married and he had a prior felony drug conviction.

His family is financially well off and have hired a lawyer. During all court proceeding we have not really had a say in the decisions that are being made by the presiding ninth district court, Judge Rasmussen, who seems to agree to every request made by the lawyer and his clients without hesitation, and without even asking if my daughter has any opinion on the matter; in fact it is as if my daughter is not even present in the court room.

Furthermore, allegations that are made against my daughter the lawyer and his clients are not questioned and are in fact, seemingly taken as the gospel.

When we try to respond with witnesses or answer to the allegations made against my daughter, our statements are dismissed and not taken seriously, even though we have had several witnesses to attest to the lies that are alleged. We feel that our civil rights and our right to equal treatment and due process under the law are being violated and are being racially discriminated against.

We have not been afforded the same equal rights under the judicial system, nor has the judge in this case acknowledged that my granddaughter is an enrolled member of a federally recognized tribe whom I think should be represented under the Indian Child Welfare Act even if her father is not a Native American.

I feel that the judge is well aware of the fact that my granddaughter is an enrolled member of a tribe or at least a descendant from prior knowledge of my children in the Clearwater County Courts.

To date the lawyer and his clients have alleged statements from witnesses stating my daughter has deprived his client of his parental rights and has had my granddaughter in his home since Nov. 11, 2006 through Dec. 4, 2006 at which time we went to court over the following charge made against my daughter and without returning the child to her mother for her parental rights and has not been ordered to by the courts and has not been charge with a felony crime as my daughter was for the alleged same offense.

We have filed a compliant with the Bagley Sheriff Department, but apparently we have no case and to date no charges are pending against the father for depriving my daughter of her parental rights from Nov. 11 through Dec. 4, 2006, now is this equal treatment with equal rights under the law with due process.

What might I ask separates our rights to equal access, what is the determining factors, could it be that we are not wealthy or prominent members of the Bagley/Clearwater area or cannot afford a prominent well known lawyer in the Clearwater County Court system or could it be that we are Native Americans? We need answers, we need help!!!!!!!!!!

Of course there are numerous additional facts to this case that are too enormous to continue to address that include reports to the Clearwater County Human Services Agencies, such as child protection reports, photographs and police reports, so we are asking for help to resolve what we feel is an injustice that has caused our family tremendous stress, emotional pain, physical separation from Aaliyah, duress within the justice system and other Clearwater County Agencies, as well as created a hardship and burden on our whole family.

Is there anyone out there interested in our rights, we are open to the media and to the Oglala Sioux Tribe for any additional information about this case.

We need your help! "When will it happen to" not "What If this happens to" your daughter/granddaughter? ARE HAS IT ALREADY OCCURRED? We feel that as Native Americans in this instant, we are still being mistreated by the government whether it is represented by the county, state or other officials in power. We need the help of the Native American Communities and the American Bar Association of Lawyers, to address this unfair, unequal treatment of Native Americans' in the United States Court Systems and the Unethical Practices allowed in the court systems by this state within this county in Minnesota.

Are we not also, American Citizens protected under the United States Constitutional Rights and have we not the same Equal Rights Under the Law and also suppose to be Protected Under Federal Laws as well?

Food for thought

Dear Editor:

As intellectual thinkers we must learn how to help ourselves and our children.

Indigenous people are the lower and middle classes.

We must begin this new year with new aspirations. We must begin to entertain the complexiity and diversity of this new technological frontier.

How do we accomplish this monumental transformation of our people?

By asking you the reader to form a Venture Club in your community, college, university, job, elementary schools, high school, etc.

What is the Venture Club? A Think Tank if you will.

If we could come together as a united people. Pooling our thoughts, dreams aspirations, and most importantly our individual strenghts.

We the people for the people can begin to approach the 21st century with courage and more importantly, direct our destiny.

"We dont' have recipes, or a checklist." But we do know the ingredients for our transition! Educating our youth, accumulating capital and investing it in ourselves the people of the Lakota Nation.

The only thing we can't do. Is do nothing.

Notes From Indian Country

Writing can be the salve that heals

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Why do some children survive abuse by growing stronger while others whither and die as the result of alcoholism, drugs, suicide or even as murderers at the hands of an executioner?

And why do many of those abused as children become abusers themselves in adulthood? These are questions I was asked last week by a reporter from the Albuquerque Journal and I don't think I answered them to the best of my ability.

The writer was doing an interview for my new book "Children Left Behind," a book that is a partial biography of the horrors I observed while growing up at the Holy Rosary Indian Mission on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota.

The press release by the publisher the reporter read goes, "Tim Giago weaves a memoir, commentary, reflection and poetry together to boldly illustrate hi often-horrific experiences as a child at a Catholic Indian Mission boarding school where Indian children were forcefully molded to fit into mainstream America. This unholy experiment contributed to many of today's modern problems in an entire generation of Native Americans."

When she asked me how it was that I survived the experience and came out stronger my reply was that I attributed to my parents. I believe this was not the complete answer.

Make no mistake that I loved my parents, but after giving it much thought, I do not believe they were the only reason I made some success of my life after the boarding school experience.

I think it was because I loved to write. When I was seventeen and on my way by ship to Korea in 1952, I started to write poems about my school days, the good, the bad, and the very ugly. I continued to write these poems for nearly 19 years and one day I mailed them to a Cahuilla Indian man named Rupert Costo, the publisher of the Indian Historian Press in San Francisco.

Costo, a victim of the boarding school system himself, called me a few weeks later and said, "Tim, these poems must be published." And his publishing house named the book of poetry, "The Aboriginal Sin."

It was published in 1978. Many of these poems are included in my new and expanded book on the Indian mission boarding schools, "Children Left Behind."

From the day the book of poetry was published the Catholic Church hierarchy and the Jesuit priests at the mission school went into denial.

They denied that I ever went to school at the mission and they attempted to erase any evidence of it.

I had to get affidavits from my former classmates to prove I attended school there. It seems that my small book of poetry was hurting the school's ability to solicit money.

By writing about my life, and the lives of my friends at the mission school, it was a cathartic experience for me. By putting my thoughts down on paper I was able to see my life's experiences for what they were, to analyze them, and to put them behind me. Many Indian people who read my book, then and now, write to me and say how much this has helped them to understand their own fears and anxieties.

You must understand that America's "Cultural Genocide" against the Indian people encompassed more than three generations beginning in the mid-1880s and lasting until the 1960s.

When I read the reviews of the movie "Freedom Writers" in the New York Times I thought about my own life and how writing proved to be the catharsis that lifted me out of my pain and sorrow.

When I was in the sixth grade I was writing down everything that was important to me.

One day I handed in a composition assignment to my teacher, a Catholic prefect who would later become a Jesuit priest, and he read it, slammed it down on my desk, and accused me of plagiarism. I had no idea of what he was talking about. He said, "As a writer you will never amount to a hill of beans." His critical comments made me work all the harder to improve my writing skills.

Many years later I was given the Distinguished Achievement Award in Journalism by the University of Missouri School of Journalism. When I was asked at the banquet that night, "If you could name anyone in the world, who would you like to have sitting at your side tonight?" I replied, "A Father Fagan from the Holy Rosary Indian Mission boarding school who told me that as a writer, I would never amount to a hill of beans."

Anna Quindlen, writing a review on "Freedom Writers" in her weekly column for Newsweek quoted novelist Don DeLillo when he wrote, "Writing is a form of personal freedom. It frees us from the mass identity we see in making all around us. In the end, writers will write not to be outlaw heroes of some underculture but mainly to save themselves, to survive as individuals.

I say amen to that. Writing was my salvation and it was writing that took me all of the way from the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation to Harvard Yard. It was writing that helped me to see past the horrors of rape, psychological and physical abuse, and the sanctimonious religious indoctrination of the Catholic Church and enabled me to write a book that would remind all Americans that there is a portion of their history that has been swept under the rug and buried because of the shame it not only brought to the Church but to the Nation.

Too many Indians have been sacrificial victims of the boarding schools for me to ever let America forget.

And I encourage all teachers worth their salt to take their students to see "Freedom Writers."

It could change their lives.

Someone might be looking good to you, but they might be the same person you were banned from in high school for being cousins. (Josh)

6.) Slang:

It's not that I forgot, it just conveniently faded from my life for lack of use.

Now my kids tell me I talk on the phone-with my hands, I started saying Z in place of no, haaa at jokes that really aren't that funny, eez when I am disappointed, josh when I am joking, and e'net when I want someone to agree with me.

I suspect pointing with my lips is next, e'net?

These are a few of the things I noticed from moving home, and you know what?

There is no place else I would rather be.

The whole essence of someone is their spirit

The night my step dad passed away I spent almost all night drinking coffee and talking with her. She told me something that night that really made me think

The doctor had let her and my little brother, age 15, and my two little sisters, ages 12 and 13, go in and say good bye to him.

My mom had a hard enough time herself, but also she had to comfort them.

She said his hand fell to the side and she put it back up because in life he didn't like his hand hanging off the bed.

When she touched him to put his hand back, she told me he was still soft and warm.

It was at this point she realized how much our bodies are shells.

She said we go through our whole lives in this shell when really the spirit of a person is what makes that person who they are.

In death when that spirit leaves the body, all that is left is that shell that was occupied by that spirit.

The whole essence of who someone is, is their spirit.

It is what makes someone wonderful, giving, strong, determined, and beautiful.

Too bad nobody ever judges anybody by how beautiful their spirit is, because that really is who they are.

A View From the West

Constitutional analysis available for Oglala district voters

By Ivan Star
Oglala Lakota
Oglala, S.D.

Another election has come and gone. This time around, though, we did not hear any campaign speeches or the usual radio interviews.

We simply went to the polls and performed the only democratic principle granted to us under the Wheeler-Howard Act. We voted for whomever we thought would do us some good. There was no elaborate inauguration ceremony either.

As the new Tribal Council and Executive Committee members go about their business, several questions continue to bother me. Will we see a Separation of Powers amendment during this administration? Is our standard of living going to improve? Are we going to see a land audit?

My contention is that most of us will be feeling disappointment and frustration again in a very short time.

As a distinct group of people, we have been repeating this particular phenomenon for more than seventy years - seven decades with this system and still no evolution. It seems this going-nowhere cycle has a solid hold on us.

We should have realized by now that this system of government is a detriment. The only ones to have benefited from it are a select few politicians and of course their families, relatives and friends.

The rest of us continue struggling to make ends meet. Our unusually high unemployment rate embodies this system's ineptness.

For whatever it is worth, I may have found a way out of this powerful vortex. It is not an easy way out; rather it will require some determined and carefully planned labor. I am sharing my finding with Oglala District members, especially the younger ones - those eighteen to fifty years young.

First, as commonly known, younger generations hold the future in their hands. Thus, as a young adult (18-50), you will certainly benefit by understanding your local government.

Your children and grandchildren, as well as my own grandchildren, will benefit from it.

Second, you have to go beyond your right to vote. For instance, if you want a house for your family in your home community, use your community government.

If you are in disagreement with this system of government, you can change it to your liking through active participation in your community meetings.

Yes, your community is a governmental entity recognized by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Department of Interior and US Congress. The only entities that do not recognize your community government is your own community's voting majority and our own Tribal Council. I would mention Oglala District Council but, in a contradictory sense, we do not have one.

Third, you must reconsider the common practice of going directly to your elected Tribal Council Representatives, OST and District Executive Committee members with your needs. The way out of this mess is for you to revive and use your community government. This is a long, slow and tiresome process, but it is the only way out.

Fourth, we currently have ten communities; however, most members have been inactive.

Only select groups of community members have been involved over the years. You must acknowledge this situation in not entirely their doing.

It came about because a majority of the community does not acknowledge their own community government.

Fifth, each community is responsible for appointing two representatives to the Oglala District Council.

In turn, this legislature is to elect its executive officers, a president, a vice-president, secretary, and treasurer. This is a constitutional requirement that has not been complied with for many years.

In effect, our district executive committee's legality remains questionable.

For many years now, we have been operating via Tribal Council authority. In view of our predicament, I strongly suggest we not point fingers and instead make an earnest effort to get our local government back on track.

Back in January of 2006, I gave copies of a booklet to seven of our community presidents, our two Tribal Council Representatives and our district executive officers.

The document was my analysis of our district constitution and by-laws. It clearly illustrates how our government ought to be operating.

I was hoping our elected officials would take action and organize the communities according to our constitutional requirements. Although no initiatives were taken, I am not surprised because our officials face a challenging situation.

Actually, they are helpless when voters refuse to acknowledge this system of government, especially at the community level.

At that time, I had asked for volunteers from the district who would be willing to help organize the communities.

I received only two responses and both were women. Six of those community presidents were also women. I am not sure what that means, but it leaves me wondering as to where the men stand regarding our district government.

I will have revised and updated copies of that booklet available to the voters of Oglala District by Feb. 9.

I will be distributing them personally to deter destruction of the booklets and to ensure distribution. Government censorship is a major no-no but here on the reservation, it is common practice.

We have 1,150 registered voters in the district; however, not all of them live here. Some are away attending school or working. Others simply left the reservation to take advantage of opportunities and to provide a better life for their families.

That leaves about one-half to two thirds of our registered voters physically residing in the district, about 500 to 600 voters.

This suggested effort urgently needs people who are willing to go that extra mile, so to speak.

I have learned that this task of organizing people requires enormous amounts of resiliency, fortitude, purpose, and consistency. Overall, it requires some common sense. Above all else, the job requires people, and the more the better.

I am asking all of you to read the book and discuss it with your friends, neighbors and anyone affected by it. We must never forget that our constitution - a set of written laws - is only as good as the paper if the people are not aware of it. In addition, it can be amended via equitable procedures and proper channels.

My sincere hope rests with the younger people. I hope to see the most able and enthusiastic organized into a core group to work with organizing our communities and eventually our government.

This is the only viable way to make your home a better place, maybe not for yourselves, but for your children.

Also needed is an advisory group comprised of older experienced community members. Oglala District has people who have experience and knowledge of tribal government and can be of tremendous assistance in this effort.

Please, leave your personal gripes, objections, and hostilities at home; this is not the time to raise 100-year old family feuds. Do your thing elsewhere.

Oglala is in a serious situation. To influence a positive change, we need tons of good sense, teamwork, and spirit. Similar to a house, a solid foundation is essential; otherwise, all efforts are wasted.

Northern Perspectives

Mastering the language is a long and interesting process

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Ta'hansi Ned Metcalf stopped by yesterday and complimented me on the commercial I did in Lakota for the Lakota Country Times over KINI radio. He said that even with your doctoral credentials you have not forgotten about your Lakota heritage and that is quite commendable and unique. Actually, I added the "unique." I love the joke where one guy says, "we have a strange and unique relationship"; "I'm unique and you're strange."

Ned was somewhat disturbed when he recently heard some Lakota youngsters singing in a hand drum contest and they sang it using English words. He is adamant that we retain our language and wants to do something about it.

I guess since they were using a Lakota melody they might have gone ahead and learned the Lakota.

Anyway, there is much to be done among those who sincerely want to retain the Lakota language.

Even with the federal government the preservation, protection and desire to retain indigenous languages is still very much alive.

The Senate approved the Martinez Language Preservation Act not long ago and hopefully there will be funds available for all types of language activities locally and throughout Indian Country.

I am excited to see what kinds of grant proposals we might put together here on the Rosebud as the program makes funding available from ANA or the Administration for Native Americans. I served as a standing evaluator for one of the previous grant activities.

I was honored that Ned would want me to join him, Pat Bad Hand, Sammy and Richard Iyotte in a round table discussion over KINI on this very pressing topic. There are so many other issues in Lakota country that need to be addressed.

Some are political, others are economic and yet, others are cultural like the need to retain our rather unique and beautiful language. There are others who will want to contribute to such a round table discussion such as my former colleagues at SGU, Russell, Duane, Francis, Ione, Sylvan, Sandra and leksi Albert and my kola Archie Little.

I did not grow up with Lakota as my primary language, but I gradually learned it by listening closely and when it came my time to use it, I sure gave it my all.

Now, I can understand a lot of it and even carry on basic conversations. My main obstacle is using different time references and switching from the past, present and the future. Also, I do not use kinship terms regularly as the list is long and I simply have not learned them.

Mastering the language is a long and interesting process and therefore, I know that children are somewhat challenged by the complexity and subtle nuances of the language. However, I do know for a fact that children are much more adept at learning languages at a young age.

I have always been impressed by tahansi Lionel Bordeaux as he has a great command of Lakota. I was at the last rally for Stephanie Herseth, Tim Johnson, Larry Lucas and Julie Bartling and Larry asked Lionel to say a few words.

He got up and did a great job of encouraging people in Lakota to get out and vote. I was impressed as he seemed as comfortable in Lakota as he was in English and that is no easy task.

I'm getting kind of up in years to really worry about being that at ease in using the language, but it is something for our young adults to think about.

Congratulations to SGU as they celebrate their 37th Annual Founder's Day.

I helped along the way with my credentials, leading the undergraduate education program and the graduate program to be the first tribal college in the nation to be accredited at both the bachelors and the master's level under the direction and through the vision of President Lionel Bordeaux.

I am proud of that accomplishment and apparently there were others who shared in that early vision.

It is always interesting to visit with Sherry Red Owl, or tahansi Victor Douville as they were the first staff members at the college and can tell you how the classes were taught here and there and who were some of the early instructors.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Legislative Report

Gear Up education program request is $6.2 million

Larry Lucas
State Representative
District 26A - Mellette & Todd Counties

The activity at the State Capitol picked up considerably during the third week of the legislative session.

One bill important to our area that passed out of the House was HB 1028 that seeks to modernize and update tasks and supervision requirements related to physician assistants. Physician assistants work under a practice agreement with a physician and deliver most of the primary health care in rural communities.

PA's have long been utilized to extend a physician's ability to care for patients in rural areas of our state where health care providers are in short supply.

As usual the Joint Appropriations Committee is very busy.

All of the funding requests of the departments in state government go before this committee.

One significant request was for $6.5 million federal program dollars for the Gear Up education program. This program aims to improve high school performance, graduation rates and college entry for Native American students in South Dakota.

Gear Up involves an intense summer course of study for students seventh grade through high school.

Mentors follow the participating students through the school year to help keep them on track in their classes.

Property taxes are always a big issue during the Legislative Session.

It appears this year there is broad support to change the way agriculture land is valued for taxation purposes.

The proposal, which has been discussed and studied, will value ag land based on its production rather than the selling price. Production will be determined largely from cash rent values.

Major events in Pierre this past week included the Arts in Education Awards Banquet.

Receiving awards from our area were Jack Herman of Mission as an outstanding support of the Arts by an individual and Albert White Hat as the recipient of the 2007 Living Indian Treasure Award. Also, the Community Health Care Providers of South Dakota hosted a legislative reception. The Horizon health care clinics in Martin, Mission, and White River are a member of the Community Health Care Association.

Two area student groups that visited the Capitol last Wednesday were the senior government class from White River with their teacher Steve Schumacher and the Klein, Littleburg, and O'Kreek elementary schools with teachers Jan Epke, Gweneth Hofelt, Lindsey Lucas, and Melissa Kelly.

There have been numerous questions into the hearings of the alleged misconduct regarding Senator Dan Sutton of Flandreau. While this is a matter that is in the hands of the Senate, it could ultimately affect how legislators are judged by their peers.

Most of my colleagues on the House side supported a fair and expedient resolution to the matter.

You can contact me or leave a message for me by calling the State House Lobby at 773-3851.

Pine Ridge wins 16th straight, prepares for State's 1-2 showdown Thursday against Bennett County

Shorthanded Red Cloud knocks off Chadron on road

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS/CHADRON Lacey Weston stepped up with her best game of the year on Tuesday in St. Francis as the Lady Thorpes knocked on the Lady Warriors 75-53 for their 16th straight win of the year as Weston hit for 29 points, grabbed 10 rebounds, blocked four shots and handed out four assists.

"It was a real team effort as St. Francis kept coming back and pulling within six points," said head coach Bill Mendoza, "Keisha Brewer is out with a strained knee so Weston stepped up, Nichelle Red Owl threw in 20 points and finished with nine steals while Christian Janis helped with 11 points."

Pine Ridge finished strong as Weston hit 11 points in the fourth quarter while Kalli Brave-Jenkins who finished with 15 points and 11 rebounds and Marcie Rodriguez who helped with 16 points were held to two free throws between them in the fourth quarter.

Thursday, Pine Ridge used their full court press to open up the game with a 27-7 first quarter lead and a 45-18 halftime lead as the Lady Thorpes defeated Todd County 75-63 as Weston hit for 24 points, Red Owl helped with 17 and Janis added 10 points and 10 assists.

With or without Keisha Brewer, Pine Ridge now gets ready for Bennett County on Thursday night in Martin. The Lady Warriors are 14-0, ranked number two in the top ten poll, right behind Pine Ridge, and feature one of the most athletic basketball players in the state, senior Maggie O'Neill and the top scoring guard in the region, junior Keely Krolikowski, averaging over 20 points a game. Without much doubt, this game will be a preview of the District 14A championship game and the winner will be the favorite to move on to the State A tournament in Spearfish. Bennett County went to state last year and is looking to use that experience in a return engagement; Abby Kratovil, a senior center last year for Bennett County, is now playing for South Dakota State University.

Red Cloud went to Chadron Saturday night to play the Lady Cardinals, they did not have the services of their two starting guards, Marque Lunderman and Shaina Clifford and were not able to play their next guard, Desiree Blacksmith.

Although no one gave them a chance against a team they lost to earlier in the season 51-45 on their home floor, no one told Ida Clarke and the Lady Crusaders who made the trip. Using a full court press the entire game, Red Cloud took Chadron out of their normal game plan and beat Chadron 44-35 for their eighth win of the season.

Red Cloud went up 22-11 at the half as Clarke scored 11 of her team's 22 points. Chadron pulled within three by the end of the third quarter but Clarke hit for six more points in the fourth on the way to a game high 19 and Bobbi White hit a three and two free throws and Casara Pine helped with a three to give Red Cloud the win.

Red Cloud added a 72-36 win Tuesday night for their ninth win against six losses on the season. Ida Clarke knocked down 23 points and Marque Lunderman helped with 19 points. Hannah Red Willow led Crazy Horse with 11 points. Red Cloud travels to McLaughlin on Friday

Mustangs give more than just basketball fever, they mentor from the heart

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - The Little Wound Mustangs team has been giving more than basketball entertainment to their fans, they have been sharing their skill with elementary boys in a mentoring program designed to enhance self esteem.

January is National Mentoring month and the varsity Mustang team and some of the junior varsity are taking part in an elementary mentoring program designed to help young boys with team building, leadership and other life skills.

Shelly Middletent, Little Wound elementary student assistant program, said a group of young men were selected from grades kindergarten to fourth grade to participate in a mentoring program with the high school basketball team.

They were selected on academic achievement and attendance from the elementary teachers.

The mentoring program is designed to bring the elementary students and high school students together in activities that promote team building, leadership, anger management, role modeling positive behavior and enhance academic awareness along with having a sense of belonging. Each elementary student is linked with one of the basketball players and that player mentors the student in those areas.

They meet several times a week with the student they are mentoring in a 20 minute interaction such as reading, working on their academics or just practicing spelling.

Middletent said the Little Wound High School varsity team and the some of the junior varsity team have agreed to participate in the mentoring program, making time available to link with their student.

"The reason we targeted K-4 students, is they hardly have any male activities except for wrestling and track," she said. Being able to participate in the program gives the young boys a sense of pride in belonging in the connection they have with the team.

She applauded the basketball team for being cooperative and supportive of the program, including Jamie Feather Earring, the head basketball coach for being supportive of the program.

"I encouraged them to do it, it gives the kids a chance to meet their heroes and have someone to look up to. Our boys like it, they had no problem with it. I told them they could be the future Mustangs one day," said Feather Earring. He added "it teaches responsibility".

The 20 elementary students involved in the program sport a 'Lil Mustang' jersey with the same number as their mentor. And at that at several games have been allowed to lead the undefeated Mustangs on to the floor.

Middletent said mentoring is a powerful tool in helping children succeed in life and along with participation from the high school students, the parents have been involved intensely by providing transportation and being at games and being involved in the classroom setting.

The mentors realize their role is to pass on knowledge and experience and to provide support and guidance and they work at it.

Team members Casey Montileaux mentors Adam Lays Hard, first grade; Devon Lebeau mentors Terry Middletent Jr., kindergarten; Brice Hornbeck mentors Trenton Old Horse, first grade; TJ McCaulley mentors Bricie Red Owl, second grade; Ty Lunderman mentors Les Cuny, second grade; Rchard Big Boy mentors Rudy Ceron, third grade; Micheal Apple mentors Verlin Old Horse, kindergarten; Shilo Pierce mentors Ethan Davis, fourth grade; Napoleon Lays Bad; Kayshawn Long Soldier, kindergarten; Derek Puckett mentors Chris Mousseau, fourth grade; Vern Marshall mentors Paul Cuny, second grade; Dustin Shangreaux mentors Dante Shangreaux, fourth grade; Josh Mousseau

Mentors Albert Marshall, first grade; Brett Thunder Hawk mentors Joe Arpan, kindergarten; Trin In the Woods mentors Mark Morgan, second grade;

The mentors will have the opportunity to attend training in the near future.

Youth Band to headline Family Fun Night on Founder's Week

Little Bird Blues Band makes music a family affair

ANTELOPE - With only a dozen or so performances under their belt and their first CD in the works, The Little Bird Blues Band is made up of five 8-to-12 year-old cousins that already have a long history of rock and blues flowing through their veins.

The entire band is made up of the grandchildren of Gordon and JoAnn Bird of Brookings. Gordon has long worked in the music industry and has raised his daughters, Jackie, Lori and Sherri in the music industry as well. Jackie Bird was a renowned singer of Native American blues music.

While both Gordon and Jackie have done well in music, it seems it is the next generation of the Bird family's turn to take the limelight - and they are doing so with flair. The youngsters have a passion for music which they take seriously.

The band members are: Gordon Bird II, Sheldon Bird, Dayton Bird, Shaylynn Bird, and Jodeci Bird,

The relatively new band will headline the 2007 Sinte Gleska University Founder's Week Family Fun Night at the Multipurpose Building on Thursday, February 1. The Family night will begin at 5 p.m. and the band will perform at 7 p.m.

Lori Bird, mother and aunt to the band members said the youth are excited to play for the Family Fun Night.

"They love playing. They practice in the garage everyday," said Lorie Bird, mother of, Jodeci and Dayton.

The band has been playing together since August 2006 - barely six months! But their sound is right on and their vocals are impressive. They are not just good "for a bunch of kids" they're good and their sound is sweet.

Their grandfather recognized their potential one day when he and his wife were babysitting all the grandchildren.

"Joann and I were babysitting one day and they were all out there in the garage. I just put them on different instruments and started teaching them songs," Gordon said.

He said the chemistry and enthusiasm were instant.

Since then they have been practicing pretty seriously and have booked several shows including the inauguration for the Sisseton-Wahpeton Tribal Chair and Council.

Their selection of blues and classic rock has managed to impress and inspire audiences everywhere they go. But their hard work and dedication is what impresses their grandfather.

"They practice every chance they get," said the proud grandfather.

Gordon is very proud that his grandchildren have followed in his

Vandals paint gangster signs on billboard

KYLE - Last fall during Red Ribbon week Little Wound School elementary students crafted roadside billboards to remind community of the abuse of alcohol and drugs. Each sign was designed with a message to the community about how they felt about alcohol, drugs and domestic violence in their homes.

Recently, to the dismay of the students, there has been vandalism to one of the billboards.

The billboard project was an effort by the school and the Oglala (Sioux) Lakota Housing Authority to generate awareness of the problem to students and to the community.

The students designed and painted the billboards and housing maintenance workers provided the material that was needed, the boards and the poles for the billboards. Housing workers also set up the billboards on the three roads leading in Medicine Root District. In all, there were 13 signs that have been erected up on roadsides so far, said Shelly Middletent, elementary student assistant counselor.

The sign that was vandalized recently near Kyle.

Middletent said they are publicly asking for the vandals' identity and should have to repaint the signs. "The vandalism has affected the children who painted the sign," she said. "We are requesting our community members or any one who knows who is vandalizing these billboards to stop tagging our community." Any information of the vandalism can be given to police or to the school.

footsteps as musicians.

"You know music hasn't been a very easy business. If they choose to do music it's a hard road. But if they are sincere and work hard they will do well. It's a good feeling to work with them and help them along. I have been blessed with a fantastic lifestyle and blessed with great children and grandchildren."

Gordon does not look upon himself as a mentor to his grandchildren but rather he feels he is doing his family duty to encourage and support them.

"It's better to encourage than criticize. It is easy to criticize and harder to uplift people," Gordon said.

The Little Bird Blues Band was named by their grandparents after booking their first gig. "We're regular size birds and they're little bitty birds," said Gordon. He said the name came naturally.

The band is currently in the process of putting a CD together on the family recording label which was formerly Featherstone, and is now changed to Bird!

The band members are: Gordon Bird II, 12 years-old, the Lead Guitar Player; Sheldon Bird, 10-years old, the drummer; Dayton Bird, 10 years-old, the Bass Guitar player; Shaylynn Bird, 10 years-old, vocals; and Jodeci Bird, 8 years-old, vocals. Gordon and Sheldon are Jackie's children and Shaylynn is Sherry's daughter. Gordon II and Sheldon are Jackie's sons, Shaylynn is the daughter of Sherry and Dayton and Jodeci are the son and daughter of Lori.

Veterans Affairs office holds housing forum

Situations that occur in veterans home loan program

ROSEBUD - A whole year seemed to pass so quickly when the RST Veterans Affairs Office last held a housing forum for tribal veterans.

This year the forum was again held at the RST Veterans Affairs building. It was planned by Director, Orlando Morrison, Bilie Thunder and Troy Lynn Peneaux. Ronald "Jock" Gassman is the VA shuttle van driver.

The meeting was Tuesday, Jan. 30 with several representatives present from the Indian Health Service hospital, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Tribal Land Enterprise, and the Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakapi. Three representatives from the Veteran's Affairs St. Paul Regional Loan Center were also there to explain the process for veterans to secure a Native American Direct Loan.

Some of the presenters said privately that they learned something new and interesting about Native veterans from the questions which were posed during the forum. Future meetings which are deemed important and target veterans will most likely have to be paired with other activities or some incentives to get veterans to attend.

Carol Scribner, Sam Johnson, and Ryan Eisele, loan specialist with the VA regional office discussed a PowerPoint presentation that described the Native American Direct Loan program. Basically, it is a program which enables Native American veterans to purchase, build, refinance or improve their home on tribal trust land.

There are five easy steps to the loan process. First, the tribal organization must have a signed memorandum of understanding with the VA, a veteran must apply for a certificate of eligibility if he does not have one, a veteran must decide on a home to buy and sign a purchase agreement with a builder, an appraisal must be done on the property and then the veteran can close the loan and move into his new home.

The entire process sounds easy and efficient; however, locally there does not appear to be a rush to purchase homes by veterans for several reasons. There a number of fees, closing cost down payments, interest fees and appraisal fees that can potentially discourage a veteran from fully moving forward on the loan process and successfully closing on it.

In fact, veteran Joe Moore, who works in the RST finance office, said that it has taken him two and a half years to get his tribal home site on trust land and now he is able to go forward with the loan process.

It is likely that other veterans have interrupted their loan process for a number of other reasons and that is another reason that the VA loan specialist are doing their outreach work. They also work with tribal nations in North Dakota, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Scribner also said that a veteran must have good credit and pay a VA funding fee which amounts to 1.25 percent of the total loan and which goes to funding the loan program. The veteran can either pay the fee up front or have it included in the loan. She also said that the monthly premium that veterans end up paying is based upon a "residual income" calculation which is the amount of money that is left over after expenses.

Calvin Waln, Director of the RST Tribal Land Enterprise office said that he would ask the RST tribal council if TLE could underwrite the cost of the appraisal fee which amounts to approximately $500.00 and which would be a great help to veterans.

The Indian Health Service noted that the waiting period for them to install water and sewer on home sites once a loan is approved is anywhere from 3-6 months.

There are several required document that veterans need to attend to in the process of acquiring a loan. There must be proof of tribal membership, a title status report from the BIA, copy of the lease, a BIA archeological survey, and an I.H.S. water and sewer report.

An evening of Lakota social dancing at TCSD South Elementary

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

South Elementary teachers and Lakota students join in a final 'round dance' of the evening during "Family Night." It was an evening of Lakota "social dancing" with Pat Bad Hand and the Red Leaf singers providing the music and Sandra Black Bear prompting the students to get out on the floor.

MISSION - Pat Bad Hand and Sandra Black Bear both come from a traditional Lakota background in which the art of Lakota song and dance has been kept alive in their tiospaye. Pat envisioned the idea of using "social dances and social singing" as part of a modern day intervention and prevention model.

They approached Leta Brandis, Indian Studies Coordinator, for the Todd County School District last year and discussed the idea of offering social dances and singing for many of the schools in the district. Brandis led the way in getting the project approved and so far, "Family Fun Night" has been held at He Dog School, Todd Middle School and South Elementary. It will be held in Spring Creek Community, next, and Brandis said at least two schools each month will play host.

Sandra noted that in early times when the Lakota people found themselves in the dead of winter or other times when not a whole lot was happening, the people would get together in someone's home and socialize. Obviously, there was not a whole lot of room, but the people would come together and share a meal and sing social songs.

When Lakota people engaged in social dancing, it was a way in which such things as respect, generosity, responsibility and interaction were taught. When a rabbit dance, for example, brought the opposite sex together in a social dance it was a time of socialization and fun. Such things as jealousy and competition were not apart of the activity said, Black Bear.

Pat said that such socializing is meant to make one feel good; after all when you use up all your energy and creativity one is less likely to have a lot of negativity. In the traditional sense, there was no need for such prevention and intervention since social gatherings were meant to address that need. People felt a sense of cohesion and community through learning the round dance, rabbit dance, and owl dance.

Bad Hand is employed at the Wanbli Wiconi Tipi detention center, and his purpose is two-fold in encouraging the use of music, language and dance to perpetuate Lakota culture. He has a vested interest in teaching young Lakota people that there is a side to Lakota life that can be fun and lead to a sense of togetherness, while preserving the culture.

Many of the songs he teaches others originated from the middle 1900's, yet they continue to be kept alive through the youth who desire to learn to sing. Bad Hand often instructs his own children and nephews in reviving older songs.

Black Bear comes from the Ironwood Singers and is the daughter of the late Ben and Iva Black Bear. Ben was a great teacher who worked hard to pass on many of the social songs as he would get up in front of a crowd and explain the meaning of a song.

The fun night at South Elementary was held for several hours and just when it looked like no one would show up, the dorm kids showed and soon Sandra was out in the middle teaching them the rabbit dance.

When ten or more teachers showed up with their principal, they got out in the middle and danced to a round dance song as the evening wrapped up. All in all, with close to 30 people in attendance, the informal event was a success and it was exactly what Pat and Sandra had hoped to accomplish.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am writing in regards to a letter you responded to in Dec. 28 issue. Anyway I can only admit this is the first time I am reading this paper and I can honestly say that I really like this paper. I wish I can afford to get issues of it. Anyway, I am writing from the pen. I am not a bad kid, I've just made a few mistakes down the road. I am however finishing my sentence this year.

I am writing in regards to a person who wrote a heartfelt letter to you. First off, I would like to tell this person that I know how she feels about life without her partner and being young with a child.

You see I am in my late 20s and have two daughters. Understand some of us make mistakes, it's nobody's fault or is done intentionally to hurt anyone. You see I was a good kid, raised in a good home, went to Job Corps, have two trades, have one year in college and now this, I've been serving this since 2003, ever since life has been the same. Just that there are some people that need family and loved ones in here, because without that we are nothing. And that makes us wonder who really cares. Anyway some of us look forward to coming home to our loved ones, not to make lost time up, but to start a better future and be what we can be.

Sometimes I feel I have no one because I never hear from my family. I just tell myself they are too busy to write or send a card. You know what though? I don't give up, I still write even though I get no response. I still hope and pray for the best. I will be something in the near future.

Some of us still have dreams in reach with this I'd like to say thank you and hope to come across your paper again soon. Please don't give up on some of us!

Sincerely High Hopes

Dear Sincerely High Hopes:

I know your heart is good and your regrets are huge. I know that you have no intention of ever going back to the pen when you get out. I know that life will be so much harder for you because you are there.

I know that even finding a job is hard when you have a record. I know that the world does not open its arms to ex-cons; and sometimes that makes it very hard for men and women with records to succeed.

I know that you are human and that you need love and approval. I know that every con has a mother that loves him/her. I know that every con has friends and family that have cried for him/her.

I also know that almost every one within the criminal justice system needs counseling. I know they do not have interpersonal skills to sustain good relationships. I know that they are jealous and sometimes violent. I know that most have histories of drug and alcohol use and abuse. I know that most have felt great depression and separation from life and the Creator.

I know that our men and women in the penitentiaries need treatment and restoration of self. I know that most have low life skills and vast impatience with themselves and the world.

I know when they are released that there is no easy path to success and that usually drugs and alcohol are easy to reach; and usually begin the cycle of abuse and mis-treatment, anger, separation and depression again.

I know that for every human being; intimate relationships do not solve problems. I know that it takes two healthy balanced people to have a good relationship and a good life.

I know that each one of us should heal ourselves first, then seek to find a mate; rather than torturing a mate that we love with our problems and insecurities. I know that people right out of prison, divorce, drug and alcohol treatment, bouts of abuse, etc. need time to themselves to recover before they drag someone else into their mess. I know that healing is a journey - not an aspirin.

I know needy people consume each other. They are vampires of energy and consume their mates self-esteem. Needy people need so much affirmation that they are loved and worthy they exhaust other people. Neediness is an illness. It will consume without conscience, because of need, all that it touches. A needy mate will not allow the person they are involved with to have any separate life with others, including family, employment, etc. without destroying with complaint and jealousy the one they love.

That is why I don't recommend promises of true love with prisoners - especially ones met on the Internet, through correspondence, or through other means. Relationships that are already established where one mate goes to prison usually do not work either - because of obvious reasons, and sometimes because of not so obvious reasons.

One of those is that the mate that is still in society is often still involved with the crimes that pushed their mate into prison in the first place.

One is because perhaps when we make bad decisions to involve ourselves in crime (usually drugs), we invite in the reality that we will lose everything; including our families.

I know your family loves you. I have friends in prisons, and relatives too. I do like to correspond with them but I do not have the time to read the epistles that they write to me (letters sometimes 40 pages long). I also find the philosophy expressed in the letters draining. It is hard for us on the outside to take ourselves into the suffering of the ones we love in prison.

Usually, it is easier not to think about it. Instead, I find that I need to concentrate on prevention. I perceive that as a warning and education about partying as youths. No more drugs and alcohol, and we will see crime and assault almost disappear.

You are a good person. You will be free soon. You will be able to find work. You will learn to stay away from drugs and alcohol. Remember, if you need a reason to drink, the Creator will give you one everyday. There is always a reason to drink or do drugs; but there are many more reasons why not to. Prison is a pretty good reason why not to.

You will find balance in your life - but it will consume the next twenty or so years. My heart is with you, and someday, in a better world, you would not have ever found yourself in prison - but instead, in a successful, culturally restorative, spiritually strengthening treatment center with after treatment including employment placement with a good income.

This is the world I advocate. If we can find treatment instead of imprisonment; and thorough education of the youth; and healing of the oppressed; then your experience would become something that only happened in the dark ages; not in the age of Aquarius, also known as the age of enlightenment. That is the age we are supposed to live in. Perhaps you can help, when you get out, by educating the youth, to create that age right here and right now. Good Luck and God Bless you.

Dear Anna,

I read your column all the time. I'm wondering if I will ever 'find true love.' I've had my share of 'hook ups' and a couple of guys seemed interested, but I've never been interested in them. How much longer will I be alone?

Does True Love Exist

Dear Does True Love Exist:

Every soul on the earth has a destiny of love. Every soul has a partner to experience life with in accordance with the highest good. Now, what we don't have is a guarantee that you will meet that person at the age of fifteen, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, or even sixty. Sometimes we just have to wait. Everybody is in such a hurry to make the one in front of them their "soul mate," or "the one," that many zillions of mistakes happen.

Sometimes people are together for other reasons, karmic or soul agreements, or to procreate another life (genetically speaking each of us has certain attributes or characteristics that are hereditary which influence the soul's journey).

You are not an exception. You have true love on this earth, you are entitled to experience what life is really about: love. We, as human beings, have the inherent right to experience love in all aspects. Be patient. You love will come.

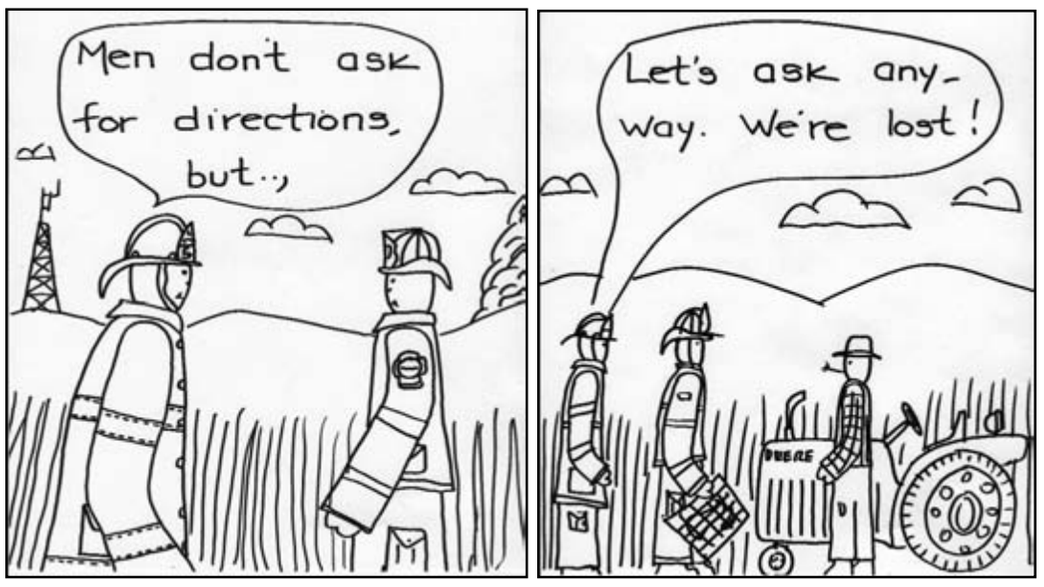
A mate is headed in your direction in about two and a half years. It is a wonderful union, and this person comes from far away. There is much in common, including your journey in education - which is one reason why it is not happening now.

Many times, until we truly heal ourselves and prepare for love, by being healthy and balanced our true loves are held away.

This is because if they came in before we are healthy we could ruin the relationship with our dependencies, co-dependencies, insane and petty jealousies and general romantic but unrealistic versions of what our mates should be.

No mate should be a rescuer. No mate should be required to be a knight in shining armor - because that makes us needing to be rescued, or needy.

Needy is destructive and destruction personified.



Balance and equality in understanding and presentation of our lives will birth the best of all that is possible in love.

When you are mentally, physically, spiritually, emotionally and energetically balanced then you offer the best of yourself to your mate.

Use that as your target in time and seek and be open to your equal.

Dear Anna:

I have several big pock marks on my face and my skin makes me so embarrassed. I want to have plastic surgery and my parents tell me no. We are not poor; both my parents work, we have an okay house, but they don't understand. Can you help them to understand so that I won't hate going to school and out of the house where kids say cruel things to me?

Just has zits and no life

Dear Needs Help:

I'll tell you what. I don't understand Indian Health Services. I don't understand why the quality of treatment available with IHS is less than comparable with private health insurance. Do the treaties state: health care that is less than the average working class American has? What is the deal?

That said.

I do see your family taking you to a dermatologist; where the treatment offered will far lessen the severity of this affliction. I do see a need to change your diet, and the dermatologist will talk with your family about that. I do see dermabrasion treatment in the future that also helps you. There is also light treatment that I see being effective.

The tendency of acne is hereditary. It is also an energetic and sometimes allergic reaction to diet and environment.

Good luck to you.

Dear Anna,

I have been suspended from my position within a program because of gossip. There was not any investigation as far as I know, just accusations and dismissal by the Tribal Council. How can this go on? What do you see? Will I be reinstated?

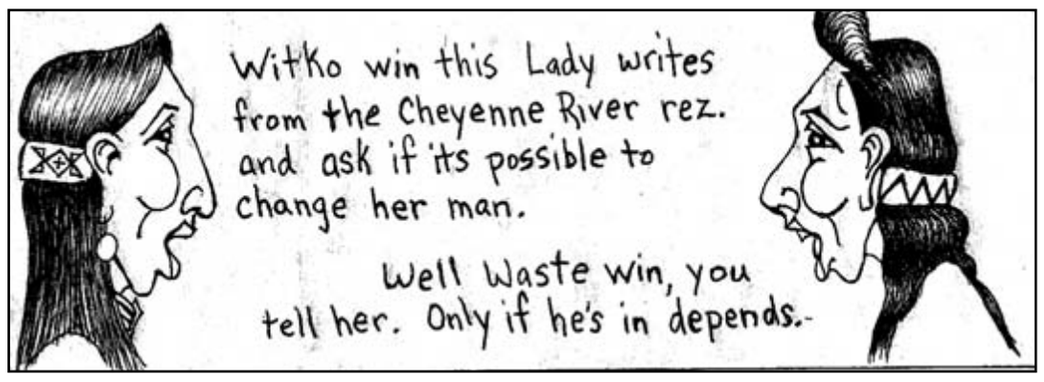
Mad and Dismissed

Dear M & D:

This is a pet peeve of mine. You are about the hundredth person that I know this has happened to in the last few years. Usually, everyone is reinstated, but the council (no matter which one) never seems to learn to investigate - they are big into assumptions.

The level of emotional response that we all see at the council level is juvenile at best. The reactionary feeling that "action must happen now," is not prudent.

One persons word or description should never be taken without a thorough investigation. The emotional and monetary damage, as well as damage to reputations is devastational.



Perhaps the councils do not understand the impact of the bats that they swing.

Everything should be taken "under advisement," with decisions occurring after independent investigation and the testimony of the person(s) being investigated or accused.

Unfortunately, and in your case too, I see someone with an alternative motive. They want your job for a friend, so they have manufactured, with prejudice and innuendo, a scenario which is built to show that you are not effective in your job.

The truth is that you are well liked, do a very good job, and that they changed your job description without due process and outside of regulations. Also, the person that dismissed you does not have the authority to do so.

Of course, this should not be allowed. The consequence for such action should be dismissal of the people that have manufactured the evidence and created such a terrific problem for you. I'm saying fired their damn butts. Anyone that schemes to deprive someone else of their right of livelihood deserves no livelihood themselves.

I am not saying that people that are not doing their jobs deserve or need to be in those jobs. I am saying that general performance reviews reflect ineptness, and that is criteria for dismissal - but even that needs a review process.

I also believe that the council should have little if no say-so in the micro management of programs. There are Directors, committees, etc. in place to do that.

Honesty and efficiency are not bedfellows with politics.

By the way - you will get your job back. And, unfortunately, the two women that concocted this scheme will not be fired - they are sleeping with council members (in one way or the other). I pray that the councils of the reservations find the strength to be good representatives to and for their children, using honesty, and integrity rather than their shallow, jealous, and manipulative motives. Enuf Said.

Dear Anna,

Hi There! I have written to you before back in 2005 and I have decided to try and get some answers again. When I wrote to you I asked you if an ex-boyfriend loved me as much as he said he did.

You told me that he did but he had some anger issues that he had to get take care of. Well, I married the man and now I regret it. Although, I haven't been with him since 2005 because he was picked up on a federal warrant and was sent back to prison.

He was sent back because he violated his probation.

He was caught having intimate relations with a girl in a treatment facility, which wasn't his first time.

I do know that he did love me but not the way a husband and wife is supposed to love each other or because he doesn't know how to love, show love or to be in love.

His family life wasn't all that great to begin with and he probably wasn't given the love that he needed growing up.

Anyway, now that I think about it I guess I really didn't love him that way either. I know that I will always have some feelings for him because he is the father of my children and we will always have that bond.

However, I am finally ready to move on with my life. I am filing for divorce and I am now a separated single mother with children of all ages to raise.

Some days I wonder if I will ever find the man of my dreams.

Will I ever find true love?

Will I ever find someone who will love me as much as I am capable of loving them?

I know that I will never truly be lonely because I have my children, but when they all grow up, where will I be?

Can you please tell me if there is hope and love in my future?

Oh, and another thing I just want you to know that I will not settle for just anyone.

I know what I want and what I deserve. Is there anyone out there for me?

From, Lonely and hopeful

Dear Lonely and Hopeful:

Whew! Boy, just like the rest of us, we all seem to need to marry the wrong guy before we ever even find the right one. That is known as desperation and a decision that being alone is not good.

Better to know that alone is a lot better than living in hell with someone else.

You will find the right man for you. However, there is quite a bit of time before you find him and he finds you.

Please don't make all the men you meet, date and get to know candidates for "happily ever after." Most women can't even have lunch with a guy without making him a candidate for marriage.

Remember that 90 percent of relationships (not marriages - the key word here is relationships) do not work out.

Thusly, God invented Dating.

And it was good.

Date.

Get to know and see a man for who he is, and see yourself as you are.

Wash out your eyes. The fairy-tale, perfect, knight in shining armor man lives in your mind, not in your reality.

You will get to meet him as soon as you become his "dream, fantasy woman": Ready to have fun twenty-four seven, loves to wait on him hand and foot, laugh at his cute little ways including his burping and farting, be ecstatic to clean up after him, cater to his relatives, buy his beer, work and support him, while he reflects on your cute little ass, love his politics, believe that women don't have brains, let him rule every decision, buys him his sports car and his pick-up truck, love his sexist jokes, never be crabby, emotional or hormonal, always look your best, never raise your voice or criticize him, be a better cook than his mother, don't have a life or friends of your own, and agree with everything he says. When you are that way, then the man of your dreams will be made available to you.

Please revamp who you are waiting for. Basically, philosophical and spiritual alignment are primary, secondarily, cultural alignment, and thirdly, genuinely liking each other and having similar senses of humor really help.

Alignment with family views, decisions about responsibility to relatives, geographical and career alignment, and appreciation for each others differences are important.

Beyond that, everything is negotiable if there is agreement to live in a conscious relationship.

In a conscious relationship both of you agree to be in a relationship, take care of each other, support each other and not to deliberately take away from each other emotionally, financially, physically, mentally and spiritually will help make things work.

Successful relationships are based on the mutual efforts and true decisions of two people to be together and to love compromise for the highest good of both people.

It ain't easy finding two healthy people with healthy minds, bodies and spirits, who are in alignment for success together. Mostly, the odds work against you - 90 percent of the time.

That's why you have to wait, and date!

Good Luck!

June 24, 1935 to Jan. 22, 2006

Will be at Red Shirt Table on Sunday June 24, 2007

Time and Place will announced at a later time

This is due to the unpredictable weather conditions this time of the year

In loving memory of our daddy, uncle, grandpa and great grandpa

When Wakan Tanka saw that you were tiring and called you home on that cold wintery night, it broke our hearts to let you go and watch you slip away into heaven's welcoming light. But even so, we couldn't watch you suffer as you struggled to 'Not' leave us without a fight. Oh, how we wished you could have stayed.

All the memories we shared in this lifetime. The happy times… all the memories of a life you generously shared has helped us through grief, through the toughest time of our lives when we had to say goodbye. You, your words of comfort and guidance has carried us through our tears and through our heartache missing you and wishing that you didn't have to leave us this way. And yes, we didn't forget to pray for the lonely souls along the way, because it was what you would have us to do. That was just your way. Your memories come flooding back from time to time and hearts reach for the love we shared, only to find that all we have is each other. You gave us so much in the life you lived, the time you so generously gave us.

As you journeyed on without us, you left a part of you that we will always cherish. The memories, the part of you that makes us who we are, because you were such a big part of our lives. You wiped away our tears and encouraged us to go on time after time and now as the year of grieving comes near, we wish to thank the people who took time to help us through our grief in losing you.

We invite everyone to a memorial dinner and stone blessing on June 24 at Red Shirt Table.

Love you always,

Indian country will be impacted by Bush's 2008 budget

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

WASHINGTON - On Feb. 6, the office of Senator Tim Johnson discussed the impact of President Bush's proposed 2008 budget and its impact on South Dakota tribes.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs' Office of Indian Programs will be funded at $2.259 billion for fiscal year 2007 and would see an increase of $18 million in President Bush's 2008 proposed budget. BIA construction programs would be reduced from the 2007 level of $342 million to $241 million, while the Human Services program within OIP is set at $128 million which is $118 less than the 2007 level of $146 million.

Human Services assist in paying for burial and welfare costs and also funds the tribal work experience program (TWEP.) The Johnson O'Malley program will see a decrease of fifty percent from the 2007 budget of $16.4 million.

Sen. Johnson has noted in the past that, "Conditions in Indian Country are less than sufficient. The federal government has a responsibility to Indian tribes and their membership. Assisting tribes to become self-sufficient should be a top priority for the federal government, including fostering an environment that has all tribal and federal agencies working together."

Native American Housing Block Grants will see a decrease of $17 million from the 2007 budget of $624 million, while funding for the American Indian Housing Council which provides technical assistance to tribes was zeroed in the 2008 budget.

The Office of Special Trustee will see an increase of $36 million over

Healing project for women uses cultural mapping and focuses on power of self

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - A six week project designed to empower Lakota women and their families through cultural healing will soon be available at Kyle beginning Feb. 19.

The program is available for any woman in the community who is interested in empowering herself and her family through activities designed from Lakota culturally healing methods

The project Winyan Ki Igluonihanipi, which translates to women reclaiming sacredness, is a project of Cangleska, Inc. funded through a $298,000 grant from the Administration for Native Americans.

This project is designed with a healing center that will support Lakota women, their partners, and family in seeking a healthy and a balanced lifestyle. The center will also offer mental health services through a counselor and treatment methods that will help improve the lives of families and community.

The center is located just west of Kyle, on the hilltop, in a blue doublewide near Cangleska's new building, which will house a shelter and the administration offices.

USDA consulting with tribes on changing commodity funds

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The United State Department of Agriculture is consulting with state agencies and tribes to arrive at a new methodology to allocate funds for the program which distributes commodities on Indian reservations. The old allocation formula has not been changed for decades and apparently creates inequities among Indian tribal organizations and state agencies. The current practice is to negotiate individually with over 100 tribes and a proposed method of funding would standardize the process using a set calculation.

The USDA is planning a multi-year phased in implementation of its new formula when complete and it will begin with a basic grant program that is calculated using past expenditures and number of program participants. It will be designed so that there will be no reduction in funding by any Indian

OST executive board asks legal panel to review tribal constitution and election

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - While the new council and administration move ahead establishing goals and priorities for the Steele/Brewer administration, the executive board has passed a resolution appointing a three member legal panel to review both the 2006 tribal election and the OST Constitution.

On the one hand, the tribe is planning an orientation for the new council for Rapid City from Feb. 12 through 15 with special assistant to the president, Eileen Janis, coordinating. On the other hand Dan Naranho, a former chief judge of the Kickapoo traditional tribe of Texas and alternative dispute resolution expert has agreed to serve on the panel and oversee the panel's progress. According to Jeanette Eagle Hawk, OST public relations, John St. Clair, chief judge of the court on Indian Offenses on Wind River and John Thorne, a Native American lawyer and a current court of appeals judge for the State of Utah have been selected for the review panel but have not been notified or have yet to commit to participating on the panel.

With the goal of improving and strengthening the OST election process, the OST secretarie's office, the court of election of appeals and the election board have been asked to give full cooperation to the review panel. According to the executive board resolution passed unanimously Jan. 5 by William Brewer, Elizabeth Waters and Dave Pourier, the review panel has been authorized to review the tribal constitution and election code, to review the roles and functions of the election board and the court of election appeals, review the role of the tribal court and recommend what role the court should play in reviewing violations of civil rights by the election board or the court of election appeals and to review the decisions made by both the election board and the court of election appeals concerning the 2006 tribal election.

"Although the other two panel members have yet to make a commitment," said Kevin Steele, judiciary committee coordinator and the point person for the review panel, "we are hoping they agree to participate and more so, their review and subsequent recommendations will strengthen the tribe's election process for the future and make sure that we do not repeat the difficulties we went through in 2006."

the 2007 budget to a total of $186 for trust services. Meanwhile, the Indian Land Consolidation will be seeing a decrease of $21 million.

The Indian Health Services appears to fare well with an increase of $237 in President Bush's budget to $3.991 billion. The I.H.S. Facilities funding request, however, will see a decrease of $25 million at $346 million. Clinical services will also see an increase of $246 million.

The Special Diabetes program for Indians will remain at $150 million, while the Urban Indian Health Program was eliminated from the 2008. It is funded in 2007 at a level of $33 million and in South Dakota there are three urban areas to be affected, including Pierre, Sioux Falls and Rapid City if the 2008 budget becomes reality.

In a related issue, the Navajo-Gallup pipeline planning project was cut from President Bush's budget. The project received $479,000 in 2006 for studies associated with the project. The Department of Justice is also eliminating funding for tribal courts, jails and grants in the amount of $125 billion, according to the Gallup Independent and this will impact tribes all across the nation. The BIA's Safe Indian Communities will receive an increase of $16 million.

As proposed funding to Indian Country may see funding cuts, the cost of the war and defense spending will see an increase and will represent a significant portion of the 2008 budget.

Congress will likely scrutinize the 2008 proposed closely and with the Democratic controlled Congress it will be interesting to see which programs are restored to adequate levels.

tribe or state agency.

Rosebud Sioux Tribal council representative from District 3 Antelope, Robert Moore, said, "There is a change as to how they will fund administrative costs. If the proposal is approved, the impact at Rosebud would be the loss of two to three jobs. A lack of employees will diminish services. We spoke out against the new formula."

The bureaucratic jargon contained in the USDA packet which was given to Indian tribal organizations in Rapid City recently took some sorting out, however, it explains the need to change the current inequitable method for calculating funding levels while explaining the work of the Funding Methodology Work Group that has been assembled. The Work Group is comprised of eight representatives from Indian tribal organizations and state agencies that administer the Food Distribution Program on Indian Reservations.

A meeting with the Food Distribution Program on Indian Reservations work group was held at the Journey Museum in Rapid City on January 24 with RST council representatives, Jo Colombe, Robert Moore Cyril "Whitey" Scott, Patsy Valanda, Stephanie Sully and RST commodity director, Ruth Riefel in attendance.

"Our message to the national administrator is that tribes felt it should be a government to government arrangement. To meet with individual governments and to see what impact this would make. The National Congress of American Indians passed a resolution in support of the formula. The mountain plains tribes are going to NCAI to get the resolution rescinded. We are concerned that FNS interprets the NCAI resolution as endorsed by tribal governments. NCAI is not an organization and because there was no opposition to this. We talked about demographics and the fact that commodities are not a supplemental program, but a subsistence program. We spoke of our growing population and the resources not keeping pace" said Moore.

The Food Distribution Program on Indian Reservations program groups thirty tribes into the mountain plains region and it includes all of the Lakota tribes in South Dakota in addition to the North Dakota and Montana tribes. The state agencies from Montana and North Dakota are also a part of the grouping. There are five regions in addition to the Food Nutrition Services headquarters office staff.

Each region has two Native representatives on the Work Group list; however, the mountain plains region only has one. Moore said, "The national administrator, Roberto Salazar, is committed to having another voice for our people with tribal representation."

Basically, Food and Nutrition Services attempted to arrive at a new methodology to calculate the distribution of allocated funds to the regional offices based upon fixed percentages that have been in use for years.

In 1994, 1998 and 2000 there were resolutions passed in support of a proposal for several funding models, however, neither progressed very far.

The fixed percentages allocate 28.48 percent of the funding allocation to the mountain plains region, which is the largest, while the smallest region, the southeast division gets an allocation of 0.77 percent.

The system is somewhat inequitable as Indian tribal organizations of the same size may receive significantly different funding amounts.

Apparently many of the Indian tribal organizations also differ in the way in which commodities are dispersed. They range from 23 participants per month to one which has over 10,000 participants. Some offer their program out of one location, while another might allow participants to shop for their commodities much like one sees in a grocery store.

Some Indian tribal organizations deliver to more than one location and these are called tailgate sites.

The proposed model for funding starts with a basic grant of $10,000 dollars and adds in two other components which include past expenditures and average monthly participation.

The expenditures for the last three years are used and 5 percent of the highest one is included in the allocation. Next, the last three levels of participation are averaged and a percentage of the national level is arrived at. This percentage is multiplied by the total funding level for this component. The three figures then make up the total basic grant amount.

At this point, with the new methodology not having been finalized yet, it would seem difficult to calculate each state agency or Indian tribal organization's share as it would be dependent upon the total amount appropriated by Congress. Each regional office would also get a 15 percent set percentage for those who need additional funding beyond the basic grant and this would have to be negotiated. No agency would receive a basic grant amount that is no less than the federal allocation received the prior year.

The Rosebud Sioux tribe received fiscal year 2006 allocations in the amount of $536,766 and they had an average monthly participation of 2, 062 and a per participant amount of $260.32. The Oglala Sioux had a 2006 allocation of $1,073,727 with an average monthly participation of 5,090 and a per participant amount of $210.95.

Somehow, the smaller tribes have a higher per participant amount and perhaps the new methodology is designed to rectify this inequity. For example, the Little River Band has only 70 participants and they received $711.17 per participant in 2006. That figure is considerably higher compared to the amounts at Rosebud and Pine Ridge.

In April the Food and Nutrition Service will meet and review comments and oral testimony which were presented at their regional meetings.

The recommendations will be developed and submitted to the Director of FNS. The regional meetings were held in Green Bay, Wis., Rapid City, Oklahoma City, Okla, and San Francisco, Calif. in January.

of opinions about just what will come out of the review process. Past president, Alex White Plume sees the need for an entire new election, some feel that just redoing the presidential election will square things up while others feel we are already into a new administration and the best that we can expect from a review is recommendations to strengthen the tribal election process for the future.

Following the OST primary election in October of 2006, the court of election appeals declared the primary election null and void due to a number of discrepancies and misprinted ballots used in polling places across the reservation. The council voted to not accept the decision of the court of election appeals, voted to continue forward with the general election and to remove the court of election appeals. Five days before the general election, the election board decided to remove Alex White Plume from the ballot because of a felony conviction in the early 1980s. White Plume moved into the presidency after Cecelia Fire Thunder was removed as tribal president in June of 2006. White Plume was the top vote getter for president in the primary and immediately filed an appeal with the court of election appeals.

Rather than issuing a decision on White Plume's appeal, the new court of election appeals recommended starting over with a new timeframe. The election board had printed two sets of ballots, one with Steele and Fire Thunder and a set with Steele and White Plume. The election board went with the Steele and Fire Thunder ballots on general election day citing the appeals court's failure to respond to White Plume's appeal. On the day of the general election, the court of election appeals certified White Plume as a candidate who in turn sent the decision onto the chief of police who sent out a memo ordering the confiscation of all of the ballot boxes.

Steele won the presidency by a wide margin and the new tribal government was sworn in on Dec. 5 at Piya Wiconi, Oglala Lakota College's main office outside of Kyle. For a couple of days both Steele and White Plume operated out of the Red Cloud building in Pine Ridge.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs through their regional director recognized the new tribal government right after the Dec. 5 swearing in ceremony and stated that the BIA would honor the decisions made by the tribal courts. The Bureau has also agreed to pay for the costs of the three member review panel supporting the intent of the XB resolution to strengthen the tribe's overall election process.

Healing

accomplish the healing activities project: Gloria Pourier Cournoyer, program coordinator; Clovia Around Him, project advocate; Amia LeBeaux, intern, Dr. Peg Lesnick, counselor; and Rosalie Little Thunder, cultural consultant.

Cournoyer said the sessions are free of charge, and the staff will help find resources and provide small incentives for childcare. Transportation will also be available if needed.

The healing methods used in the program are based on Cultural Mapping. Cournoyer said, "The activities will help us look at who we are historically. We will focus on the healing of the nagi, the 'spirit', the tawacin, the consciousness and the will of the individual, and also the relationships within the tiwahe, the household. At the end of the six weeks, they will have a good sense of who they are".

In the Lakota language, the term waableza means to have good perception and thinking skills; gaining wisdom through life. Activities are planned that will help participating women develop the skill to waableza with more cultural depth and that could help them to apply that skill to everyday decision-making.

Little Thunder, is fluent in Lakota and says that the development of cultural mapping came out of the need to find ways within our own culture to heal the effects of prolonged suffering. Alcohol and drug use are obvious symptoms; the need to sedate the pain.

Cultural mapping works well for the participants of the annual men's re-education program as well. Kiwicasa Camp is also sponsored and staffed by Cangleska.

As with Winyan Igluonihanpi, it takes a team effort of very thoughtful and caring people that must think through the effects of historical oppression and poverty upon Lakota individuals. The hardest part of this work is to consider traditional values and behaviors that are distorted by contemporary misbehaviors.

Little Thunder says, "this model is not an existing Euro model but is original in development. It draws heavily from the Lakota language; the terminology of natural human weaknesses and Lakota disciplines. The instructions for cultural healing are in the language".

"For example, we learn from childhood to waunsila, meaning to have compassion for others. This value alone could be a science within itself. Waunsila shaped our culture as a means of survival. However, we are now living in another culture wherein waunsila sometimes make us very vunerable to misbehavior," she said. "As mothers and grandmothers, we do not ableza that we enable misbehavior for those we love. In practicing the habits of compassion, we cater to enabling alcoholism and drug dependence in those we love. Sometimes 'old ways' are not as effective. Of course we should unsila our relatives, but we must be aware when we are helping and when we are enabling. "

"That is the challenge, how do we make adjustments? How do we set up 'cultural triggers for ourselves? "

Cournoyer further adds, "Even "cultural trigger" is coining a new term, but the need for "cultural triggers" is so obvious. When our relatives struggle with today's pressures and misbehave, then as mothers or grandmothers, we question ourselves. We feel the need to respond in a way that is natural and cultural and yet, we must be careful that we aren't contributing to dependencies, that we aren't hurting our relatives. We are Lakota in an American society and that's a tough road."

Cournoyer says that developing healing activities to help participants make healthier cultural transitions has been a challenge, but a good challenge.

"What has been really exciting is to find the answers within the language and the culture," said Cournoyer.

Another example this team offered of cultural conflict is in the term waas'in ye sni ye, which means not to cause others to want what you have. This concept is completely contrary to capitalism and individualism.

It's a value that was important to keeping balance. In today's society, we have to make adjustments in order to survive economically.

Little Thunder added that in the 'aic'ibleza"; the self analysis feature of the model, we examine the factors that influence our personal decision-making and our behavior. In the activity of memory mapping, "we often have significant memories that have impacted us in our lives, and through activities, the participants will process those memories and feel the need to create new positive memories." She said, "so you don't feel icky when you hear that certain song."

She said some people walk around holding a lot of pain, packing bags full of grudges. Learning to let go is essential to healing. Forgiving can be powerful.

But that doesn't mean that people who've hurt us and aren't feeling bad at all about it should be forgiving. We have to learn when to hold people accountable and when to let go and how to do all this. Wacintanka is such an important discipline to learn, to strive for."

Another example Little Thunder gave was the behavior of wacinko or what we know as "pouting". Although this is a behavior that is natural to human beings, in today's relationships, it is actively practiced to not only regain personal power, but to manipulate others. In the Kiwicasa Camp, we ask men to be very conscious of this behavior. And again, we need to practice wacintanka to discipline this weakness.

"So these are some of the healing pieces, helping the wounded learn how to heal themselves," Little Thunder said.

She said just as the culture has evolved, the disciplines must evolve to respond to the pressing needs of today. "We have different needs now, new factors in today's time, such as alcoholism and drugs. Chemical dependency is relatively new to the last several generations," she said. "And this organization, this project is being very innovative in trying to understand the cultural challenges and to use traditional concepts and practices to help women heal, It's cultural empowerment."

There will be individual and group counseling available and that is where Dr. Lesmick's expertise will enhance the project. In family mapping, if you see a clear imbalance, that's where it takes group therapy or one on one to help balance one's relationships.

Cournoyer emphasized that the activities around the six weeks will help, "How we came to where we are, historically, how do we heal ourselves, in recognizing the effects of oppression, how do we let go of that using rituals that we have culturally. How do we heal that hurt and anger and understand why people use."

The activities will help women to understand who they are, their weaknesses and their strengths and how to use them to become spiritually, physically and emotionally stronger.

In understanding those concepts they can enhance themselves, strengthen their families and that will translate to the community, she said.

She emphasized the activities will be a learning process that designed for fun and for healing with food and celebration.

The center is a place where women can come and it will be a place of support.

The project can be used as an in-patient substance abuse readiness program or as an aftercare activity upon completion of an in-patient program. It is a valuable resource for the court system, social services, or other agencies assisting women in making lifeway changes that will improve the quality of life for families.

"We are excited and honored to be able to offer this service to our community," said Karen Artichoker, Cangleska Inc. director.

Dr. Lesnick will be an asset to the project as will Clovia Around Him. Clovia's role will be valuable as the daughter and translator of her father's (late John Around Him) teachings.

Dr. Lesnick, Ph.D., MFT intern, specializes in domestic violence, grief counseling and healing families and individuals.

Her work has taken her to many countries across many cultural boundaries over the past 25 years.

If you are interested in being a part of the six week women's project, call the center at 455-1526 or Cangleska at 455-2244.

Wouldn't it be a fascinating journey to speak the language of our Lakota heroes?

By Robert Two Crow
Special to the Times

Any Indigenous or Native American Indian language issue specific to "language loss" is often viewed and analyzed from a western scholar's perspective and often discussed using the English language.

The end result of such debate is usually the same:

1) American Indian languages are doomed,

2) somebody needs to do something about it, and

3) there is an immediate need and/or lack of funding if any attempt at "saving the language" is deemed necessary.

In any case, most arguments end with the following consequence: the Native American Indian language in question is typically in dire straits and, at worst, on the verge of extinction.

In other words, will our grandchildren speak Lakota? Will their children - our great grandchildren - speak the language of the Lakota Oyate?

A good answer is not possible at this time from anyone or from anywhere. In fact, reliance on scholarly research is not an option because there is none available that is largely Lakota specific.

Accordingly, I cannot begin to predict whether my grandchildren will speak and comprehend Lakota.

As a Lakota speaker from the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, I refuse to accept this final summation regarding the plight of the Lakota language.

Nonetheless, I admit that I cannot offer an explanation or present an overall solution by myself.

I can only hope that Lakota is spoken by the next generations. Therefore, the motive behind this article is to suggest further community-level discussion about language issues that will impact Lakota families throughout Indian reservations.

My relatives, I believe that it is our responsibility, as Lakota speakers, to respond positively to those who want to learn to speak Lakota, especially the youth - our grandchildren.

But, being imperfect, it is naturally easy to worry and feel apprehensive as uncharted matters materialize (and they usually do) and threaten our good intentions.

To list and illustrate more specifically, some possible examples of what I mean: how do I, as a Lakota speaker, accomplish this daunting task?

Who will be willing to help? What steps do I need to take?

Where do I teach Lakota? And, finally, do I develop a curriculum?

Literally, some individuals will think that the only answer is to do nothing hoping someone else will address the issue or think that it is not a problem and it will eventually go away.

And, of course, actually doing nothing deserves a good old Indian explanation. So, for the sake of clarity, it would be better to ponder a view that is befitting basic common sense, personal experience, and Lakota knowledge over continued dependence on a disconnected unfamiliar system to solve Native language problems.

I say this because of my twenty plus years experience as an Indian educator involved conducting language surveys, withstanding a short-lived language teaching career of the Lakota language, mapping school curriculum, actual involvement in Lakota immersion camps, and advocating for people to use the Lakota language. Realistically, none of the strategies have produced practical results with an exception to immersion programs. (More about immersion further on.)

With good intention, language surveys have their place and often reveal interesting results and data. The findings are usually calculated into percentages to reflect how many of the respondents want to speak or learn Lakota or how many just don't want to speak at all.

Another reason for surveys is to show how many speakers are left and so on and so forth. Interestingly, the information gathered never tells what needs to be done as far as language teaching/learning is concerned.

However, information gleaned from surveys is repeatedly an advantage when writing proposals. They are used as statistics to show a need in such areas as training, materials development and information dissemination promises. Other than reasons for grant writing, most survey data ends up tucked away forever or simply disappear until another grant is advertised.

My short-lived career as an instructor began in a classroom at the college level. It really felt good because I was going to teach the Lakota language. I was excited, thrilled and proud. As a matter of fact, it was beautiful. The teaching materials were excellent and I enjoyed the students as they completed the work required for that semester.

We had fun. Later during the same year, I encountered elementary teachers who were using the same materials I used at the college level. I was crushed and dismayed. I decided not to teach any more Lakota language courses at the college level.

Writing curriculum for school systems focused on Lakota language learning is discouraging and, on occasion, disappointing. I personally feel that there is no real support for the endeavor; it is merely done to meet expressed school curriculum obligations and pacify concerned parents. Ironically, some parents and guardians ask why learning Lakota is important. Others ask if there is truly an economic benefit from speaking Lakota since no one speaks it anymore? Other school problems include Orthography and ethnocentric thinking and differences over what a particular word means. School schedules do not allocate enough time for teaching enough Lakota to grasp the very basics of the language. The obstacles and challenges are endless and oftentimes hinder good language teaching/learning instruction. On a slightly brighter side, current Lakota language projects in school systems are commendable and need vigorous support from the home and community if they are to continue.

Lakota immersion camps are relatively new and glowing results linked to language learning proficiency still remains uncertain at this point. As a matter of fact, critical examination from language teachers and language learners is yet to be seen. Based on my experience, most immersion camps start out with a good "game plan" but become advanced bilingual camps midway due to poor teacher-student ratios. Clearly, immersion programs require further study and research as well as more suitable teacher-student configurations if effective language acquisition is to be accomplished. As for now, immersion concepts appear favorable if implementation is carried out with highly trained language instructional teams using appropriate strategies matched with adequate materials.

Wouldn't it be an advantage to the Lakota, if advanced and proficient Lakota speakers gathered for meetings to discuss the status of the Lakota language and its related problems and concerns? Without regards to proper credentials, Lakota speakers have a wealth of information and knowledge about teaching and learning Lakota.

Most of the information is based on custom and is usually oral and unwritten. Moreover, people working in schools as teachers and/or teacher aides assigned to language instructional duties have specific knowledge about what works and what doesn't work in the classroom. Very seldom are these people brought together as a team of consultants for designing a premiere Lakota language teaching/learning model. In my judgment, experts of this caliber should be highly involved in any type of design or plan that involves teaching/learning to speak Lakota.

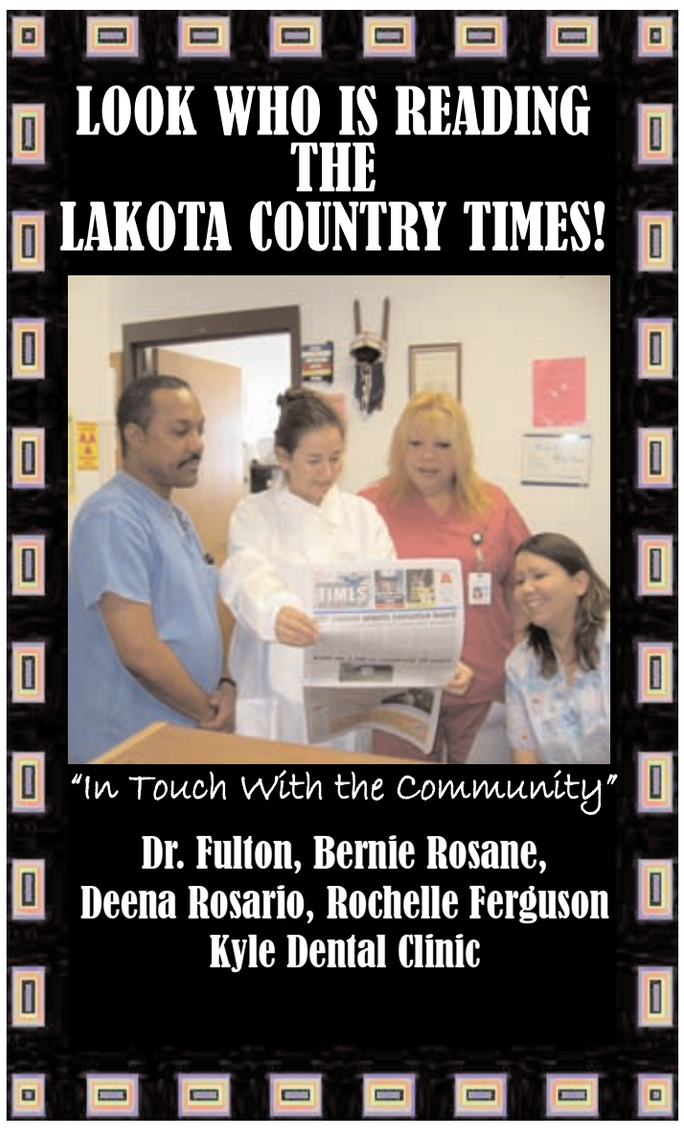
Their knowledge and experience is an untapped resource and will soon be gone.

The Lakota language is a special gift from the Creator to our ancestors, who've passed the language on to our great grandparents and grandparents.

They in turn passed it on to our parents and so on. At this point, it is today's Lakota speaker who must pass the language on to the next generations. Also, it is vital that schools and other institutions in the community (i.e., government and tribal offices, clinics, hospitals, the business and economic systems, etc.) help create environments conducive to speaking Lakota. Lakol iyapi is a living language and learning it can occur if it is spoken regularly by everybody on a daily basis.

In a closing thought to ponder, when one speaks Lakota proficiently the following statement may conceivably be understood and interpreted without difficulty: "Instead of merely referring to historically famous chiefs by name in English (i.e., Crazy Horse, Red Cloud, Sitting Bull, Little Wound and others) wouldn't it be a more fascinating journey to speak the language of our Lakota heroes?" Other enlightening thoughts to consider should you encounter doubts about learning the Lakota language:

*Not being able to speak Lakota is not your fault nor your family's fault,



*In a good way, presume or expect to speak Lakota as a second language instead of trying to copy proficient speakers,

*Despite major efforts to eradicate Native languages by U.S federal policy, the Lakota language continues to survive,

*Promote more local roundtable discussions (in Lakota) about language issues, and

*Just talk Lakota and enjoy life's humor.

Sometimes mainstream media sees things differently

Todd County High School was given a "black eye" in a recent USA Today article written by Ledyard King. The article identified Todd County High School as one of the most dangerous schools in the nation. The other schools were located in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Apparently, Gannett News Services got the idea of asking the Education Departments of all fifty states who they would identify as being the most "persistently dangerous" schools out of a total of 90,000 public schools.

Todd County High School just happened to make the list, however, there is such inconsistency in what schools report to their state departments of education, that the distinction needs some clarification. Schools are required by the No Child Left Behind Act to report school safety statistics.

The reasoning is that any child who has been the victim of a violent crime should not get stuck in a persistently dangerous school and should be given the option to transfer.

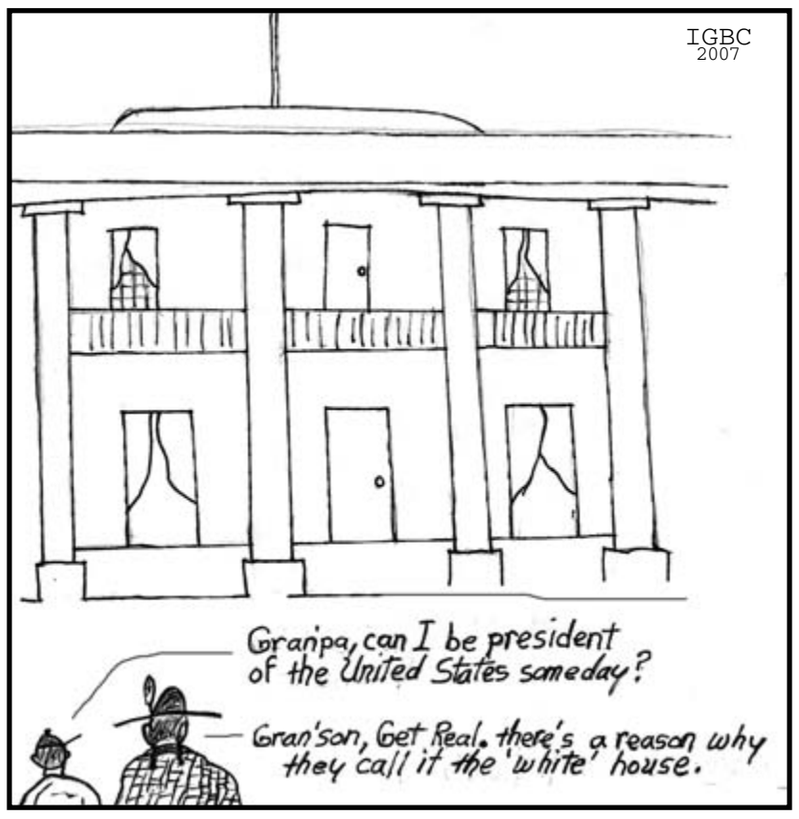
It cannot be good for a school's public image to be placed on the list and, indeed, there were some problems with defining exactly what "persistently dangerous" means.

Apparently, the schools which are very conscientious and report all incidences, even the minor ones, are in danger of being designated as such. In essence, being candid and open like many schools are, can invite such scrutiny and misinterpretation of what is actually occurring at a school.

On the other hand, many large school districts under report their safety statistics and many experience a large volume of violence, yet they fail to report them and can escape the designation as being persistently dangerous.

Such incidents as fights, hair pulling, pushing and shoving, or perhaps even incidents which happen to and from school are most likely reported by the more conscientious schools like Todd County and then, the intent of the reporting requirement gets obviously misapplied.

Actually, there is no such list that is officially maintained anywhere, but Gannett News Service conducted their own assessment and came up with the idea to create such a list.



We feel the label was wrongly misapplied to Todd County High School. A couple of attempts to visit with Dr. Bordeaux, superintendent of TCSD were made; however, he was on travel both times.

We are aware that Todd County High School is laboring very hard to comply with the mandates of NCLB and are certain that they will not be on the list next year.

They are a relatively large school district and they have many administrators, teachers and parents who have a strong sense of what is happening on the ground, so to speak.

The school is grounded in the Lakota culture and as such, it is not much different than many other tribal schools on the northern plains.

The mandates of the NCLB Act are necessarily difficult for many schools across the nation and perhaps future funding and a reassessment of NCLB's intent will be assessed.

Words from the 'trenches'

Mismatched gloves still keep you warm

By Connie Smith-Blanco

Today is a good day. The snow that fell on my car did not turn to ice so I didn't have to scrape the ice off my windshield or dig for my gloves. In our house, we never have to worry about not having gloves to wear.

I realize we are very lucky in that respect. We do have plenty of gloves, it's just that none of them match each other. It would be easy if they were all the same color, like black for instance, but try telling that to my kids.

When it's time for glove buying (I try to do it in the summer, when gloves are cheap) my kids insist on stripes, neon colors, lightning bolts...in other words, anything "but" black. (my daughter calls that a "granny" color…anything that isn't "hip" or "sweet" is "granny" to her) At the end of each winter season we are stuck with only one surviving glove from these "non-granny" gloves, which is then tossed into the "winter glove drawer" with the rest of the non-matching gloves. (I won't allow them to be thrown away…my mother always taught me that you should use, reuse, and reuse "anything" again, if at all possible, and that goes for gloves too)

So today is good. And though I didn't need them, I put on my mismatched pair of black gloves and drove to work. How can black gloves be mismatched you say?

Well, there are a hundred shades of black and each black glove comes in it's own, never to be duplicated again, size. So essentially one glove is large and dark black and one glove is a small light black, or gray and yet they both were sold as size "medium black gloves".

But today is a good day. Amanda and I worked late last night to put the finishing touches on our 12 page Valentine's Day paper.

Last night we discovered we would have to turn it into a 16 page paper. When that happens we are used to jumping to the task…..it's just this month we are bogged down with these mysterious "extra" duties that came about when our CPA quit to go on to greener pastures. We wish her well, she has been a godsend when it came to sending out those important checks that pay our tax bills, rent, the printer, the mailer, the telephone company. Well you get the picture.

Now "I" get to do that and am trying to sandwich those new things into an already "squeezed" work week. And in the meantime our 12 page paper turns into 16 pages and life goes on.

But it's a good day. We're grateful to have jobs, and we're happy when we come to work and there's an envelope under the door with AD money in it. (unfortunately we do have to sell advertising space in our paper, it's what helps keep our creditors happy, the lights on, the water running, and the Rapid City Journal printing our paper! So payment for these ads comes in many forms, and once in awhile that form is even cash.)

The other day Amanda was explaining something to me and she said, "the woman was Iyeska, like you." I wasn't sure how to take that, compliment or otherwise as I didn't know what the word meant. It was a perfect opportunity to find out.

I asked her and she smiled and said it could mean several things but was meant to explain when someone is not "100 percent" Native American and in the old days they would use the term half-breed or refer to the Indian interpreters that traveled with the white men across Indian country as Iyeska.

Obviously some were not full blood as that is how they knew the English language to begin with.

So now I know I'm Iyeska and proud of it, I don't want to be anything else and I can't be anything else. I think my higher power has put me and Amanda, together to get different perspectives on life in rezland.

Everyday we open each other's eyes to both ways of life…Iyeska and Less-Iyeska…causing us to both laugh out loud or feel immense sadness at what we learn.

It works. Today's a good day in the trenches.

A call to the Oceti Sakowin Oyate

Dear Editor:

To the Members of the Peta Sakowin Omniciye of the Tituwan Oyate:

The atmosphere in the United States and the attitude of the present Administration is back to the 1820s during the westward migration of immigrants and the Indian removal off their homelands. The expansion of exploratory drilling and the opening up of lands to there resources again is the sign of unresolved historical injustices to the original Peoples.

I have heard through human rights, watchdog and activist groups that this present Administration and Congress is the most corrupt in history. This has created a continuation of desecration to the land, air, water, wildlife and mainly to the health and welfare of the people.

This desecration through the taken of resources by special interests that the present Bush Administration caters to through the presidential appointment of Secretary's to the Department of the Interior and the Department of the Treasury.

These two departments are involved in an 11 year litigation that was brought on by a courageous woman named Elouise Cobell and some elders from her tribe. This lawsuit is now called Cobell v. Kempthorne the newly appointed Secretary of the Interior. This case involves the mismanagement of the historical accounting of 500,000 Individual Indian Monies account holders.

Elouise filed this lawsuit dating back to the illegal Act of 1887, that forced assimilation of the original Peoples and allotted Tribal lands opening so-called surplus land for homesteaders, by the United States President and Congress to the present time.

You can say this was a taken of Tribal land which was placed under a so-called imaginary federal trust responsibility and created fiduciary duty by the United States to the original Peoples and their land.

This expansion continues back in history to another imaginary deal called the Louisiana Purchase which sold for about $11 million the very lands many Tribes call their homelands.

This Louisiana Purchase was a loan made by a President and from whom? The Administration and Congress have a deficit of approximately (this figure is most likely higher) $760 billion and loans of $49 trillion to what persons and/or countries?

The federal trust responsibility that has its roots in the assertion by the federal government that it has the power to control the sale of Indian land to non-Indians.

The policy was first asserted by Great Britain in the Royal Proclamation of 1763, which stated that only the Crown could take lands from the Indians.

The United States adopted this British proclamation during their independence in 1790 calling this proclamation the Indian Trade and Intercourse Act.

The Old Dealers were trying to bring these points out to some people who would listen, to carry and defend the Tribal claim to the land and the resources, but mainly not to forget our identity.

The resources that have been taken (historical accounting) and that are currently being taken have not benefited the original Peoples of the Indigenous territories in the rental monies they are really owed.

Elouise Cobell brought this out in the class action lawsuit she filed. The evidence is all there but the Committee on Indian Affairs and the President continue to manipulate this case in a very dishonorable fashion another case of the many dishonorable dealings with Indians.

Hopefully, the new federal elected officials can make a positive difference for the original Peoples and all immigrants now Americans. I see this issue as a way to eradicate poverty in America. Elouise Cobell's original estimate of $176 billion owed by the federal government through the Department of Interior was torn down to $8 billion by the Bush Administration and McCain's Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. As the good book (the Holy Bible) states in spiritual laws "thou shall not steal", "thou shall not covet", "thou shall not bear false witness" and "thou shall not kill", etc.

These spiritual laws and principles are not being adhered to by the Administration, some congressional members and the presidential appointees to these Departments that are suppose to carry out trust in a responsible way with a fiduciary duty that benefit the original Peoples of this land. It is not happening! There has been NO ACCOUNTING to date!

I am bringing out a very important issue for our People of the Four Bands of the Tituwan. The Tituwan Oyate is made up of the Mnikoju, Siha Sapa, Oohe Numpa, Itazipcola, Oglala, Sicangu, and Hunkpapa whom reside on four concentration camps called Cheyenne River, Rosebud, Pine Ridge and Standing Rock which are agencies controlled by the United State's Administration and Congress.

This is how some Old Dealers (in the spirit world now) talked and some stating that we have no ties to the United States. Today, I am asking for those that are reading this request to organize representation and spokespersons among the Mnikoju, Siha Sapa, Itazipcola, Oohe Numpa, Oglala, Sicangu and Hunkpapa to prepare for forthcoming meetings.

This is a call to the members of the Tituwan Oyate of the Oceti Sakowin to prepare themselves for meetings that will be sponsored by Mnikoju, Siha Sapa, Itazipcola, and Oohe Numpa members in the Heart of the Nation and Home of the Canumpa Wakan.

These will be open meetings to establish by petition membership and identification for all Tituwan Oyate members of the Oceti Sakowin.

We are calling for representation of all our Tiwahe and Tiospaye members that make up the Tituwan of the Oceti Sakowin.

Currently, under the present IRA Tribal government system on the Cheyenne River Agency, with around 3,500 legal voters and about 2,500 that actually vote this IRA government represents in my estimation about 10% of the People residing on this reservation.

Who represents the 90 percent of the unsika, the homeless, the children, the elders, the families, the poor, the disabled, the ones that are left out and the unemployed?

This system does not represent all of us with the busy schedule and the many legislative issues and business matters that have to be carried out daily by the Tribal Council and Administration.

This burden on the Tribal Council is great and they are in need of help.

Right now, we need an organized National Council that will represent all the families and extended families that reside on and off these diminished boundaries that we are currently living within.

How will we organize? When will we organize? Who will be appointed? Why do we organize? Where do we go from here? These are the questions that will be addressed in upcoming meetings.

There is information that our members need to know now.

When the meeting is set it will be in the newspapers, broadcasted on KLND, KILI, KINI and flyers posted informing you of the time, date, and locations.

The sense of urgency is pressed upon us as original Peoples of these lands to unite in solidarity and unity for our practical survival on this planet.

With a great vision we must pull together under the title of original Allodial titleholders to these lands some illegally and unlawfully taken.

Northern Perspectives

We all have the legacy of great Lakota people running through our veins

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I just heard that another Sicangu youngster committed suicide on the Rosebud reservation. I didn't verify that rumor, but it points out an increasing epidemic that used to be other people's problem in some other community. Now it is our problem and we better deal with it.

It seems like we barely heard of the two Rosebud youth that died in the last couple of weeks and we gave a collective sigh of sadness. I know I had to take a deep breath and compose myself after remembering the two whom I never met.

You know as you get older, when we say "Lakota wakanyeja ki wakanpi" we mean that Lakota children are sacred and we believe it. We know that children are precious and will one day represent the teachers, politicians and leaders that will be needed to lead our people in the next generation.

When our children die, it's not supposed to be that way. Our children are not supposed to be leaving us and certainly not as a result of suicide, assault or anything that is too violent for us to understand.

As lay people we don't know how to deal with suicide and most of the time we simply shake our head and try to imagine what went on in that child's mind as he or she made the decision at that moment in time to die. Could it be that the obstacle they were facing at that moment was too great to overcome, was it a spur of the moment thing, or was it a building up of a frustration with any number of issues?

There is really no way to understand what one was confronting before they made the decision to begin their journey to the spirit world and perhaps it was simply a feeling of detachment and emptiness.

If so, how do we fill the void that some feel in their daily affairs? How do we challenge young people to create stimuli and give meaning to their precious lives?

I suggested that we have positive Lakota role models going around to area schools, talking to children, to let them know that we are here because we achieved something positive and we were able to overcome some of the issues which they are confronting now. We have to continue to strategize and come up with ways to give hope to our young.

If nothing else, we need to talk to each one of our students, individually as well as collectively, and to gauge where they are emotionally, if we can.

Beyond that, I suppose that trained professional therapists have some ideas for combating this scourge and I hope that their efforts will be stepped up in view of the recent deaths. Teachers, aides and administrators can be excellent resources to identifying students who may need added encouragement. The environment in which our children find themselves is difficult for just one person to understand, so we need to do it collectively.

I can't even begin to imagine the pain of losing a child and I guess I don't want to start now.

Sandra Black Bear and Pat Bad Hand are promoting the idea of Lakota social dancing and singing in area schools as a way of teaching respect, generosity, and proper social interaction. It is a great start in teaching youngsters that Lakota people traditionally approached life with enthusiasm, fun and sharing as a way to appreciate each other. Pat says, "When you come through that door, leave your negative thoughts at the door and come in and have fun."

Richard Iyotte at KINI FM radio is trying to reach Sicangu youth by producing a 30 minute program which will highlight 10 successful Sicangu people who have faced adversity and managed to be reasonably successful as young and older adults.

We all started out the same, facing the same issues, but some Sicangu ended up overcoming hard times and then some. Our youngsters need to see that life is a challenge and we all have the right stuff to meet challenge. We all have the legacy of the great Lakota people running through our veins and its something that will help us to overcome the greatest challenges that life holds.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Road wins keep Pine Ridge undefeated with number one ranking intact

Lady Thorpes survive Bennett County with buzzer beater three

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

MARTIN - MARTIN - Pine Ridge's top rebounder Keisha Brewer did not suit up because of her knee and in the fourth quarter the remaining four starters were on the bench with five fouls but no one told the rest of the Lady Thorpes to toss in the towel as Robin Webber put up a three pointer off the glass from just inside the half court line with 1.6 seconds left to give number one ranked Pine Ridge an 81-80 win over number two ranked Bennett County Thursday night in Martin before a standing room only crowd. Alyssa Cottier came in off the bench to grab an offensive rebound and spin and put it in the hoop to cut the Lady Warrior's lead to one 79-78. Cara Kratovil was fouled immediately on the inbounds pass and after she hit one of teo to push Bennett County's lead to 80-78, Webber brought the bll up the court and just inside the half court line let fly a shot she and the entire crowd will remember for a very long time.

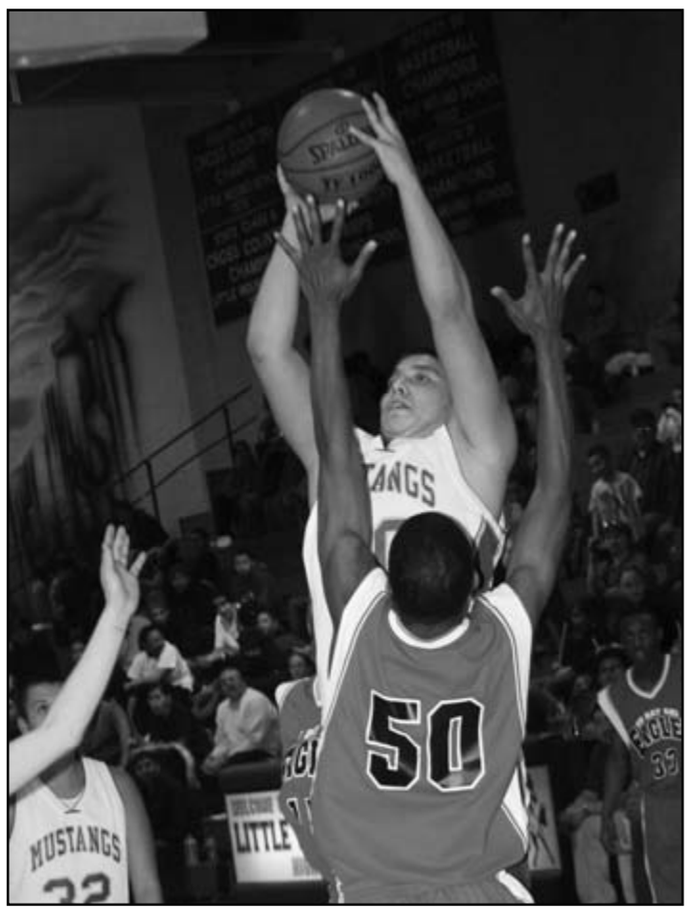
Pine Ridge, down almost the entire game overcame an outstanding performance by senior forward Maggie O'Neill who knocked down 36 points and grabbed 17 rebounds. Keely Krolikowski burned Pine ridge with three threes and 125 points but Pine Ridge answered with five ballplayers in double figures led by freshman Cristian Janis who had 18 points five assists and six rebounds before fouling out with 50 secondas to go in the game, Lacey Wesaton with 16 points and seven rebounds bdfore fouling out with 5:L18 to go in the fourth, Nichell Red Owl wqith 14 points, robin Webber with 12 points including the game ending three and Saudia Tasso with 10 points and seven rebounds before fouling out with 2:10 to go in the fourth.

Bennett County led at every quarter break and matched Pine ridge each time the Lady Thorpes mounted a comeback. Pine Ridge just kept coming back and staying close, close enough to pull the win off with five starters out of the game. Pine Ridge won for the 17th straight time this season.

With little or no rest, Pine Ridge hit the road on Friday for Winner. Down 21-17 at he half, the Lady Thorpes found their rhythm in second half to finish up with a 57-43 win for their 18th win of the season.

Lacey Weston led the way with 16 points, Christian Janis added 12 and Nichelle Red Owl helped with 11. Pine Ridge is 18-0, ranked number one, this week getting all nine first place ballots and will host Crow Creek on Friday and play Red Cloud in Rapid City on Saturday.

Red Cloud picked up their fifth straight win on Monday beating Hill City on the road 64-52.



The Lady Crusaders played without Lida Bear robe and Christy Boltz but rode the strong legs of Marque Lunderman who led the way with 20 points and 10 steals.

Ida Clarke added 14 points before fouling out early in the fourth quarter. Shaina Clofford had her best game since returning from two weeks of illness, she hit for 10 points and dissed out six assists/ Red Cloud is 11-6 and hosts St. Francis on Thursday and plays number one ranked Pine Ridge at the Civic Center in Rapid city on Saturday.

Pine Ridge's Robin Webber (14) showed no fear driving and scoring over Bennett County's Maggie O'Neill early on in Pine Ridge's 81-80 win over Bennett County and showed that same no fear attitude putting up a three pointer just inside the half court line with 1.6 seconds left to give the Lady Thorpes a one point win over the number two ranked Lady Warriors.

Little Wound rebounds with big win over McLaughlin after picking up first loss of the season against Oh Day Aki

KYLE - Brice Hornbeck was still out with a sprained knee and despite Rich Big Boy's 29 points and 11 rebounds Little Wound lost their first game of the year to Minneapolis based Oh Day Aki 66-64 Friday night in Kyle.

The Eagles took the lead midway through the first quarter and never gave it back in a hard fought game. Derek Harvey, a 5'8" guard led the Eagles with 22 points and five steals, Dominic Green a really quick two guard hit for 15 points with five assists to give the Eagle a strong one-two punch. Kareen Chukura grabbed 11 rebounds and Demetrius Martin added 10 boards to help keep the Mustangs off the boards.

Little Wound hit 12 of 12 from the free throw line in the fourth quarter including Ty Lunderman's seven for seven but could get no closer than two points.

Little Wound had the ball with 16 seconds to go and a chance to tie the game up but the pass intended for Big Boy was deflected off Big Boy's hand and out of bounds. TJ McCauley helped with 13 points and five rebounds but Little Wound just could never catch up.

Little Wound bounced back with a 127-76 win over McLaughlin on Saturday night to move their record to 15-1. Tuesday, the top ten poll dropped the Mustangs to number two behind undefeated Parkston.

Little Wound hosts Mobridge on Saturday and travels to Standing Rock on Thursday while Parkston has both Madison and Sioux Falls Christian on their schedule.

Red Cloud beat Todd County in Mission on Thursday 72-56 to run their record to 12-2 and moved up to number six in the rankings but ran into a tough Chadron on the road Tuesday night and lost 78-64.

The Crusaders are now 12-3 and face Pine Ridge in Rapid City on Saturday and travel to Hot Springs on Tuesday.

Lakota Tiwahe family asset building project now recruiting

KYLE - Lakota Funds started the Lakota Tiwahe (Family Savings) Individual Development Account program in 2001.

The first Native IDA in the state of South Dakota. The program was awarded a grant in 2001 from the Department of Health and Human Services, Administration for Children and Families. The funding is used to assist low to moderate income families acquire an asset and build a path towards self-sufficiency.

When potential participants become clients of the Lakota Tiwahe IDA Savings Program they will be provided with financial literacy for personal enrichment and asset specific training to help them understand how to obtain and maintain the asset they have saved towards.

Lakota Tiwahe IDA Savings Program is designed to give clients an incentive to make their IDA experience a positive one. We have offered clients a 2:1 match rate, meaning that the participant will get $2.00 for every $1.00 that they put into their IDA account, (The IDA account is a joint account between the participant and Lakota Funds) for a 24 month savings period. For example, if a client deposits the maximum savings amount of $75.00 for 24 months, they will have $1,800 of personal money invested into their IDA account. Then the program will match that personal investment of $1,800 two times; for a total of $3,600 of incentive program money and a grand total of $5,400 to be used to purchase a home, make a down payment on a home, start a business or expand a current business, or pay for college. That is a 200 percent return on your investment, as well as, being on a path to self sufficiency and becoming a more financially literate individual.

The Lakota Tiwahe IDA program currently has 30 slots available. For more information call (605) 455-2500 or visit our website www.lakotafunds.org.

Legislative Reports

Important issues that will impact the state

By Rep. Jim Bradford
District 27-Bennett, Haakon, Jackson, and Shannon Counties

Now in the fourth week of the 82nd Legislative Session, things are in full swing. Over 500 bills have been filed and are awaiting committee hearings. The topics of the bills range from the minimum wage, to the death penalty, to the makeup of the Executive Board of the Legislature.

There are many important issues that will be addressed this month that will have a large impact on the state.

Early in the week, a bill was defeated in the House State Affairs committee that would have raised the minimum wage to $7.25/hour and indexed it with inflation beginning in 2010.

There are now two minimum wage bills remaining and it is unknown at this time when they will appear before committees for hearings. Hopefully, we can get the minimum wage raised and help the people of South Dakota.

Democrats in the Legislature have been crafting some very important legislation that will have an impact on the ethics and openness of our state government.

A bill will be introduced in the Senate by Sen. Nancy Turbak that will require all records without personal privacy interests currently held by the state are to be made open to the public. Moreover, all state offices must make these records accessible during normal business hours. Those state offices that do not have normal business hours are to have clearly posted on their doors the contact information for the person in charge of disbursing public records.

State offices must offer this contact information to county and city auditors so that local government can more readily access this information on the behalf of its citizens.

Next week, we will be tackling our state's most important responsibility-education funding. Though the Democratic proposal (SB 117) was brought out in Senate State Affairs committee this week, not enough time was given to testimony, so the bill will be deferred until next Wednesday.

The Republican funding proposal will be brought out in committee around the same time next week. Currently, Governor Round's funding proposal stands to increase education funding by 3 percent. The Republican legislature's plan stands to increase funding by 4.3 percent, with an added 9 million dollars to deal with teacher pay and other poorly-funded areas of our education system (bringing the total increase in funding up to 6.1 percent). The Democratic plan will increase funding beyond these percentages, bringing state funding into compliance with the Adequacy Study, but we are working with the Republicans to ensure that, above all other considerations, the funding increase chosen will be made consistent so that school administrators can plug these funds into funding teacher salaries and critical-need education programs. Another education issue that made its way to the forefront was the State Library.

Effective Jan. 1, the Library stopped providing normal services to citizens, including no longer checking out books.

A significant portion of the library's holdings are to be dispersed to libraries around the state. Some of the special collections will not be affected by the new policies, but many will.

With Representative Van Norman of Eagle Butte taking the lead on the issue, I have been asking questions in hopes of correcting the flawed change of mission by the State Library in Pierre and hope to remedy the problems caused by it.

As always, I welcome all questions and comments.

Bill focuses legislators to take care of education funding

By Larry Lucas
District 26A Representative

More developments happened this week regarding legislation that would increase the minimum wage. Representative Engels of Hartford proposed a bill to include automatic, annual minimum wage increases indexed to 3 percent growth or the rate of inflation, whichever is least. Setting a precedent like this would help our lowest-paid workers to improve their livelihoods further.

The reasons for minimum raise increases are as plain as day-South Dakota is dead last in the U.S. when it comes to average wages, all while leading the nation in the percentage of two-wage earning households, and nothing has been done to rectify this over the last ten years. Representa-tive's Engels' proposal failed on a party line vote.

Hopefully, we can get all legislators on board with Governor Rounds' bill to raise the minimum wage.

A bill I introduced to allow Independent voters to be able to vote in a political party's Primary Election also failed in committee. Nearly 15 percent of our voters are registered as Independents and I would like to see them to better use their right as a citizen to vote, even in Primary races. One option is to lobby the two major Political Parties in the state asking them to change their by-laws to allow Independents to vote in their Primary Elections.

On the Senate side of things, Sen. Heidepriem has announced the creation of a bill that would demand from our legislators that they take care of education funding, the most important task of state government, earlier in the session instead of waiting until the last day of session to slip funding under the rug. Sen. Heidepriem's legislation, modeled upon similar legislation adopted in neighboring states, would require the passage of a comprehensive education funding bill by both the House and the Senate by the 27th legislative day in a 40-day legislature, and the 22nd legislative day in a 35-day legislature.

The result of this bill is rather simple-education funding will once again take the priority position it has lost in the last five years, and our children will not be cheated by a legislature that excuses itself by bundling funding with numerous other important issues at the very end of session.

More issues will be brought into focus during the next week.

Proposals have been made regarding the hot-button issues pertaining to the death penalty (either revising the procedure, adopting a moratorium, or abolishing it outright), abortion issues (a ban with exceptions, and a bill including "fetus" under the definition of "abused or neglected children"), the valuation of land under the 150 percent rule, and expansion of health care insurance to the uninsured.

Please keep in contact. Legislative Bills and other business can be easily followed on the internet. The web site for the Legislative Research Council is: http://legis.state.sd.us/sessions/2007/index.aspx.

RST secretarial election set for March 20, includes name change, blood degree status for council

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Coorespondent

ROSEBUD - The superintendent of the Rosebud Agency, Cleve Her Many Horses, has been authorized by the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a secretarial election on March 20. Rosebud Sioux tribal members will be asked to accept or reject a total of 27 proposed amendments to the RST constitution.

The election will be held on March 20 and voters may go to designated polling places in 20 communities on the Rosebud reservation. The time frame of 8:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. has been set for casting ballots. With the exception of North Ideal (Guild Hall), Two Strike (Youth Center) and Upper Cut Meat (Sacred Heart Hall) all other communities will vote at their respective community buildings.

Tribal members who intend to vote in the secretarial election must register to vote by February 20. If one is unable to vote at a designated site and wishes to vote by absentee ballot, it must be requested at the time the registration form is returned to the superintendent's office.

Election results will be posted at the Rosebud Agency office, the BIA Realty Office in Mission, the U. S. post offices on the Rosebud reservation, the respective community buildings and RST tribal offices.

The RST constitutional task force was appointed by the tribal council in February of 2004 and began its work when hearings began approximately a month later. The task force members included, Chairman Ronald Neiss, Ione Quigley, Duane Hollow Horn Bear, Linda Marshall, Ed Valandra, Lynette Marshall and Eric Nixon.

The long and interesting process was sometimes characterized by public hearings which originated from the tribal council chambers. At times, they were carried live on KINI FM radio and it was a great way for the Sicangu tribal membership to keep informed. Not everyone wanted to travel to the council chambers and the listening audience was treated to some rather eloquent Lakota speakers. SGU Lakota Studies instructor, Duane Hollow Horn Bear was often heard providing instruction or facilitating the hearings in Lakota.

Some of the more interesting and dramatics amendments which tribal members will vote on include amendment 1 which would change the name from Rosebud Sioux Tribe to Sicangu Nation. This would also be placed in the preamble to the constitution. Amendment 3 if approved would allow any person born after April 1935 who can provide proof of three generations of lineal descent who were members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, regardless of residency, will be eligible for enrollment of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Amendment 5 asks tribal members to vote on a proposed amendment that would require all tribal council members, the president and vice-president of the tribe to be at least ¼ degree of Indian blood. Amendment 6 will require staggered terms for the president, vice-president and council representatives of three years each. All officers and council representatives will be limited to two consecutive terms if the amendment successfully passes.

Amendment 7 would provide for each of the 20 communities on the Rosebud to have one elected representative. At present some have one elected representative, while the larger community of Antelope has four. Amendment 9 if approved would add to the qualifications for the positions of tribal council representatives and the offices of president and vice-president. Basically, an enrolled member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe must be at least 25 years of age, be at least 1/4 degree of Sicangu blood and not having been convicted of any major crimes in any jurisdiction and not found guilty of any misconduct by the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council may seek and hold office on the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council.

Finally, amendment 26 if passed will require each member of the Pierre student killed in apparent suicide

By Travis Gulbrandson
Reprinted with permission from Pierre Capital Journal

PIERRE - An 18-year-old Pierre resident and senior at T.F. Riggs High School died Saturday night in an incident on Interstate 90 which authorities are calling a suicide.

According to state trooper Kelly Stern, Kevin Jumping Elk began walking on Interstate 90 after a family disturbance occurred at a rest area at approximately 10:10 p.m.

"When we got there we found out an 18-year-old boy had left the scene on foot and walked toward the river there," Stern said.

When Stern and a deputy began looking for Jumping Elk they received a call saying there had been an accident involving a semitruck and a pedestrian approximately a quarter of a mile west of the rest area.

Stern said Jumping Elk initially ran in front of another car, which swerved to avoid him, pulling onto the shoulder of the road and flashing its warning lights in an effort to alert other drivers.

However, Jumping Elk was wearing dark clothes and was not visible on the road, Stern said.

Jumping Elk then ran in front of a semi, whose driver did not see him. Stern said.

"The truck driver didn't even know what he hit," Stern said. "He thought he hit a dog or a bag of garbage or something."

"He didn't know what it was," he said.

The accident occurred at an overpass bridge on Exit 98 near Wasta, Stern said.

Stern said alcohol was involved in the incident.

Riggs principal Mike Fugitt called the incident "devastating," and said Jumping Elk's teachers and friends were informed of what happened that Monday morning.

"He was in our first-period study hall and they made an announcement in class," resource room aide Larra Cutler said.

"We were just shocked. Some of the kids heard what had happened, but they didn't know who it was. We're just shocked."

Jumping Elk transferred to Riggs from Sioux Falls at the beginning of the school year, Fugitt said.

Cutler described Jumping Elk as "very quiet."

"We never had any problems with him," Cutler said. "He was well-behaved and well-mannered. He was a good student."

"He was a nice young man and we enjoyed having him in school," Fugitt said.

"It's obviously devastating when we lose a student like this."

Sicangu lose another youth, community concerned about deaths

By Times Staff

ROSEBUD - On Monday, Feb. 5 an 18-year old unidentified female Sicangu tribal member died at Sioux Valley Hospital in Sioux Falls.

According to the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services she was found by family members over the weekend. Police officers were apparently able to detect a pulse and heart beat and the individual was able to be maintained in that condition for transport to the Rosebud Hospital.

She was medically evacuated to Sioux Valley Hospital in Sioux Falls were she subsequently died.

When asked about the recent deaths on the Rosebud, thus far, in 2007 Rosebud Law Enforcement Services, Chief Charles Red Crow, said, "It is frustrating to encounter events and tragedies such as that. From law enforcement, we would encourage people to speak to someone and deal with the issues which may be bothering them. Small issues can grow into bigger issues. We are working as diligently with all of the social service programs to address all situations on the reservation."

Red Crow noted that he was working closely with Dr. Foster of the Rosebud Hospital to come up with a program to address the recent deaths.

A Suicide Intervention Task Force meeting was held at the CHR building next to the Rosebud Hospital on Friday, Feb. 2 during which representative from the Aberdeen IHS Area Office was present.

The Area Office offered a Critical Incident Stress Debriefing training for survivors, families and friends to help with their loss.

There will also be a collaboration with Rosebud Sioux Tribe, Sinte Gleska University, Catholic Social Services, Southern Plains Mental Health and several area churches in presenting a QPR training program which stands for Question, Persuade, and Refer.

It will be a method for referring people who need assistance to Rosebud IHS hospital and other providers.

One professional from the Indian Health Service said, "We need to wake up, inspire and creat a climate where kids want to live. The elder won't be here if a youngster takes his life. We want to emphasize the importance of choosing life. The I.H.S. has someone available available 24/7.

Future suicide task force meetings will be held at SGU on the second Tuesday of each month at 3 p.m.

On the Rosebud reservation the I.H.S. Mental Health department maintains statistics on such attempts as suicide and they average approximately 200 a year.

Red Crow said he is urging not only the Indian Health Service, but mental health agencies, all the schools and the tribe and the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society shelter, to help with the crisis.

Recently there were two other violent deaths involving youth on the Rosebud, a suicide and a stabbing of a 15-year old female. Red Crow said the stabbing incident was gang related and was a pre-arranged meeting in a field near the fairgrounds.

Last year a survey on the Rosebud revealed about 70 gangs.

State compulsory attendance law may be changed

By Chet Brokaw
Associated Press Writer

PIERRE (AP) - Students should be required to stay in school until they graduate or turn 18, a South Dakota education official said Tuesday.

Students can now drop out of high school at age 16, but those dropouts frequently face a life of poverty and are more likely to wind up in prison, said Wade Pogany of the state Education Department.

``Our goal is to graduate more students. We can't graduate them if they leave at 16,'' Pogany told the Senate Education Committee.

The bill was left in limbo at the end of Tuesday's committee hearing. A vote to endorse the bill resulted in a 3-3 tie with one committee member absent, so the panel planned to vote on the measure again Thursday.

SB199 is Gov. Mike Rounds' second attempt to raise the compulsory school age to 18. A similar bill was rejected by the Senate last year after opponents said it could be counterproductive because teenagers who do not want to be in school would cause problems for other students.

Sicangu Council to take an oath of office to support and defend the Constitution and by-laws of the Sicangu Nation and the Treaties entered into with the United States Government or other Governments.

According to Ronald Neiss, task force members often differed in their assessment as to which proposed amendments demonstrated good merit, however, their goal was to act in the best interest of the Sicangu Lakota Oyate. It did not matter how they personally felt about an amendment, they agreed to apply a set of criteria that they developed that was applied to each proposed amendment.

Such considerations as clarity, whether they made sense, and the impact they potentially had on tribal sovereignty and the treaties were deemed important. They also examined how the proposed amendments impacted the contemporary Lakota world view.

An interesting fact is that the oral testimony that was presented at the hearings was not necessarily translated into proposed amendments as task force members could not alter or manipulate the materials that were presented and that presumably included anything verbally presented.

Those who did present oral testimony may have had a paper copy in hand for submission to the task force.

Neiss did note, however, that the oral testimony often clarified a range of issues and was viewed as useful to the task force as discussion ensured on the merits of each proposed amendment. Many Sicangu people were quite knowledgeable on a range of topics, protocol and tribal history and it was a great forum and opportunity for them to share that.

It was obvious that a good cross section of Sicangu "grass roots" people or ikce wicasa were responsible for drafting and submitting the 189 proposed amendments which were pared down to 27 for the final ballot.

The proposed amendments were presented in their final form to the Bureau of Indian Affairs on April 19, 2005.

Two years after the task force was assembled the Sicangu tribal membership is able to go to the polls.

Sicangu community

cle on Tuesday, Feb. 6, the youth involved in the stabbing were cited as being Todd County High School students.

Vicky Sherman, principal at Todd County High School told the Rapid City Journal that they put their high school on alert and will be using metal detector wands at the door.

Sherman said it was crucial for adults to make positive connections with kids at risk. When someone is hurt by violence, all kids know to do is get even, she said.

On the Rapid City Journal online website, many readers offered their comments about the issue. The comments ranged from urging parents to be more involved in their children's lives to suggestions on why the violence is occurring in their community. A teacher wrote, "I have worked in education on the reservation for 12 years. Born and raised on the Pine Ridge Rez. I attended the wake for this young Lakota woman. One of the saddest things I have ever witnessed. None of us should have had to be there for something like that. It should not have happened. Our children are full of talents but need to be taught about all the good things in life and how to deal with the bad days. Pointing fingers is not going to solve our problems. Parents, schools, public safety, politicians, churches, holymen, Pipe carriers, friends all need to come together and plan what the first steps will be to begin a positive change. Culture, history, coaches, activities and prayer were important factors for me growing up on the reservation. Life skills classes on self esteem, decision making and interpersonal communication and planning for the future are some ideas."

Another parent urged parents, "We need to know what our children are doing and who they are doing it with. We need to communicate with them, they need to be told they are loved and cared for every day. Violence starts in the home, we can't blame the schools or the police. We need to take responsibility for our as well as our children's actions!

Most of the comments were pointed at parents, as another gave the comment, "The problem cannot be pinpointed to one thing: rap, schools, police, alcohol, drugs, etc. If it could, then a solution would be simple, it is a multi-layered issue. The lack of parental support, the abuse of alcohol, drugs, gambling. Parents do not want to spend time with their children because they're too wrapped up in their own dysfunctional behavior. Parents are also contributing to the violent behavior, because of the recurring abuse in the homes. Positive conflict resolution is not developed. Instead, through the media, in our homes, and in society, the way to handle conflict is through revenge, eye-for-an-eye mentality. Youth groups, out-reach can begin small, in each community on the reservation. Let's be proactive, and find some solutions."

A former Todd County resident wrote, "The unemployment rate in Todd County is 90 percent, there is a lot of alcoholism, drug abuse, physical, mental, and sexual abuse. That is the kind of environment some of the children have been raised in. For some it has become a normal way of life. There is no after school programs, and barely one youth center for children and teens to go to. So it is left for the parents to watch after their children, and that doesn't happen often. Parent's need to know what there children, and teens are doing at all times. Be involved in your children's lives. Todd County is a beautiful place on earth. It's just sad it is being wasted away by alcohol, drugs, and abuse. The people in Todd County can choose to be sucked in that way of life, or try to be a part of their community events in a positive way, and be a 100 percvent part of there children's lives. Parents of Todd County can put a stop to all this violence in their youth."

A youth wrote, "It ain't about rap, the drugs or the alcohol. its the fact that is the reservation, and everyone down there doesn't care about changing it. Pine Ridge and Rosebud COULD have been a great beautiful town where Lakota culture is everywhere, where the people could have real businesses and stay there to work. Maybe it could have even been a tourist destination. BUT instead it's a third world country, where everyone has something to prove, and there is gangsta wannabes. That's a shame because there is a lot of money that has been available to help build Pine Ridge and Rosebud. The people that live there are the only ones that can change it, otherwise it will get worse."

Another wrote, "I would say parents could do more to help. But I think adults in the tribe could do better too. What do kids see in a lot of our communities? Adults bickering and fighting over money, gossiping, backstabbing, disrespecting one another and even using violence themselves to settle scores. It's all good to say we need to return to traditions but it would have to be a real tradition. Not one with a bunch of adults pretending to act like their ancestors in ceremonies and powwows, but people really living the values and principles of what they preach. Kids recognize hypocrisy just like adults."

State law on attendance

No one testified against the measure in Tuesday's meeting, but Sen. Kenneth McNenny, R-Sturgis, said he believes some students should be allowed to drop out at age 16 because they are not interested in attending school. Most will later get a high school diploma or the equivalent, he said.

But state Corrections Secretary Tim Reisch said people with high school degrees are more likely to stay out of prison.

He said 54 percent of new prison inmates have not completed high school.

Inmates with high school degrees have a good chance of avoiding trouble after they are released on parole, but those without high school degrees have a high risk of committing new crimes, Reisch said.

Every juvenile committed to a state corrections program is required to complete high school, and every adult inmate must work toward a high school degree, he said.

Sen. Ed Olson, R-Mitchell, chairman of the committee, said the measure would change the way schools handle problem students from the early elementary grades. Schools will use different programs to give students a reason to want to stay, he said.

``Schools across the state will understand you are going to be here until you get your degree or you're 18 years of age,'' he said.

Pogany said tribal schools now require students to stay until they graduate or turn 18, so some Indian students transfer to non-reservation schools that are controlled by state law so they can drop out at 16.

He said schools cannot give up on problem students.

``We would argue there are no expendable students,'' Pogany said.

RST tribal court hears case of St. Francis Mission versus SFIS

$1.5 million at stake as case will go to trial

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The case of St. Francis Mission versus St. Francis Indian School was heard in Rosebud Sioux tribal court on February 2 at 1:00 p.m. The presiding judge was the honorable B. J. Jones.

The hearing addressed two issues. First, SFIS/Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc. originally filed a motion to dismiss the lawsuit claiming that the doctrine of sovereign immunity prevailed, while the other issue before the court was the request for a preliminary injunction against the school for the money received from the Cerro estate.

SFIS was represented by Stephanie Pochop of Gregory and St. Francis Mission was represented by attorney, Robert Doody, of SFM and the Rosebud Educational Society.

At issue is the fact that Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc. the corporate arm of St. Francis Indian School had received a bequest from the Delores Cerro Trust of Bakersfield, CA in the amount of $1.5 million.

The bequest was to be limited to student scholarship support and capital improvements.

On Nov. 9, the Rosebud Educational Society/St. Francis Mission filed an injunction in RST tribal court to stop SFIS from utilizing any of the money. Judge Janell Sully issued the injunction based on information which was brought by St. Francis Mission.

SFM said that in existence was an agreement from 25 years ago that governed the fund raising efforts of SFM. Any donations or requests that were realized were to go to SFM.

In 1984 the agreement was reiterated and any requests were to go into the RES account. In all cases, the wishes of the donor were to be honored.

SFM contended that they were not aware of the $1.5 million until it was deposited into the account of SFIS. SFM also said that SFIS did not inform the Cerro Trust that were was an agreement in place.

SFIS superintendent noted that Delores Cerro had called the school before her death and indicated as to how the trust was to be directed.

The RST tribal court was to hear the case on Nov. 22, however it was postponed. Parker said in November that the money had been deposited in a Wells Fargo account at the wishes of the Board of Education.

During Friday's hearing in tribal court, the court upheld the motion to dismiss, in part, and also partially denied it.

The court held that the school is a tribal entity and immune from suit based upon the doctrine of sovereign immunity. However, the case was allowed to proceed under the Civil Rights Act as the "taking of private property." Attorney Doody said, "I argued that if the school is covered by sovereign immunity then its actions amount to a violation of civil rights of my client since they took private property without just compensation in a violation of the Indian Civil Rights Act 25 USC 1302(8)."

The court denied the motion for an injunction as the judge noted that the probability of success was not high based on the merits of the case.

Doody said, "The injunction was denied and we are going to go forward with a trial on the merits of the case under the understanding that this is a possible taking under the ICRA. The trial at this time has not been scheduled."

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

I'm writing this letter to you because I'm distraught and just wondering about my employment situation.

I have my degree in early childhood and where I work it's just a complete mess. The Boss is something and so is the one she hired recently; who doesn't have a degree or experience in this field, but has a degree in another area.

Where I work there is a lot of distrust in the administration and with certain others around. It makes me wonder if this program will ever straighten itself out - to the extent that we as teachers can just be teachers! My co-workers all want to just walk out but because they have big hearts for the children they don't go.

It is like everyone is walking on eggshells; and I myself wasn't raised to keep quiet about anything; especially when it's just and for the right reason.

To make matters worse it's always we get picked on for miscellaneous B.S. [sic] that the boss thinks is right to RIF people and check on the workers by using others to spy on us. The list goes on and on and on.....quite frankly I'm on the verge of just quitting but with no income in my home I can't afford to just quit, plus I have relatives and friends whom I always never turn away in their times of need - especially around paydays.

Do so you see any prosperity coming my way as far as employment goes? Do you see the situation getting any better where I work?

And do you see another boss coming our way - who is friendly, kind, understanding, trusting and whom does have experience with children and who does hold a degree in this field?

Stress in the Work Place

Dear Stress in the Workplace:

I am extremely proud of you for having completed your education in early childhood development. It is a magnificent field and given the economic requirements of women to be in the work-place; there is an ever-growing need for the best child care possible. It is a worthy field as it guards and nurtures our most precious commodity - our children.

Within the field you are working there is a large amount of stress concerning adequate standards and pay.

There has been no consistency in management in years. These factors tend to weaken administrative reach into the center and heartbeat of the industry. Administration is so weak as to come from the defensive approach; or the approach of the under-dog which is controlling and frantic with stop-gap measures being continually created and enforced.

This is a very frantic effort to create administrative rules to create administrative flow...which is, in essence new rules created for the sake of the old rules.

It is not only within the child care programs that we find stress and territorial disputes, with shows of undermining and arguing, favoritism and amazing emotionalism, name calling, destruction and accusations used as art to try and consume another person's good reputation and ability through complaining, exaggerating, and otherwise setting each other up with the aim of destroying anothers right to do well.

I do know a solution. It is a simple change in management style, throughout each program...from the current style of management by self to a new system of management by objective.

Each employee has the same objective: whether to sell more items or enroll more students; or educate more people, or heal more people.

So first: each organization must have a statement of goal - thus: THE OBJECTIVE. Then every employee is challenged to perform that objective: Everybody from the filing clerk to the Director and the Board of that organization uses the same objective.

Remember the commercial "California cows are happy cows...and happy cows make better cheese." It is the same for humans.

Everybody working together; understanding that each job is important and an integral part of the whole; and that.

Happy, comfortable, clean, healthy working environments will get everybody more cheese. Everybody has a responsibility to provide that by respecting your work environment.

Management needs to address who they work with. Native People are heart people first and head people second. Personnel decisions need to be in the flow with heart decisions, creating a comfortable environment for people. Rules have to be expanded in terms of absences (in consideration of funerals and wakes, humblaca and Sun Dance, etc.), and elasticity must be incorporated into nepotism rules. Tribes are related. It's a fact. How can they efficiently run if all relatives are excluded from each organization because another relative works there?

Now; as to the hiring of someone with a different degree - I want to point out that sometimes that is more than appropriate. Can you imagine if they had required Christ to have a degree in psychology or a certificate in massage therapy? Sometimes, some people are gifted and belong in certain fields, whether they are "degreed" or not. There is more than one way in this world to be educated. Let us never be so stiff that we overlook self-education, natural talent, and flexibility as equals to formal education.

Now, down to brass tacks. Everybody, just teach the children; fill out the paperwork, keep the classrooms clean and safe, and get along together. It can't be that hard. Objective: THE CHILDREN - HOW WILL THEY BE BEST SERVED?

And, by the way, I do see the administration at your work being less than they could be because of the dissension among the workers.

They keep using old defensive accusations towards others instead of directing energies towards unity.

I hope that they understand they cannot have a meeting and yell at everybody to get along - they need to listen; because this is a disaster for management in the making - and it comes from not listening to the people who do the work; the ones with hands-on experience. They have to listen, but so do the rest of you. If things are not resolved within six months, there will be a change in administration and administrative support - again.

Dear Anna,

I have a question to ask and would appreciate it very much if you can help answer it for me. I broke up with my husband several years ago and he wants to get back together. We had a pretty good relationship but I did something that betrayed his trust and he broke up with me.

I was devastated and did everything to get him to change his mind but nothing worked. I barely made it out of the depression I was in and got over him.

Then he changed his mind and wants me back but now I am the one who doesn't want to. In the meantime, I met this guy who became my friend and now says he loves me.

Now my question for you is:

Do you think it would be a good thing to get back with my ex husband? What do you see about my new "friend"? Your help will be greatly appreciated. Thanks.

Just asking.

Dear Just asking:

Examine your heart. Don't hang onto somebody for insurance (just in case the other one doesn't work out). Be honest with yourself.

Love isn't about degrees of how much; or about the investment or the return; it's about love. Who do you love?

If you don't know, then know that the current man ain't the one either honey - but neither is the guy from your past.

Good Luck.

Dear Anna:

All life's blessings to you. I had been laid off from work some months ago and am looking for work.

I don't want to go back to what I had been doing for years and years. I am in my 50s and mentally and physically tired and know I need to shake that off and I will, but I need to go back to work as soon as possible before I lose all.

Do you see any immediate employment for me? I really want to have a job I will be happy to get up in the morning for and have a feeling of making a difference and still be able to pay my bills.

Thank you for your help and I do thank God for the advantages I have had through the years that many people haven't, but I still need direction. From Maryland.

Dear Maryland:

Go sign up for school. You are eligible for grants and loans. You can almost afford to live on that - but you can live on that with a part time job. Check the paper, I see something that has to do with automobiles and/or tires.

You are going to be sixty anyway, so you might as well be sixty with a degree. You want to work with children, then follow that - maybe even library sceince?

You are still young, your children should be independent (or mostly anyway), you should be able to make your own decisions, you are the perfect student. Take a chance on yourself -

Otherwise, I see two jobs - one at a resort (restaurant, motel, etc), and one in a shop (mechanics?) of sorts. Given the look of your future, I would chose school and part time work.

Good Luck!

RST secretarial election postponed

ROSEBUD - In a somewhat surprising turn of events the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council voted today to postpone the Secretarial Election until the end of July. The motion was made by District 3 Antelope council representative, Jo Colombe, to postpone the election because there was a need to educate respective tribal communities about the 27 RST tribal constitutional amendments which are being proposed.

The RST council meeting was carried live over KINI FM radio on what is probably the coldest day of the year and many tribal members could not attend. The vote was 9 voting

Court rejects 'ward system' in favor of 'at-large' voting system

City of Martin ordered to use 'at large' voting method

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - On Feb. 9, Chief Judge, Karen Schrier, signed an order requiring the City of Martin to adopt a new redistricting plan called Remedial Plan C, while enjoining the city from conducting elections pursuant to the current Ordinance 122 as used by the city.

Ordinance 122 puts Native voters in three wards and has the effect of denying the rights of Natives to vote based on race in violation of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act.

Schrier earlier wrote, "In formulating a remedial plan, the first and foremost obligation of the district court is to correct the Section 2 violation."

In the case, Cottier and Three Stars v. City of Martin, the city was given the first opportunity to present a re-districting plan that would comply with section 2 of the Voting Rights Act. The city, as defendants, refused to present an alternative plan for re-districting and at that point the court could create its own plan as a remedy or use one proposed by the defendants.

The court then proceeded to adopt Plan C as presented by the plaintiffs. The plan involves adopting an at-large voting scheme with cumulative voting. During 2007, the city will still have six council members, but staggered in 3-3 cycles. Elections will be held for three members whose terms end this year and the next three will be held in 2008. Candidates may be from any section of Martin.

In the cumulative voting scheme, each voter will receive three votes. "Each voter can cast one, all, or any whole number of his or her votes for any one or more of more of the candidates" according to the court document. No voter will be required to cast a minimum of votes or a maximum.

Presumably, then, a voter could cast only one or two votes without using all three and not have his or her ballot considered invalid. Voters often wonder if they have to vote on every question on the ballot in any election and that certainly is a question that needs to be clarified prior to voting.

The winner in the cumulative voting will be the three candidates who receive the highest number of votes. Plan C helps to remedy the section 2 violation of the VRA because it gives Lakota people a chance to elect a Lakota during each cycle.

A common political science theory called the "threshold of exclusion" is used to calculate whether or not the Lakota community has the ability to elect a Lakota candidate.

For example, in the case of the California tribes loses sovereignty case

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

WASHINGTON - Most tribal nations are forever vigilante when it comes to precedent setting court cases that may come back to haunt them and ultimately infringe upon their inherent quasi-sovereignty as defined by previous Supreme Court cases.

The San Manuel Band of Mission Indians of California find themselves fully immersed in such a legal place that they never envisioned.

The San Manuel Band of Mission Indians casino is located at Highland, Calf.

In the case, the San Manuel Band of Serrano Mission Indians v. National Labor Relations Board, argued on Nov. 6 and decided Feb. 9. A panel of three judges for the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit ruled that the tribe was subjected to the National Labor Relations Act. Indian nations are not mentioned anywhere in the law and yet, the courts changed that by reversing many years of precedent setting Supreme Court cases that have re-affirmed tribal sovereignty in favor of tribal nations.

At issue, is an organizing dispute at the San Manuel Band's casino where a union filed a complaint to the National Labor Relations Board when it said another union was getting treated with preference. The tribe disagreed and said that tribal sovereignty prevailed. The NLRB and the state of Connecticut contested the issue.

Nationwide, there are 250,000 workers in tribal casinos and most of them are non-tribal members. The tribal casino industry is estimated to be at $28 billion a year with 28 casinos.

The judges noted that tribes cannot act with total autonomy when it comes to commercial enterprise. The court did recognize. However, that operating a tribal casino is a governmental function.

By making tribes accountable under the NLRA act, the judges were saying that since most casinos employ non-Indians and marketing them to non-Indians, tribes are going beyond simple self-governance.

The problem with the ruling is that it could affect internal tribal affairs, according to Henry Duro, Chairman of the San Manuel Band, and that is scary for most tribes.

The National Indian Gaming Association and the National Congress of American Indians recently argued on behalf of the tribe. Any such contested issue should

City of Martin, the formula is 1/(1 + number of seats available.) The percentage that comes out of this formula is 1/4 because 1 is added to the three seats and the percentage is 25 percent. According to the formula, the members of a minority community have the opportunity to elect their candidate as long as the "threshold of exclusion" percentage is lower than their percentage of the voting electorate.

In the case of Lakota people in Martin they should be able to elect a member to the Martin city council each election because their voting age population is 36 percent. That exceeds the "threshold of exclusion" number above.

The city argued that it used the common council form of government and that neither cumulative voting nor at-large voting was permitted by the state. They said only Martin voters could change their form of government. The Eighth Circuit Court disagreed and said that the court has the power to adopt Plan C and that the court is bound to follow it. The court said, "In sum, the court exercises its power to implement Plan C as the proper remedy because none of the municipal forms of government permitted by South Dakota would remedy the section 2 violation in this case."

The American Civil Liberties Union has been very active on behalf of Native American voters in South Dakota. In April of 2002 ACLU brought suit against the City of Martin on behalf of two Native American voters who said that the city's redistricting plan diluted the voting strength of Native voters. Even with Native voters representing 45 percent of the voting bloc, Native voters were unable to elect candidates of their choice because white voters controlled all three wards under the re-districting plan.

In addition, voting results according to the court document noted that the results of the June 2003 aldermanic election revealed that Lakota people made up over 31 percent of the voters that actually voted.

The ACLU originally offered three re-districting plans that would have given Native voters an equal opportunity to elect candidates of their choice. The district court at that time ruled in favor of the City of Martin in 2005, and the Native plaintiffs appealed. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals then reversed a lower court decision in 2006 and the case was sent back to district court.

The ruling in December 2006 ordered the city to redraw district voting lines so that Native American voters might have a chance to elect a candidate of their choice and participate in the political process.

The decision ordered a "full and complete remedy" and affirmed many of the original claims as brought by the plaintiffs in the case. One of the findings in the federal court decision noted, "One of the most remarkable things about the opinion is the court's finding that a city official intentionally discriminated against Native Americans…this finding serves as a sober reminder that racial discrimination in the voting process still exists in South Dakota, and we should be thankful that the Voting Rights Act is here to guard against it."

yes to postpone, with three opposed, and 8 council representatives absent.

The concern appeared to be centered around the relatively large number of amendments which tribal members would have to read through, while Milk's Camp community was concerned that a couple of ballot questions appear to conflict with each other. The example that was provided was amendments 8 and 9, having to do with qualifications for office and both had differing age requirements. There was no apparent reason for the disparity.

Another source of confusion related to amendment 22.

It reads, "If you vote yes to this amendment, this will further define the sections of the Bill of Rights and delete the "double jeopardy clause" from this Article. If you vote no, there will be no change."

On its face value, that statement does not make sense unless you read the amendment which has 9 paragraphs to it.

RST council representative, Marion Young-One Star, of Grass Mountain community said that she was aware of many young adults in their late teens and early twenties who were not getting the sample secretarial ballot and registration form.

In its original form, the sample ballot which was mailed to tribal members remind voters to register by February 20 for the March 20 election.

Steve Denoyer, said, "What if you don't meet the guidelines. The changes are too long. Are they going to start over? We need an explanation as to how they will better the tribe. We didn't have a say in it. I thought the Solicitor was going to make changes. A lot of them were just complaining."

Fern Bordeaux said, "Our in-house attorneys should have paid attention. The Lakota Women for Change should have presented them to the public. They were requesting us to stall it, so they could go out and provide education. Why ask for an extension now when it should have been done five months ago. Comments were sent from the Solicitor to the Lakota Women for Change. They should have assisted the proposers to the amendments."

BIA agency superintendent, Cleve Her Many Horses, was present and provided answers to some of the concerns which had arisen. He noted that under CFR 25 that the election could be suspended as there was no specific requirements spelled out under the regulation.

RST representative Mike Boltz from St. Francis said, "The tribal council shouldn't be allowed to be left out of this in the beginning. Our forefathers knew that. We went too far and it's come back to this. I support the motion to suspend. Let's just move it up." Her Many Horses noted that the secretarial election could not be held at the same time as the tribe's general election in the fall.

Finally, Linda Marshall of the original secretarial election committee said, "It is confusing the way it is going. The comments made here make it confusing. The ordinance says that the tribal council cannot make changes. It is the people's initiative. The Secretary of the Interior has the authority to make changes. You have to remember this is the time we have reached this level." Marshall noted a time previously where the tribe suspended a previous secretarial election the night before it was to occur.

Last Thursday a meeting was held on Thursday at the Crazy Horse School with community members and others to discuss strategies on what resources are available and what can be done for prevention. Others included tribal officials Mel Lone Hill, Mel Young Bear and Mary Tobacco and community members.

Tobacco, tribal health educator, said the initial meeting was a beginning and another meeting is scheduled for Friday, Feb. 16 at 10 a.m. at the school. Community members who have concerns are encouraged to attend the meeting on Friday. She said they need to hear from the community and get opinions and ideas.

An initial healing day is being planned for March 17 with activities to involve youth and community and promote community healing.

Wilcox said she has been working on finding out the cost of having a local suicide prevention hotline. She said the nearest one was in Sioux Falls. She said there really isn't a whole lot of resources that can be counted on for suicide prevention.

Tobacco can be reached at the Oglala Sioux Health Education at 867-2067 and Phyllis Wilcox at 462-6452.

Sovereignty

favor tribes as in the past they argued; however, the courts said that such ambiguity only applied in cases that are enacted "for the benefits of Indians or for the regulation of Indian affairs" and not for such issues as contained in the NLRA.

What may be most disturbing in the case is a statement in which the court wrote that tribal sovereignty as it is recognized in American law is not seen as an inherent power, but rather as a way to regulate internal affairs and maintain traditional customs and practices.

The most damaging feature of the ruling, which may be contested to the Supreme Court one day, is that the case seems to ignore case after case in Federal Indian law which has continually upheld a tribe's quasi-sovereign status.

Tribal sovereignty is affirmed in the earliest cases in Indian law known as the "Cherokee Nation" court cases and which define the issue. Tribal sovereignty is something that tribe's possessed from time immemorial and, in fact, it is common knowledge that it was tribal nations who held such status long before America was formed.

For now, the California tribe can ask for a full panel of judges to hear it or request a re-hearing by the three judge panel.

The court now leaves it to the National Labor Relations Board to intervene in such matters and will now apply their mandates to tribes everywhere unless it is contested.

Cheyenne River youth center is now selling unique print

"The Four Horsemen of the Lakota" by Lynn Burnette Sr. is on sale at the Cheyenne River Center of Life gift shop. Burnette said they represent the Lakota virtues of spirituality, integrity, courage and wisdom, "riding hard and fast as victors in the battle between complacency and achievement."

EAGLE BUTTE - The Cheyenne River Youth Project will be selling prints of Lynn Burnette Sr.'s painting "The Four Horsemen of the Lakota" in the gift shop of Cokata Wiconi "Center of Life" in the Lakota language," the new teen center on the Cheyenne River Reservation.

Burnette, a Sicangu Lakota artist who hails from Cheyenne River, attended the Aug. 14 dedication ceremony for Cokata Wiconi. At the event, he listened to Billy Mills, Oglala Sioux Olympic champion and spokesperson for Running Strong for American Indian Youth, speak about the virtues of the Lakota people and how they are a valuable resource in the struggle toward self-determination and success.

While today's challenges for young people - and for their communities - are present and real, Burnette said he believes that a person can choose to face them with courage and integrity rather than with fear and disillusionment. He commented that this makes him consider the Lakota way of life before the colonial period, one that embraced new challenges with bravery. Lakota men and women did not balk in the face of danger; rather, they drew on the strengths of the community and on spirituality to overcome that which can be overcome and to accept that which cannot. For him, this important lesson from Lakota cultural heritage must be passed on to future generations.

"We never felt that we would ever have to fight these things among our people," Burnette said, referring to the many problems confronting reservation youth, such as alcoholism, poverty and high unemployment levels. "Now we have to help our youth to get through it."

With this in mind, Burnette created "The Four Horsemen of the Lakota" for the Cokata Wiconi. This tea painting depicts the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, dressed in traditional Lakota regalia and riding in tight formation on colorful horses. Yet the horsemen are not harbingers of war, famine, death and pestilence. Burnette said they represent the Lakota virtues of Spirituality, Integrity, Courage and Wisdom, "riding hard and fast as victors in the battle between complacency and achievement." The horsemen have come from the four directions to centralize their power, according to Burnette, and the four horses represent the colors of the four directions.

"The Lakota people never had 'bad' spirits or doom and gloom as an omen for better living," he said. "We asked for guidance from the Creator and thanked him when we received it."

CRYP, whose capital campaign, along with that of Running Strong for American Indian Youth, is raising the necessary funds for the teen center building, was proud to accept the generous donation. The organization also is grateful to Burnette for giving CRYP the copyright for the work, so the youth project was able to produce the prints.

"I am touched beyond belief by Burnette's gift," said Julie Garreau, CRYP's executive director. "Not only is it an amazing work of art, but it has a meaning that runs deeply through our people - a message of survival - that we really need to hear at this moment."

Burnette was born north of Mission on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, and he raised his family on Cheyenne River. Although he sketched whenever he had time, his adult life was devoted to ranching and working as a rodeo cowboy; his artistic calling came much later.

Burnette said he is inspired by stories and history passed down to him from his grandfather, and his artwork is fueled by his passion for creativity and self-expression. He works in a variety of media, from watercolors, oils and acrylics on canvas to bronze sculptures. Most unique, however, are his tea paintings - as the paper soaks up the tea, it leaves distinct markings that help the artist realize his complete vision for the artwork.

"The Four Horsemen of the Lakota" by Lynn Burnette Sr. can be viewed on the CRYP Web site at www.lakotayouth.org. Additional original work by Lynn Burnette Sr., including works for sale, can be found on at www.spiritriderart.com.

A night of family fun

MISSION - This year's Family Fun Night brought together the community, families and several programs for an evening of good food, good fun, dancing and rock and roll on Feb. 2 at the SGU Multipurpose Building.

The annual fun night was hosted by SGU's Reclaiming Futures and sponsored by numerous local entities. An estimated 200 people attended the vent.

The evening began with a sloppy joe supper with the meat provided by SGU Bison Program. Potato chips, fresh carrots and celery and fresh apples and oragnes were also served.

Information booths and door prizes were provided by SGU Reclaiming Futures, RST Diabetes Prevention Program, Alcohol Treatment Program, Oyate Networking Project, RST Tribal Education, ST. Francis Mission, Piya Mani Otipi, Native American Advocacy Program and the RST CHR.

The public enjoyed a session of traditional Lakota social dancing lead by Pat Bad Hand and Denis One Star. Participants enjoyed the rabbit dance, the owl dance, the potato dance and the round dance. Dancers of all ages participated in the fun.

The highlight of the evening was a delightful performance by the Little Bird Blues Band, a youth rock and roll band made up of 8 to 12-year-old cousins. The band performed such classic and cover hits as "Smoke on the Water," "Stupid Cupid," "House of the Rising Sun," "Beautiful" "Iron Man," and several others.

The local youth were captivated and inspired by the kids as evident by the swarm of youth that gathered to get an autograph and meet the youth rockers.

The evening of fun was completed by a free-throw and three-point competition for both youth and adults.

OST housing plans to move 'Ellsworth' homes to district sites in spring

Commits to build more mutual help units

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

This is the first house that was brought from Ellsworth Air Force base in May of 2005. The 3-bedroom houses were transported to the Kyle housing yard to help meet housing needs. This project is sponsored by the Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing.

PINE RIDGE - There's light at the end of the tunnel," said Ken Lone Elk, Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing director sitting in the conference room last week, "it has been a battle, we are surviving and now we are moving ahead, the demand for houses continues to grow, the task of maintaining the units we have doesn't get any easier and the challenge of finding additional ways to build more houses is oftentimes overwhelming."

For a year and a half the Ellsworth units have been sitting at the housing yard on the edge of Kyle while decisions on their future swirled like dust on a hot August day on the Pine Ridge.

The hubbub raised at a tribal council meeting in August of 2005 in Pine Ridge about lead paint or asbestos in the floor tiles had dissipated by the late summer of 2006 and the housing administration announced that the 52 units would be available on a first come first serve basis.

Those interested in obtaining an Ellsworth unit agreed to put $2,500.00 down, agreed to pay $166.67 per month for ten years, be responsible for finding a site and take care of the electricity and water development for the sites. Housing would cover the construction of a half basement, move the unit to the site and close up the gable end of the unit created when the double units were cut in half.

By the mid November deadline, 45 of the units had been committed to interested homeowners who had ponied up the down payment money.

At that point there developed a slight wrinkle that the board did not really mean for the units to go out on a first come first serve basis but there would be five units allocated to each district where the housing commissioners would be involved in the decision on who were awarded the unit.

"It really came down to those who met the criteria established by the board," said Frances Sonny Ruff, board chair from LaCreek district, "the board thought it was five per district and then first come first serve for those five with applicants required not to owe any back rent, not to have a housing unit already and to have sufficient income to make the financial commitment required."

Of the original 45 potential homeowners, 60 per cent met the criteria, according to Ruff and Lone Elk and currently all 45 are committed. The remaining seven are to be used administratively maybe as an emergency shelter or to replace a burned unit or to meet a special community need.

"We are waiting for good weather," said Lone Elk, "we need some decent weather to get the half basements in and to start moving the units; we hope to have them all out on site and functioning by the fall of this year."

Reservation residents have been watching the construction of homes across the reservation that appear to be log houses - they are part of an overall commitment by housing to build 180 units, 90 low rent and 90 mutual self help (home ownership) made back in 2000 with a carryover of $10 million from NAHASDA finds. Housing built 45 low rent as the first stage, built by the force account crews. There were to be 45 mutual self help to follow, the 27 log house project units are the first stage of the 45 homeownership homes, according to Lone Elk.

"We are committed to building all 180 units, we just don't know how they all will be built and just where all of the resources will come from but we are going to build them," said Lone Elk.

The current 27 log houses are close to being completed and the goal is May 1 for families to move in but for some of them it may take until the end of May or sometime in June, according to Ruff and Lone Elk.

During the last tribal administration, the tribal council removed the housing's board of directors, replaced them with an interim board and added a council dominated special committee to work with the board.

"This time, I really believe that the council is committed to letting housing do what they need to to get the job done," said Lone Elk, "we have developed a good working relationship with the HHS committee and in particular Sonia Weston, Kim Claussen and Carol O'Rourke, a relationship where we are able to work together to move ahead."

Currently, Oglala Sioux Lakota housing employs about 150 people and maintains or looks over 1,700 units, both low rent and home ownership. The board elected last spring includes Sonny Ruff/ LaCreek as chair, Sandy Two Lance/Wakpamni, Valerie Janis/Oglala, Eleanor Charging Crow/Eagle Nest, Sandra Old Horse/Medicine Root, Rhonda Two Eagle/Porcupine, Eileen Janis/Pine Ridge, Garfield Apple/Wounded Knee and James Cross/Pass Creek.

"We are always asked about how many units we have boarded up and are not being used," said Ruff, "we are working on adding to our maintenance staff and our priority is to get these units back in operation but we need additional maintenance staff."

Instead of apartment houses planned for a couple of districts, housing is looking at two and three bedroom units. Recently, housing took over the Cohen Home, all but two of the 22 units are occupied.

"We are going to make it, we are going to meet the challenge ahead," said Lone Elk, "but we have to work together to do it, housing, the tribe, the districts and communities and families across the reservation."

Rosebud high school students learn domestic violence and resources

ROSEBUD - High-school students at Todd County and St. Francis Indian Schools got an earful this week. Not a scathing lecture from a teacher or an administrator at the respective schools, but an hour-long discussion about domestic violence and sexual assault from trained staff members of the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society in Mission.

'Violence is not a Lakota tradition,' was the theme of the seminars given to every high-school student grades 9-12, at the two local high-schools in Todd County.

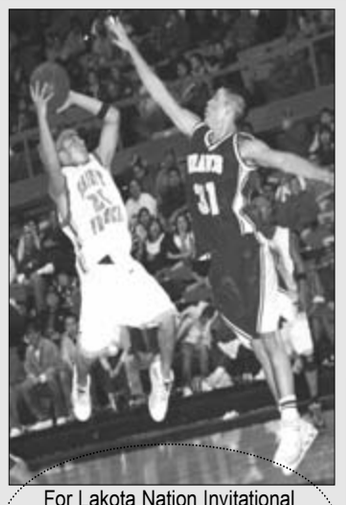
Officer Delta Anderson of the Rosebud Police Department offered students a realistic look at some of the excuses perpetrators of Domestic Violence offer when being arrested. "I didn't mean to hit her. If she just wouldn't have made me so mad, and I didn't mean to push her," were a few of the excuses Anderson offered to the young people in attendance.

Anderson explained some of the career limitations someone convicted of domestic violence or sexual assault might encounter in their future. "If you have been convicted of domestic violence, you cannot be a teacher, you cannot work for the government, and you can never keep or bear a firearm," said Anderson.

Public Relations Director for the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society, Javier Alegree, said the seminars were given because this week is National Teen Dating Violence Awareness Week. Alegree said the staff at the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society wanted to join other organizations around the country that were hosting similar programs for youth nationwide.

During the presentations, a short video was shown to the students. One of the characters in the video exhibited some tell-tale warning signs of physical and mental abuse towards a young lady. After the video, staff members of the WBCWS offered students a chance to comment on what they had just seen. The staff then answered questions about jealousy, possessiveness and physical abuse within the confines of high-school relationships.

Rich Winter, Sports Anchor for KINI radio, talked to the students about making 'good choices.' Winter talked about the increased risk of domestic violence and sexual assault when the presence of drugs and alcohol were added. Officer Anderson of the RST Police Department backed up that idea, saying that 99.9 percent of the cases he responds to regarding domestic violence and sexual assault were fueled by the presence of drugs and alcohol.



Connie and Dave Brushbreaker spoke to the students at St. Francis Indian School about their 21 years of marriage. The Brushbreakers agreed that the common thread to any successful relationship is honesty, trust and communication.

Every student who attended the seminars was given contact information for the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society's 'Crisis Hotline.' All students had access to pamphlets and brochures of information regarding Teen-dating-violence, and all were given a T-shirt courtesy of the WBCWS and Jaime Arobba.

Defeat of Bear Butte bill not the end

House Bill 1227 had its first reading on Jan. 26 and its intent was to "prohibit the issuance of certain alcoholic beverage licenses for establishments located near Bear Butte." The bill was sponsored by Representatives Bradford, Katus, Van Norman and others.

It is regrettable that a geographical marker such as Bear Butte that is presumably protected by the state and set aside as a place for prayer, has become a symbol of racial and economic "tug of war." Meanwhile, as conservationist and local ranchers make a case that the area has its own special habitat; Lakota people continue to insist that the impending noise and alcohol sales will diminish the sacred nature of Mato Paha and detract from its beauty and silence.

Any time commercial enterprise enters the equation the first casualty seems to be those who have less political clout or less money. It is an age old debate that often sees both sides of the argument sometimes degenerate into arguments that hold very little water. One side might say, "When you erect a buffer zone around my church to protect it from alcohol, then you can erect one around Bear Butte." Another one that was heard was, "They should use that money they use to buy beer at White Clay to buy up the land around Bear Butte."

Lakota people have always insisted that the 1868 Ft. Laramie Treaty as a legal document entered into with the federal government serves as the basis for many of the government's treaty obligations. This has been re-affirmed in many subsequent court cases. Bear Butte falls within the confines of the 1868 treaty, yet it may go the way of the rest of the hills, overdeveloped and commercialized. We now have "biker bars" and who knows what is next on the horizon.

It is astounding to think that the almighty dollar has prevailed again as, ironically, individual property rights and increasing land values have come to the forefront as being most critical in the debate. Perhaps, it is the great American way and who knows we may see increased commercialization near Mt. Rushmore after this. After all it is the shrine of Democracy and by that reasoning everyone has a right to make a buck or two.

Today on Tuesday, Feb. 13, HB 1227 was deferred to the 41st legislative day and for legislators that is a not too subtle signal that the bill has been "killed."

Rep. Thom Van Norman of District 28A said that it was an opportunity to educate the legislators and the public about the need to protect Bear Butte. He gave thanks to Sen. Two Bulls on the Senate side for supporting the bill as well as to those who prayed and took action to protect Bear Butte.

Van Norman did sound a bit of optimism for the future. He said, "There was good discussion in committee, and I think the temperament and understanding is beginning to change for the better.

Too bad for the huge financial interests involved opposing protection of Mato Paha." The defeat of the bill is not the end.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Do we give too much in death?

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

It hurts to lose someone you love and care about. There are emotional bonds that are truly difficult to let go in grief recovery.

Symbolic rituals at times help us to let go in that recovery. Not only in traditional Lakota ways, but in other cultures, there are rituals that are practiced to yield to those beliefs of death and spirit.

It is part of tradition and culture that come with years and years of a people. Whatever beliefs we have and the strength of those beliefs help us to understand death and the pain of loss. Through time those rituals were developed because they were needed.

One of those beliefs we have as Lakota people is how we honor those we love that have continued their journey home to the spirit world. We honor them and remember their life on Earth and do the right things for them so their spirit can make the journey.

It's not only for their spirit but for ourselves, we want to show our love and honor them in their death with the four day rituals of wakes and a funeral. It helps us with our grief recovery. We give and honor with gifts and remember with song.

I have been to wakes and funerals where that honor is seen with the many beautiful quilts, gifts, cakes, speeches and songs. I can think of several off reservations, non-Indian owned businesses who make their livelihood by creating cakes and flowers from those Lakota beliefs.

What we do is different from other nearby cultures, it's unique and to us it's an honor to do those things. Yet, it tugs at me when I see this happen, and I wonder, do we give too much in death, more than we did when they were alive?

I think of my mom, her wake and funeral service. Her family is huge, made up of her children, many grandchildren, great grandchildren, nieces and nephews, sisters and relatives. She made her journey in spirit with the support of so much love and gifts.

When I sat at her wake that first night, I thought of her and how proud she would have been if she received that beautiful silk quilt for her bed or if she got those flowers every day while she was sick. Her family did honor her in life. There were times we had big family celebrations so her family could be with her, honor her and be with her because we knew someday we would lose her.

I saw that happen with another relative that recently died. She was sick for such a long time but yet she was so strong in spirit and faith. I sincerely believe it was that faith that carried her so far in life despite her illness. I truly know that she would have loved to get flowers every day while she was ill and to see and visit all the relatives that came to honor her in death.

The late John Around Him was sick for awhile before he died. I know of three times that he was honored, one by the state and the college at Rapid City and another at Pass Creek.

The honorings were touching and he was proud to be there to accept the honor. That was good for him as he prepared for his journey home and it was good for the people who love and cared about him.

We need to do that more, especially today when times are hard. We need to honor those we love when they are here. We need to honor our children when we can. They need to know they are cared for and give that to them while it is worth something to them in life. Sometimes our children see that big honor that is given in death and maybe they are having a hard time in their life and when they see that occur in death, it makes dying worth something.

Times have changed and do we send the wrong cultural message in death? Do we need to make it more understandable, especially to our youth?

In writing these words, I don't mean to seem like I am being sacrilegious to Lakota spiritual belief but to give some food for thought about what our youth perceive and more to a commitment to myself as a publisher to give praise and honor to those who deserve it.

As the publisher, including the staff of this weekly Indian newspaper, we want to give more space to the achievements of our community members.

It's a good feeling to give praise, and to receive praise and honor. We are humans and we are made up of emotions. It is why we create rituals and honor to cater to those emotions.

I wrote two tributes in this newspaper to two people who journeyed on and who made an impact on my life and lives of others.

I wish I had written those good feeling words for them while their spirit was still here on Earth where they could have read them.

It would have made them feel good and that's where it counts.

What are we fighting for in Afghanistan and Iraq?

Dear Editor:

During WWI and WWII, it was proper and patriotic for American families to stand up and support our government's fight against the Nazis, fascists and communists. We fought to defend the United States against its enemies, and when we lost loved ones we honored them for their sacrifices in defending the constitution and our way of life.

It seems all that changed with the end of the cold war. Now we are involved in a war in Afghanistan that I can still personally support because it is directly linked to the attack on the World Trade Center on 9/11.

I don't agree with the manner in which this war is being handled, however. Where is Ben Laden? Why hasn't he been caught? Is he really dead or is he still alive? Does the Bush-Chaney Administration really want to catch him, or will it end their excuse for maintaining this so-called "war on terror." The focus should be on catching Bin Laden and getting our troops out of Afghanistan.

But the Iraqi war is something that I have not been able to support because it has no connection to 9/11. President Bush has even admitted this.

The Iraqi war was based on a lie, that there were weapons of mass destruction in Iraq and Sadam was not on the verge of making a nuclear bomb. This was all false and was the pretense for the Bush-Chaney Administration to invade Iraq. Then when no weapons were found, the excuse for the invasion was changed to bringing democracy to Iraq. It seems like the real reason for invading Iraq was to control the Iraqis' oil and to create a war to fund monies to the military-industrial complex that President Eisenhower warned us about some many years ago.

So we are getting bogged down in bogus war on Terror in Iraq, which is really a civil war between Sunni and Shia Muslins, and spending billions of dollars so Bush and Cheney can save face.

We are allowing the government to put the interests of certain politicians about the interests and welfare of the American people and our troops.

Now, my 19 year old son is entering the military (Marines), and will probably be deployed to the military conflicts in Afghanistan or Iraq.

If this was WWI or WWII, I would be proud to see him go fight for the American flag and the defense of our country.

So I ask myself, what are we fighting for in Afghanistan and Iraq? The vital interests of the United States? Or the vital interests of the oil companies, defense contractors and Halliburton? The war in Iraq is propagated based on keeping the American people in constant fear of terrorism.

What I fear the most is that this so-called war on terror will continue indefinitely to keep the money flowing to the military-industrial complex while our infrastructure in the United Sates, our roads, our bridges, and our beautiful country deteriorates.

My son and I come from a warrior society. We are of Oglala-Rosebud descent. We are proud of our heritage and proud to be Americans.

My son will go fight for the Star Spangled banner and the republic for which it stands. And I will always be there to support him and to worry about him if he is stationed in Afghanistan or Iraq. Yet, while my son serves in the military and I support him, the state of South Dakota and the United States will be attempting to take away more and more of our tribal sovereignty and homelands, trying to plan us out of existence.

So, I ponder like many mothers as my 19 year old left today to serve his country in the U.S. Marine Corps.

He left to fight for a country that does not support him, does not honor his tribe's treaty rights, and for various other reasons, like just being a Native American. Yet his own values and beliefs stand beyond the mere support of his country; he is willing and brave enough to enlist in the military because he believes in freedom and fighting not only for his own people but for the people of the United States of America.

Everyone has an opinion about the war in Iraq.

When does the war in Iraq come to an end?

When the American people understand and admit that it is based on lies and demand that it is time to demand that Iraq be returned to the Iraqi people, and that the federal government must began the process of bringing our troops home.

So I close with a prayer, as my son leaves to serve his country with honor, that he will one day come home to me and live a full happy life.

A Lakota Perspective

Proposed amendment supports assimilation

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

The Sicangu Lakota Nation is having a Secretarial Election to accept or reject proposed amendments to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Constitution on March 20, 2007.

We have come a long way in adapting to the changes we have faced in the last century.

Our form of government before the Indian Reorganization Act was in reality integral and very effective to a lifestyle and economy in that period of our history. Our leadership had the wisdom, intelligence, and insight to weigh what was gained and what would be lost by their decisions.

The leadership adapted with the radically changing environment. One example is how we adapted our lifestyle significantly with the coming of the horse centuries earlier. The Lakota accommodated and accepted the challenge whole-heartedly. Consequently Lakota men became renowned as the finest horseman, warriors and hunters.

Throughout our history our ancestors struggled to keep us together as true Lakota people.

When the government offered our leaders a different form of government it was accepted with great reluctance.

At that time they were well aware that IRA was a form of assimilation, however they were desperate to stop the repercussions of the Dawes Act. Their struggle was difficult to say the least because they didn't have many choices or options.

The US government failed miserably in living up to the promises of the treaties which we as a Tribe signed in good faith. We had lost our resources and our land was passing into the hands of the wasicu.

Yet our leaders through discussion and debate made well thought out decisions to preserve our culture and identity as Sicangu Lakota.

Our government and economy became dependent on the Bureau of Indian Affairs and other US government entities for survival. The funding that we receive today, as a treaty tribe is complex and uncertain and most often not sufficient to fulfill our needs.

Now comes a proposed amendment to lower our blood quantum for enrollment into the Sicangu Lakota Nation.

Although it is questionable to some people whether ¼ Sicangu Lakota blood is enough to identify a person as Sicangu; Amendment No. 3 if accepted will allow any person born after April 1935 who can provide proof of three generations of lineal descent who were members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, regardless of residency, will be eligible for enrollment in the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Amendment 3 is proposing to change our enrollment into the tribe to linear descent. That would mean that some tribal members could be 1/32 Sicangu and still be an enrolled as a Sicangu Lakota member.

The proposed amendment #3 supports assimilation. What the government and churches couldn't do, we will accomplish with amendment #3.

The government and the churches in their attempts to assimilate us have convinced some people that blood quantum is not important, meaning that being Native American is not important. Some people are using the derogatory and racist term "pedigree" to describe our bloodlines.

The concept of bloodlines is not a recent invention by the white man but has always been an important part of our culture. Knowing our own bloodlines was important for many reasons.

Bloodlines illustrate the way the Lakota view relationships. One basic teaching was the dangers of intermarrying within bloodlines. Bloodlines were also used to identify hereditary leader. Although the measure of the quantity of blood degree is different from bloodlines they are interchangeable. Bloodlines actually identify family descent from particular ancestors.

There are also financial concerns if this amendment passes. How will the Sicangu Lakota Nation support the needs of the hundreds or maybe even thousands of new enrollees? Health services, employment, law and order, housing; every aspect of our tribal government will be affected. For the last couple of years the tribe borrowed money to give each Sicangu Lakota child $100 for much needed school clothing. I was happy and proud that our tribe could provide this especially when I saw the happiness new shoes brought to our children. With the added enrollment could our tribe afford this expense?

The perpetuation and preservation of the Sicangu Lakota should be an utmost concern for our tribe.

One solution for those who are not enrolled and who are serious and committed to being Sicangu Lakota would be to marry back into the tribe then their children will be eligible for enrollment into the tribe. Belief in assimilation is what got us into this dilemma. If children were taught to respect and honor their identity lineal descent would not be an issue today.

Felons engaged in influential positions within the tribe and /or are serving as a member of our tribal council is another point of concern. The proposed amendment addressing this concern is quite ambiguous. In our history great men led us. Leadership was acquired as a result of actions and behavior based on moral purpose.

Because of this philosophy leadership was deliberately developed within families. Children were taught to respect the rights of others from the beginning.

Men wearing eagle feathers earned that right through their deeds that had moral purpose, and those deeds were beneficial to the people.

Relationships and kinship were part of that concept and ensured the cohesiveness within families and within the Tribe.

Respect for family and moral teachings ensured the safety of children from sexual predators and kept domestic violence in check. Relationships were so important that adoption became a common practice.

This is a very simple over-view of a well-developed and complex form of leadership, family relationships and traditional mores.

We need to look back at our history, examine our values and culture and decide what made us uniquely Sicangu Lakota and hold those values in honor and respect.

I encourage everyone to take the responsibility in perpetuating our bloodlines and supporting our moral purpose as Sicangu Lakota.

I encourage people who do not understand an amendment to vote "NO" and that will keep the constitution as it is today. Mitakuyepi, I want the best of our people, especially for those who are the rightful descendents of the Sicangu Lakota Nation.

Notes From Indian Country

Traditional Indians buried by new casino Indians

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

A ruling last Friday by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia rejected arguments by the San Manuel Band of Mission Indians that they should not be subject to federal labor laws.

Judge Janice Rogers Brown said in the ruling by the three-judge panel, "Tribal sovereignty is not absolute autonomy permitting a tribe to operate in a commercial capacity without legal restraint."

The ruling was issued in response to a complaint filed by the Communications Workers of America with the National Labor Relations Board. The San Manuel Band of Mission Indians had appealed that ruling favoring the union by the NLRB.

Indian gaming is now a $22 billion-a-year industry with casinos in 28 states that employs as many as 250,000 workers many of them non-Indians. The industry has taken some of the poorest people in America to the lofty realms of the richest.

There has been a long-time fear by the larger Indian nations calling themselves "Treaty Tribes" that some of the smaller and newer tribes would eventually get them entangled in legal battles they were sure to lose. Sovereignty on reservations like the Pine Ridge and Rosebud in South Dakota is a given.

These tribes have their own law enforcement and judicial system that operates under the auspices of a legally elected tribal government. The State of South Dakota has no jurisdiction on these reservations whereas in many states, including California, the states operate under Public Law 280 that does give them jurisdiction over law enforcement and other legal matters on Indian reservations within their boundaries.

And as usual, this mish-mash of conflicting jurisdictional laws can create widespread confusion.

What impact does this new ruling have on Indian country? First of all it will give unions the right to deal directly with its members outside of any restrictions placed upon it by the tribes. Now the unions will come under the protections of the National Labor Relations Act.

There are some tribes like the Oneida Nation of New York State, the Mashentucket Pequot in Connecticut, and the Shakopee in Minnesota that have become so extremely wealthy that they almost feel they are above any man-made laws. Henry Duro, chairman of the San Manuel Tribe said, "We are disappointed by the ruling today. We believe that these gaming projects help to fulfill essential governmental functions by providing education, health care, housing, senor care and other key programs. Those are basic governmental obligations that could be impacted by this decision."

Does staging multi-million dollar boxing matches and purchasing professional basketball teams and hotel restaurant chains fit in there somewhere?

Now let's take a look at the basic reality of tribal gaming. There are many tribes fortunate enough to be located on or near large metropolitan areas where their casinos can rake in millions of dollars annually. There are other tribes that still rank amongst the poorest people in America by reason of geography or because they have chosen not to get into this mad race to build a gaming casino. The Navajo Nation is still struggling with this decision and the Hopi Nation of Arizona has ruled out the prospects of ever building a casino.

It has been my contention for many years that those Indian nations sitting on top of the extreme wealth afforded them by their casinos should cease taking funds from the federal government that could be better utilized on the poorer Indian reservations.

When the Seminole Nation of Florida can spend a billion dollars to purchase the Hard Rock Café and Hotel enterprises it makes the people of the very poor tribes wonder why they are still getting federal funding for a variety of tribal programs.

These wealthy tribes can afford to build beautiful homes, construct new schools and hospitals, and to totally rebuild the infrastructure on their tribal lands from the profits realized by their lucrative casinos. Some of the larger tribes such as Pine Ridge and Rosebud are struggling to survive. Unemployment on these reservations can be as high as 75 percent and their populations are nearly 10 times that of the smaller and newer tribes that are raking in millions every month.

The wealthy tribes handout per capita payments to their members that often amounts to thousands of dollars every month. To me it is a new dimension in welfare.

I believe it is high time for the Department of the Interior to take a closer look at the financial positions of every Indian nation in America and to come up with a new set of rules, regulations and laws that would drastically decrease federal funding to the wealthy, independent tribes and redistribute those funds to the poorer Indian nations.

Many Native Americans are a little sick and tired of watching wealthy tribes like the Seminole Nation of Florida flaunt their wealth while the majority of Indians continue to live in the worst conditions of poverty ever imaginable.

To suggest that the wealthy tribes give up their federal dollars in favor of the poor tribes is almost sacrilegious in Indian country, but somebody has to say it.

As I have written so many times in the past, it is an unfortunate set of circumstances in this country to see the rich tribes become richer while the poor become poorer. But remember, to be rich in money is much less than to be rich in culture and traditions.

The smaller and newer tribes are now getting involved in legal disputes that will impact all of the tribes in America and they are doing so without consulting the larger and more established and traditional Indian nations. The case just ruled upon with the NLRB is one example and believe me, there will be many more that will be even more damaging to the all of the tribes of Indian country.

The new casino Indian is rapidly supplanting the older and more traditional Indian. Greed is the new Indian God and where it stops, nobody knows.

Finding My Voice

Anyone can find their inner strength

Dana Lone Hill

There was a comment on the paper's website the other day about my Martin Luther King entry that asked me where I get my inner strength from. It got me thinking.

Where do I get my inner strength?

First off, it surprises me when people think of me as a strong person. I know in my heart that I am, but I feel it doesn't show through...or shine. Yes I think shine sounds better for inner strength.

Is it something you are born with?

Is it something acquired from a hard life, because to be honest my life wasn't that hard....until I took on the role of "single mom."

So did I find my inner strength from that role? Or did it come one day in a dream.

I don't even know what inner strength is...but I do know this is who I am:

*I am honest when I write...with myself especially because why lie?

*I write what I feel at that moment....and from the heart.

*If I feel a need to write about something I see right or wrong I will.

*Even though I am a proud person, I do walk with my head down.

I like to watch my feet where I walk and I don't believe all that hoopla about having to walk with your head held high.

I still have self esteem, which took me years to find but I acquired my style when I walk and I am sticking with it.

*I have children, if I don't show them how to be in this life who will?

God knows we have enough youth in this world that have no direction and end up on a statistic sheet in some government office gathering dust and proving that funding needs to go somewhere, just because of that sheet of paper, gathering dust in the office of some pot bellied guy who could care less about that youth that is a statistic on his desk.

I don't know exactly what inner strength is, other than a need.

I need it for me, my children and my people.

I don't know if I ever really found it, I think it found me as a need to be who I am today. And I think anyone can find their inner strength when they realize it as a need to be who they are or whatever purposes.

I totally didn't make sense, did I?

Dana Lone Hill is a 34-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota Community College.

Medicine man's contest on oral tradition

By Francis Apple Sr.
A'sa Kuwapi
Kyle, S.D.

(Editor's NoteThe following is the English version of the story of the contest. The Lakota version, which was written in the Lakota language was printed in Volume III Issue 18 on page A4 entitled "Wakan Akiciyapi.")

1. When your grandfathers were alive they would tell stories of long ago.

2. They tell of the last known contest between a Cheyenne and Oglala medicine man to prove who had the stronger medicine (Wowakan).

3. This event took place at what was known as the Herd Camp, across, the road from the big red barn east of Pine Ridge Village.

4. The Northern Cheyenne tribe came to our reservation with their most powerful medicine man by the name of Bull Back Fat to challenge the Oglala to prove who had more power.

5. So the Oglala chose their medicine man by the name of Live Coal who was small in stature and kind of pitiful looking.

6. And here he refused.

7. He said, if I do that I will have to kill him.

8. The Cheyenne people laughed and treated the Oglala holy man scornfully.

9. Finally the Oglala gave in and agreed to the contest.

10. The word got out and many Oglala came to the Herd camp to witness this interesting event.

11. The day of the contest arrived and preparations were made.

12. Contestants took their positions, the Oglala medicine man cried.

13. The Cheyenne medicine man was very arrogant, strutting around with a looking glass in his hand.

14. The Oglala waken wicasa picked up a handful of dirt, stomped one foot on the ground and threw the dirt at the Cheyenne, it looked as though someone picked him up off his feet and slammed him on the ground; with his legs trembling, he died.

15. The Cheyenne delegation clamored around their fallen medicine man and pleaded with the Oglala medicine man to revive him.

16. He told them, I shot a bear claw at him, so it went through his temple and it's gone; I cannot retrieve it.

17. The Cheyenne buried their loved one on a hill and went home. The moral of the story is nobody messes with the Oglala. (josh)

Where is hope?

Dear Editor:

Where is our hope, what are we hoping in? Many people put their hope and trust in things that can not save or help them.

How about putting our hope in the only one who can save us from our sins and help us in our time of need.

He is the creator of the heavens and the earth and all things in both places. He is closer than anyone on earth, he cares what happens to us and is only a prayer away. He is the best friend we can find and will never gossip about us.

When we talk to Him we have to be very honest because he knows what is in our hearts and the motives of our prayers.

When we ask Him to forgive us, he does because His son paid the price for our sins.

He came to give us eternal life in heaven.

"For the wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life through Christ our Lord." Romans 6:33.

Reflecting on President Bush's 'Blueprint' for the No Child Left Behind Act

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

This "No Child Left Behind" business is something that is not going to go away soon unless the new Democratic controlled Congress decides to "tweak" it dramatically or infuse a lot more funding into it. In that regard, I suppose we need to continue to clarify the intent of the law and understand what educators and policy makers may be doing around the country.

President Bush's plan is called, "Building on Results: A Blueprint for Strengthening the No Child Left Behind Act."

I am on the Todd County Middle School parent committee and I guess I should be consulting with my colleague, Dorothy LeBeau, School Improvement Coordinator at the TCSD district office, as to the specific actions the district is taking this year to comply with the criteria as set forth by NCLB. I am not a practitioner, but as a Sicangu Lakota educator of sorts, much of NCLB applies to the progress that my son will making as he makes his way through the rest of the year and onto high school and I need to know where we are headed as we examine what is called a "standards-based" education and it's emphasis on accountability.

Actually, I simply wanted to provide an overview, nationally, as to what President Bush's new version of the NCLB Act might look like, while offering up what some educators have said about its effectiveness last year.

The President's budget when announced this week will signal whether or not he can work with Democrats as he will hopefully increase spending dramatically to carry out its mandate.

I was surprised to learn that President Bush and Senator Edward M. Kennedy had collaborated in a bi-partisan way to create NCLB when it was signed into law in 2002. I felt that some thought the law was as bit too conservative, but lo' and behold the emphasis has always been on improving the lowest achieving schools in the nation.

The goal is to make all students proficient in science and math by the year 2014. I do not think we can argue with that intent.

Most people know that there have been critics of the federal government who insist that they simply have not provided enough funding to carry out its mandates.

Hanna Bordas and Beverly Carroll at the Harvard University Graduate School of Education wrote an article in the summer of 2006 entitled, "High Standards for All Students." They quote Harvard professor Robert Schwartz who noted, "The federal government, by some counts, is $9 billion short of the amount promised when NCLB was enacted."

NCLB is one way for the federal government to require the collection of test data, which then needs to be interpreted and then studied as it says something about the performance of students so that schools which are, in fact, low performing can ask for additional resources.

Todd County School District assessment coordinator, Robert Magelky, understands the need and importance of "huddling" with teachers.

He explained recently that he will gather a group of teachers to look at test data and survey information and then solicit their opinion as to what the data reveals.

Another Harvard professor, Daniel Koretz was quoted in the Ed. Magazine as noting, "Many people in the policy making world misunderstand testing, and think that once they have a test score, they've captured the most important parts of schooling….Measured student achievement is extremely important, but so are motivation, creativity and many other outcomes of learning."

In President Bush's "Blueprint" the administration wants to see charter and private schools to work to create competition and, thus, motivate other schools that are not doing well to improve. They also want to get around collective bargaining agreements and that may be a sticking point with local schools. The aim is to assign the best teachers to charter and private schools and make them better.

Democrats, according to a recent article would integrate a number of features when the law is re-authorized and this would impact tribal schools. They would provide more teacher incentives for those who work in the most challenging schools, ask states to increase services to those low achieving schools and continue with providing professional development opportunities so they can assist teachers in improving student performance.

Under the President's plan students who are stranded in schools who struggle to make AYP or adequate yearly progress consistently may choose a scholarship of $3,000 for which the Education Department describes as intensive tutoring.

Bush's plan also includes the right of parents to transfer students out of low achieving schools; however, that option seems more viable in municipalities where there may be more than one middle school or high schools. In reservation communities, that option offers only limited opportunity as many are small and do not operate more than one school at any level.

Bordas and Carroll of the Harvard Ed. Magazine noted that NCLB quickly came under scrutiny as child psychologists, parents and teachers worried about the psychological impact of the pressure that comes along with such change. High achievers may suffer at a narrowing of the curriculum, while low achievers may simply give up as the bar is raised.

The President's plan envisions more options when intervening in schools which have performed poorly for five consecutive years. For example, the "Blueprint" discusses charter authority and in rural areas there would be the possibility of "virtual" charter schools.

Ronen Habib, who earned his Ed.M at Harvard is a high school math teacher in Lexington, MA and he believes that students need to have the ability to do math, but they must also be able to explain it and apply it to life applications.

His point is that such skills are not measured on any standardized test.

William Jaeger, who teaches U. S. and world history in Hartford, CT was quoted in the Harvard. Ed. Magazine. He noted, "Consistently, we see that the teacher's knowledge of his or her subject matter and dedication to students is one of the best predictors of student growth.

The moment we stifle teacher creativity, autonomy and ability to design, deliver and assess content, we are going to see a significant dip in teacher quality, motivation, and thus, student achievement."

Finally, a question to test your knowledge as presented by writers Bordas and Carroll; "Which of the following states are considering or have considered opting out of NCLB and returning all Title I funding? (A) Arizona (B) Hawaii (C) Wyoming (D) All of the above.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Guest Column

Let us put our minds together

By Ivan Star
Oglala Lakota
Oglala, S.D.

I was reminded again of the fact that learning is a lifelong process: every day is a learning experience. A good portion of the things I learned were real eye-openers, especially where truth was an hidden factor… and there is an abundance of pretense in this world. Therefore, I cannot claim to know everything, because I don't.

Anyway, being inquisitive and having the ability to listen has its advantages. The art of paying attention to newly acquired knowledge and comparing and applying them to established facts has always been rewarding.

The other day, while waiting for the rocks to heat up for Inipi (purification ceremony), my older brother talked about the old way of doing business, so to speak. Our ancestors did not just wander about the Great Plains. For one, he said, people used to gather four times during the year to socialize, celebrate, exchange information, and perform certain ceremonies.

In fact, an impetuous young military officer lost his life and the lives of 268 cavalrymen, including his officers, during one of these gatherings. The U.S. 7th Cavalry Regiment suffered 52 percent casualties when Custer led five detachments blindly into the large encampment on June 25, 1876 in Eastern Montana Territory.

The people did not gather there to plan for war nor was it a random gathering, as most modern-day people believe. Man did not dictate those specific times; rather they are the work of a higher power. The ancient Lakota assembled according to two Solstices and two Equinoxes. Let me explain what my brother was telling me without butchering it to pieces.

First, the longest day of the year happens during the Summer Solstice (June) and the Winter Solstice (December) makes for the shortest day. During an Equinox, the lengths of day and night are equal. This makes four specific times during which ancient Lakota people gathered and conducted certain ceremonies (June 22, Sept. 22, Dec. 22 and March 22).

Approximately 91.5 days separate these four dates equally. Just remember that a Solstice occurs twice a year with an Equinox occurring 91.5 days after each Solstice. This makes for 365 days.

Think of a "medicine wheel", especially how it is divided into quarters and that should help to establish a better idea of what I am trying to convey here.

By the way, familiarity with this kind of cultural knowledge, in a basic sense, differentiates a Lakota person from a non-Lakota. In addition, proficiency in Lakota language and comprehension of other cultural elements is what makes a Lakota. This includes the Lakota account of the creation of the world.

Now, an interesting question my brother threw up in the air was, "Did the framers of the new tribal constitution, under the Wheeler-Howard Act, try to emulate this ancient spiritual system by writing in quarterly meetings for the Tribal Council?" He said that if that was the case, they missed the old system by about ten or eleven days.

My brother then suggested that perhaps this is the reason the IRA is not working. The effort, obviously by government agents and others, was to make it "Lakota friendly" It is not only a foreign system, but it was improperly implemented.

US Congress is to assemble at least once a year beginning at noon on January 3 as ratified under the Lame Duck Amendment of 1933. This means that even Congress had nothing to do with the four described dates, which the Lakota people utilized for centuries.

Deducing from both oral and documented history regarding the 1935 Secretarial election on the Pine Ridge to adopt the new constitution, my brother's contention is not far from the truth. Those 70-year old events certainly reinforce his view today. Again, I will try to explain.

In 1935, the many Lakota tiospaye (Extended family groups) occupied various areas along the creeks and rivers across the sprawling reservation. Government agents must have seen this ancient system and "turned" most of those tiospaye into constitutional communities, perhaps with the idea of enticing Lakota people to accept the new constitution.

Government fervor to get the Lakota to accept this new system of government becomes even more obvious with the institution of the 30% acceptance criterion for the constitution. Incidentally, this particular criterion is far short of the primary principle of democracy, Rule by Majority. Nonetheless, it may have helped to obtain a favorable vote on some reservations.

The Pine Ridge election, however, remains controversial to this day. Government records show that only 28.6 percent voted. Public malcontent prevails as the closest of relatives and friends still discuss, in private, acts of conspiracy and deceit by government agents and the military during the election.

Many an elder has said that 1935 was the year the Oglala people became divided: there were those in favor of the new IRA and those who opposed it - and it remains so today. Tribal government conveniently ignores this significantly obvious and enduring public dissatisfaction. Thus, it goes on and on and on, with no resolution in sight.

This situation fueled an armed confrontation in 1972/73. Another act of frustration is the peaceful takeover of the tribal government building in 2000 by the Grass Roots Oyate. Unfortunately, neither of these events did nothing to ease the overall situation.

Instead, pro-IRA minions used the events to convey the idea that they were divisive and a detriment to the "best interests" of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Let us not forget that fact that we became a divided group of people right at the beginning (1935). These events of protest are merely the symptoms of this long-standing problem.

In line of what Sitting Bull had said, I ponder the prospect of putting two opposing elements together to make a new one. Integrating ancient ways with the new is theoretically doable; it is man that makes it difficult.

My brother suggested, with a chuckle, amending our constitution so that Tribal Council sessions occur on the Solstices and Equinoxes. I tend to agree.

The four times in ancient Lakota way are set apart by a strong atmosphere of spirituality and ceremony and could have an affirmative influence on modern tribal government.

This does not take from the absolute need to divide the absolute power of the Tribal Council with an Executive and Judicial branch. I cannot stress the value of this with words.

Although we vote, that power and authority wielded by the Tribal Council is not really the people's… not under the current power structure.

I know such concepts are a bit too much for many to swallow. Some may view it as bizarre, drastic, or even subversive.

As always, change for the better, or evolution, is disrupting and oftentimes disturbing. We have yet to see when and how such change is going to occur.

Where are we going to be in five years?

Crackerbarrel highlights Bear Butte issue and educational matters

By Vicky Wicks
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - The proposed alcohol-free buffer zone around Bear Butte will not become law if Rep. Gordon Howie, R-Dist. 30, has his way.

At the Saturday, Feb. 10 Legislative Crackerbarrel in Rapid City, Howie said "the bottom line" to House Bill 1227 is that a "group of people want to seize control of property rights so they can dictate" how the land is used.

Property rights are not received as a gift, but are received with ownership of the land, said Howie, who serves on the House Local Government Committee, the legislative body that heard testimony from both sides of the issue on Thursday, Feb. 8.

Alan Hanks, R-Dist. 32, who also serves on that committee, said the bill addresses a "noise issue" around Bear Butte during the Sturgis Rally and doesn't have a clear-cut answer. "I'm not sure how it will come out," he said.

The committee vote on the issue was continued to Tuesday, Feb. 13.

Also continued to Feb. 13, for hearing in the House Committee on Education, was House Bill 1290, requested by Governor Mike Rounds.

This bill provides that Native American language, history, and culture will be taught to Native and non-Native students and teachers in South Dakota.

The bill also provides for an Indian Education Advisory Council made up of Native American educators and representatives of all nine tribes in South Dakota.

Legislators at the Crackerbarrel said the education bill has a good chance of passing. Rep. Ed McLaughlin, R-Dist. 34, said that because the Governor's office has been pushing the bill, it has been well received.

Sen. Tom Katus, D-Dist. 32, noted that the bill provides for education for all students and instructors regardless of race. "I support it thoroughly," he said.

Rep. Jeffrey Haverly, R-Dist. 35, who sits on the House and Joint Appropriations committees, cited statistics regarding Native American poverty and crime rates and said, "We need to get behind this [HB1290]."

But a woman in the audience pointed out that no money has been set aside to put the program into action, making it "an unfunded mandate."

Katus expressed frustration with the Board of Regents' resistance to two other education bills. Senate Bill 112 would provide money to tribal colleges to offset costs of educating non-tribal students, and Senate Bill 95 would transfer authority over technical schools to a State Board of Technical Institutes.

Regarding tribal colleges, atus said the Senate Appropriations Committee deferred making a decision until it could talk to the regents and see if a deal could be worked out.

"I remain very concerned as a legislator" about the power given to the regents, Katus said. "You've got a fourth arm of government that was elected by no one."

Legislators at Rapid City Crackerbarrels represent districts fully or partially located in Pennington County. The next and last, Crackerbarrel will be held Saturday, Feb. 24, from 9 to 11 a.m., in the Didier Educational Center located at South Dakota School of Mines.

Bear Butte is a state park and sacred to tribes for spiritual reasons. Recently Lakota people, organizations and other tribes have been struggling to have a buffer zone around the mountain to protect prayer from the noise and alcohol use in nearby developing bars, campgrounds and concerts. The bars and campgrounds cater to the to the annual Sturgis Motorcycle Rally disturb and disturb the prayer and other spiritual significance of the mountain.

Native comedian, Milo Smith, is perfecting his 'style

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - South Dakota native comedian, Milo Smith of the Crow Creek nation in South Dakota is from the Big Bend community.

He had stopped by KINI FM radio and was visiting with station manager, Richard Iyotte, on Friday, Feb. 9. He now lives in Pierre and was on the Rosebud to touch base with a couple of schools.

Though he has an agent, he admitted that he has been doing some of his own promotion. His agent is Eileen Aberle. As a matter of fact, he was scheduled to do a presentation at Todd County High School on Monday, Feb. 12 but the school district called off school due to poor weather conditions. He is also scheduled to do a presentation at St. Francis Indian School at a later date.

Smith got into the comedy business by "hanging out" with his uncle, J. R. Redwater, who is making a splash in Indian Country and beyond while headlining with his own brand of Indian humor. He said, "J. R. Redwater is my uncle. He has always been an influence. That's how I came to be a comedian. Without him, I wouldn't be where I am today."

Milo Smith recently visited Rosebud and is a developing comedian.

He said, "We worked and lived together and always joked together. He said, 'take your mouth to the stage' and he pushed me. It was in me, he just pushed me. He can be blatantly truthful."

Smith is a clean cut young Lakota man who appears quiet at first, but is fairly articulate once the interview began. What makes him "special" is the fact that he has reportedly experienced the negative things in life which some young people have dabbled in and he is only 20 years old.

His young age makes him a prime candidate to relate to young people and with so many suicides and deaths among the young, there is a need to get a positive message, any message, out to the adolescents that to choose life is better than the alternative.

He said, "I already experienced the stuff that comes along with alcohol. The lifestyle on the 'rez' has become worse and worse. I just decided I wanted to do something and use my skills."

When asked what message he would communicate to area students about suicide he said, "With suicide in the area, it is a tough issue because it kind of looks as if this is it for them. 'Tough times never last, but tough people do.'"

He continued, "My sister contemplated suicide and I sat down and talked to her. Now, she is a straight A student. There is a purpose in life and you don't have to kill yourself."

Milo is appreciative of the help he has received from others. He said he would not be where he is at today without the help of others. He says, "My goal in the next year is to be bigger than J.R. Redwater."

He has dreams of creating a talent agency for Native actors, comedians, and models. He added, "I love my Indian ways. I keep involved in Indian Country and with helping people."

Smith speaks with a high degree of certainty about his future in comedy and it is the kind of confidence one likes to see in young people. He said, "Getting up in front of an audience, now that is a natural rush. It stays with you when you get off stage."

Bear Butte buffer zone rejected by state legislators

PIERRE (AP) - An effort by American Indians to protect a sacred mountain in the Black Hills by making the area off limits to bars failed Tuesday in the South Dakota Legislature.

The House Local Government Committee killed a bill that would have set up a 4-mile buffer zone around Bear Butte in the Sturgis area.

Lakota people and other tribes consider the mountain sacred. They say bars and campgrounds that cater to the annual Sturgis Motorcycle Rally disturb the special aura near Bear Butte.

The rally draws hundreds of thousands of motorcyclists from around the world each August.

Huge campgrounds have sprung up in the area, and many of them feature nightly concerts with big-name entertainers. Some of the campgrounds are so large that their population during the rally exceeds that of most cities in the state.

Legislators who voted against a buffer zone around Bear Butte say it would interfere with private property rights, but they said the Meade County Commission should consider some form of special zoning in the area. A local official told lawmakers that a special committee will be established to review the idea.

HB1227 was rejected 11-2.

North Dakota tribe cuts 80 jobs, won't affect casino

NEW TOWN, N.D. (AP) - Job cuts announced by the Three Affiliated Tribes this week will not affect the tribal casino.

The 4 Bears Casino and Lodge employs about 400 people. It is owned by the tribe but is a separate entity, said Lawrin Baker, executive officer for federal and tribal programs.

The tribe announced this week that about 80 tribal workers were being laid off Friday because of a money crunch. The positions affected are funded by the tribe's general fund, not by federal dollars.

The tribe has a debt of more than $105 million, according to Chairman Marcus Wells Jr. The 80 layoffs will save the tribe about $2 million per year, Baker said.

Lady Thorpes wrap up season 20-0

Little Wound's Hornbeck returns, Mustangs trample Tigers

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Pine Ridge scored 34 points in the third period at home Friday night against Crow Creek as Christian Janis knocked down 12 points and Nichelle Red Owl helped with 10 in the quarter as the Lady Thorpes picked up their 19th win of the season 80-43 over the Lady Chieftains.

On Saturday in Rapid City at the civic center, Pine Ridge found themselves down at the half for only the second time during the season; down 32-31 to the Red Cloud Lady Crusaders, Pine Ridge grabbed a 48-46 lead at the end of three quarters and forcing Red Cloud into a number of turnovers finished off their undefeated regular season with a 68-55 win.

Pine Ridge dominated all aspects of the game against Crow Creek as the Lady Thorpes out-rebounded the Lady Chieftains 47-28, Robin Webber led the team with eight rebounds, Saudia Tasso and Lacey Weston helped with six each. Sasha Ross, a 5'8" freshman, led Crow Creek with nine while Lucy Fallis helped with seven.

Webber went to work immediately in the first quarter scoring seven of her 17 points and Christian Janis hit six of her game high 19 points in the first quarter as Pine Ridge went out quickly to a 18-9 first quarter lead. Weston finished with seven points but added six assists and four blocked shots to her six rebounds. Red Owl contributed at both ends of the floor finishing with 17 points, four steals, four assists and four rebounds.

Weston proved unstoppable against Red Cloud on Saturday as time and time again her teammates got her the ball inside and Red Cloud had no answer for the 5'11" sophomore, she had 20 by the half and finished with a game high 34. Despite Weston's dominance in the paint, Red Cloud's defense against the rest of the Lady Thorpes kept them in the game.

Marque Lunderman came out flying in the second scoring 11 of her team high 20 points, Lunderman and freshman forward, Kristy Boltz led Red Cloud with six rebounds each. Ida Clarke helped with 15 points.

Pine Ridge stiffened up their own defense in the fourth to get their 20th straight win, Webber had four of her team's 12 steals, Weston and Sophia Janis each finished with three steals. Red Owl chipped in 13 points and a steal scoring all of her points in the second half. Pine Ridge is off now until they host Little Wound in the first round of District 14A action on Tuesday, Feb. 20.

On Thursday, Red Cloud won their sixth straight game, a 61-43 victory over St. Francis at home as Lunderman knocked down 24 points with eight rebounds and three steals. Ida Clarke hit double figures again with 13 points adding five steals and four assists while Boltz helped with six points and seven rebounds with two steals and three assists. Shaina Clifford chipped in seven points, three assists and four steals.

With one game left in their regular season, Red Cloud is now 12-7 and travels to McLaughlin on Saturday before hosting Hill City in the first round of District 15A on Tuesday.

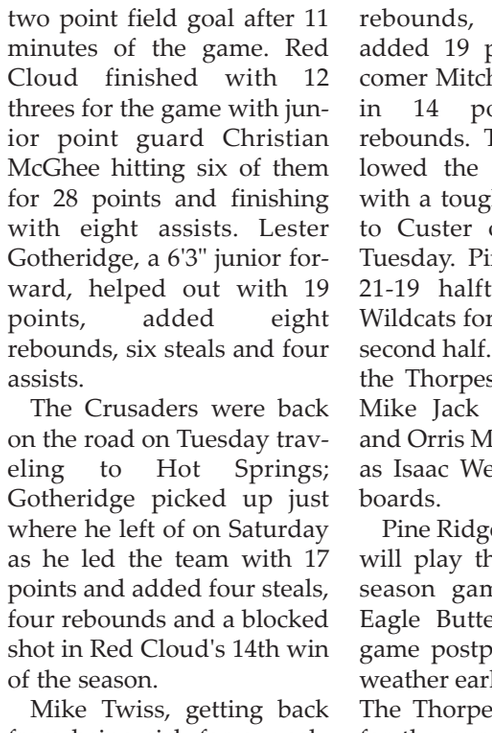
Mustangs maul Mobridge, maintain number two ranking



Red Cloud loses to Chadron, knocks off Pine Ridge and Hot Springs

KYLE - After missing three games to a knee injury, junior point guard, Brice Hornbeck was back in the lineup on Saturday in Kyle and Little Wound won their 16th game of the year against one loss 85-54 over Mobridge. TJ McCauley tallied 21 points, Rich Big Boy hit for 20 points and grabbed 13 rebounds, Ty Lunderman helped with 14 points and Hornbeck chipped in 11.

After picking up their first loss of the year, Little Wound has regained some momentum, especially with the return of Hornbeck with big wins over McLaughlin and Mobridge. Little Wound finishes off the regular season with road games at Standing Rock on Thursday, Eagle Butte on Friday and Bennett County on Feb. 23. The Mustangs are ranked number two in the SD sportswriters poll, just behind undefeated Parkston who just beat Sioux Falls Christian 62-60 on the road on Tuesday and are ranked number one in the KWSN/KSFY high school basketball poll in Sioux Falls.

Red Cloud took their number six ranking and 12-2 record to Chadron on Tuesday and struggled against a pumped up Chadron team losing 78-64 before bouncing back with back to back wins over Pine Ridge 86-57 and Hot Springs 67-46.

Red Cloud hit five threes in the first quarter to open up a 16-8 lead over Pine Ridge Saturday at the civic center in Rapid City and ended up hitting seven threes before finally hitting a two point field goal after 11 minutes of the game. Red Cloud finished with 12 threes for the game with junior point guard Christian McGhee hitting six of them for 28 points and finishing with eight assists. Lester Gotheridge, a 6'3" junior forward, helped out with 19 points, added eight rebounds, six steals and four assists.

The Crusaders were back on the road on Tuesday traveling to Hot Springs; Gotheridge picked up just where he left of on Saturday as he led the team with 17 points and added four steals, four rebounds and a blocked shot in Red Cloud's 14th win of the season.

Mike Twiss, getting back from being sick for a week, led the team in rebounds with 10 and added eight points while McGhee and freshman Brier Iron Cloud both hit for 10 points. Red Cloud takes their 14-3 record to McLaughlin on Saturday and closes out the season hosting St. Francis on Monday and going to Hill City on Friday.

Pine Ridge stopped their five game losing string with a 93-51 win over Bennett County and followed it up with a 72-60 win over Crow Creek on Friday night at home as John Provost hit for a double double with 23 points and 11 rebounds, Michael Jack added 19 points and newcomer Mitch Bagola chipped in 14 points and six rebounds. The Thorpes followed the Red Cloud loss with a tough luck 60-53 loss to Custer on the road on Tuesday. Pine Ridge held a 21-19 halftime before the Wildcats forged ahead in the second half. Shawn Keith led the Thorpes with 18 points, Mike Jack helped with 17 and Orris Morrison added 12 as Isaac Weston grabbed 10 boards.

Pine Ridge is now 9-10 and will play their final regular season game at Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Monday, a game postponed due to the weather earlier in the season. The Thorpes are in a battle for the number two seed in District 14A and the opportunity to host a first round district game; St. Francis has a slim lead in seeding points at this time.

Group protest uranium mining
Will ask tribal governments to declare reservations as nuclear free zones

By Vicky Wicks
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Uranium mining in South Dakota, Wyoming, and Nebraska has polluted the air and water in our state, Charmaine White Face says, and she is determined to stop further mining from causing even more damage.

White Face, coordinator of the Defenders of the Black Hills, told the members in Rapid City on Saturday, Feb. 10, "This challenge is one we can't lose. This challenge is huge."

A Canadian company called Powertech Uranium Corporation received permission on Jan. 17 to drill 155 exploratory holes north of Edgemont, White Face told the group of about 25 people, including tribal members from Rosebud, Cheyenne River, Standing Rock, Crow Creek, Lower Brule, Pine Ridge, and Yankton Sioux.

The permit was granted by the South Dakota Board of Minerals and Environment in Pierre in January for testing for in situ leach (ISL) mining, which involves pumping a "poisonous solution" into the ground to extract uranium, White Face said.

The Defenders of the Black Hills group will be asking tribal governments to declare reservations as nuclear free zones, to keep air and water free from uranium and radiation pollution. White Face said the resolutions would give tribal governments power and set an example for the rest of the state to follow.

Harold One Feather of Mobridge told the group that Native American protests against mining can make a difference. Earlier in the week, he said, he flew to Washington, D.C. for a Nuclear Regulatory Commission workshop on new uranium licenses. He said about 100 people representing 40 mining companies were in attendance.

"I showed up, and all of a sudden the attitude changed," he said. "They're scared of what's going on in this room right now. There's a lot of power here."

White Face, who holds a bachelor of science degree from Black Hills State University in biology and physical science, said she contacted the U.S. Forest Service at Billings to get a map showing abandoned uranium mines, some from as far back as 40 years.

From that contact, she learned that there are 89 abandoned mines in Harding County alone, most in the Cave Hills and Slim Buttes areas, where uranium runs off tailings along with rain and snowmelt and flows into the Grand and Moreau Rivers.

White Face and others have gone to Cave Hills for the past three or four

Marcus dreams of a Sicangu art cooperative on the Rosebud

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Former RST council representative, Darrell Marcus, is a man of many talents and mediums. Many people do not know that he is a self-taught artists working with acrylics and oil on canvas.

He revealed the fact that his developing artistic skills began when he was in the U. S. Marines and it was a great way to combat the stresses of military life and occupy some of his time.

On a recent trip to one of the major cities in South Dakota, he was able to visit with one firm's sales representatives and he came away feeling remorse over the fact that his work was not taken seriously.

He said that he was not treated very well and, in fact, it was his second attempt to convince the art gallery to purchase his oil paintings. His paintings, by the way, are very reasonably priced.

In recent years, there has been an ongoing debate as to the level of sophistication and style that is inherent in Native art. It is common knowledge that those who consider themselves trained in fine arts tend to erect artificial barriers and set themselves apart from those who may just getting started in the art field.

Marcus says he was discriminated against and feels that those who may evaluate his work in such a casual way really do not want to understand where his inspiration may have arisen from, nor are they able to have a grasp of the merit of each painting. He said, "I was being judged before I had the fortitude to say that this was my impression on canvas."

It is an issue that Marcus is willing to debate and if he is kept out of some higher priced artificial ceiling, he believes he just might have a solution, at least for Sicangu Lakota artists. There was a Brule arts cooperative in the late 1970's on the Rosebud and Marcus thinks he knows what is needed to start another.

He said, "We need to create a website and set out bylaws and create an entity. When one sells something they could give back to the cooperative so others can buy materials. We don't have a Chamber of Commerce here for artists to show their stuff, but we can do it at TCHS or SFIS."

Marcus noted that there are a number of very good artists on the Rosebud that he has spoken with about a cooperative. He says such people as, Lloyd "Sonny" One Star, Darlene Black Spotted Horse, Guy Colombe, Shawn Chosa, Eleanor Black Bear and Denise One Star are some of the artists he has visited with and they are aware of the need for an entity through which their work might Teen dating violence, not acceptable!

By Javier Alegree
White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc
Public Relations Specialist

ROSEBUD - Abuse in a dating relationship can be confusing and frightening at any age. But for teenagers, who are just beginning to date and develop romantic relationships, this abuse is especially difficult.

Surveys show dating violence is not uncommon among teens. Statistics show that one in three high school students have been or will be involved in an abusive relationship. Forty percent of teenager's girls ages 14 to 17 say they know someone their age who has been hit or beaten by a boyfriend. One in five college females will experience some form of dating violence. Six out 10 rapes of young women occur in their own home or a friend's or relatives home, not in a dark alley.

In dating violence, one partner tries to maintain power and control over the other through abuse. Most victims are young women, who are also at greater risk for serious injury. When the abuse is physical or sexual, it can be easy to identify. Emotional abuse is much harder to recognize, but no less damaging.

Teen dating violence often is hidden because teenagers typically are inexperienced. Sometimes peers pressure them to act violently. Some of them want independence from parents or have "romantic" views of love. Teen dating violence is influenced by how teenagers look at themselves and others. Young man and young women may have a distorted view on love and relationships and that may be influenced by a number of reasons.

It is important for teenagers to learn how to identify the early warning signs of an abusive relationship, understand that they do have choices, and believe they are valued people who deserve to be treated with respect.

Help is available, if you are a teenager involved in an abusive relationship, you need to remember that no one deserves to be abused or threatened. Remember you cannot change your batterer, and in time the violence will get worse. You need to take care of yourself. You should think ahead about ways to be safe.

The White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc in partnership with local Schools, parents, teachers, and community organizations are working on reaching out to our youth and helping them identify dating violence and provide support for abuse victims. But teens themselves must also learn how to reach out and help friends who are victims of relationship abuse.

We hope this also will lead to healthier teen-dating relationships.

For additional information on resources and/or assistance, contact the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society crisis line at 605-856-2317. Help is always available.

American Indians have highest diabetes rate, experts say

By Mary Clare Jalonick
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - American Indians and Alaska Natives suffer from diabetes more than any ethnic group and the disease is increasingly affecting young Indians, government health experts told Congress on last Thursday.

``In some communities, the prevalence rate is as high as 60 percent among adults,'' Charles Grim, head of the Indian Health Service, told the Senate Indian Affairs Committee.

be sold.

His work on canvas to the untrained eye is very good as the themes which he arrives at get their inspiration from a variety of sources. He said, "It is a way to capture culture and tradition so that others may see. It feeds back to the youth so they do not forget about us. A woman cried when I showed her my painting about Wounded Knee."

There are a number of white artists who are very talented and often produce art work with a Lakota motif and Marcus says that their work is accepted by the mainstream as representative of the Lakota. Their work often commands "big bucks" and in Marcus' eyes there is something that is wrong with that picture.

He plans on having a one-man show at Digmann Hall in St. Francis in the future when he is able to create at least 50 paintings. He said, "That tells me that I have a lot of information about my heritage. It is endless."

Whether or not Darrell Marcus wants to be an entrepreneur or someone who simply opens doors for other inspired Sicangu Lakota, the time has arrived to create some venue for struggling artists. He says he has some fundamentals in utilizing the computer and internet, but not in using a digital camera. He said, "They asked me where I went to learn. I didn't need school to teach me that. We Lakota naturally have an artist's perspective."

Marcus often gets his inspiration from dreams or from his uncle, Archie Little, while one painting depicts traditional dancers and he said that Mike and Denise One Star provide the impetus for that particular work.

Diabetes increasing in Indian country

Grim said that agency statistics show that diabetes increased 128 percent among 15-19 year olds between 1990 and 2004.

The disease increased 77 percent among young people less than 15 years old during the same time frame, he said.

A program that has established diabetes prevention and treatment programs in Indian country is set to expire next year. Two North Dakota doctors testified at the hearing, urging the committee to renew it.

``We don't want history to repeat itself,'' said Dr. James Brosseau, director of the Altru Diabetes Center in Grand Forks, N.D. ``Funding increases for alcohol treatment resulted in decreases in mortality rates, but when the funding was discontinued, mortality rates increased again.''

Dr. Biron Baker, a primary care physician at Med Center One in Bismarck, N.D., asked for improvements within the Indian Health Service.

``Administrative ineptitude within the Indian Health Service is a glaring problem,'' he said.

Committee Chairman Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., said the panel will work to find resources to combat the disease.

``Diabetes is a serious problem that affects our American Indian communities more than any other group, and I'll work to make sure we find a way to address it,'' he said.

At least one member of the Senate said that more should be known about efforts to lessen the disease.

Wyoming Sen. Craig Thomas, the top Republican on the committee, said he would like statistics on the disease in Indian country and to know whether government efforts were helping to quell it.

``It's important to have statistics about the diabetes problem facing Indian Country, and to know that there are steps being taken to address the problem, but I am especially interested in knowing whether our efforts and investments are having a measurable impact,'' he said.

years, usually in April, to do a prayer ceremony, and the last time they were there they found that the road had washed out again, she said. The soil is soft there, she said, and there were deep gullies, some eight feet deep, worn down by runoff from rain or snow.

Runoff from South Dakota and Wyoming mines goes into the Grand, Moreau, Belle Fourche, Yellowstone, and Cheyenne Rivers, which ultimately travel through many Standing Rock and Cheyenne River reservation villages before draining into the Missouri River, White Face said.

And water from the Missouri River is used to water livestock and crops and provide drinking water for Eastern South Dakota, as well as the Mni Wiconi Water Project that serves Western South Dakota, she said.

Frank Sanchez of the Yankton Sioux tribe held up a bottle of water and said, "The next gold is right here" after rivers and aquifers are polluted. "This is top dollar."

Powertech plans to drill its 155 new holes 13 miles north of Edgemont, in the southwest corner of the Black Hills. In that area there already is an abandoned open pit uranium mine covering a square mile, White Face said. She told the group that the wind can pick up uranium dust and radon and carry it over Edgemont and Hot Springs and as far as Pine Ridge and Rosebud.

White Face is hoping for a "Cowboys and Indians coalition" of ranchers, farmers, and Native Americans to fight against further uranium mining in the state. She is particularly interested in involving stock growers and farmers, because radiation pollution is affecting their crops and livestock.

White Face said, "We don't want to alienate anyone in the state. It's not just the Indians who are going to die."

A meeting on uranium mining is set for Saturday, Feb. 24. People are asked to meet at 10 a.m. at the Mueller Center, 801 South Sixth Street, Hot Springs, and then caravan for a prayer gathering to Craven Canyon, where some uranium mining has already been done.

In late March, the American Indian Science and Engineering Society students at South Dakota School of Mines and Technology are holding a uranium summit. The date will be announced later.

Baker: A Native voice at Mount Rushmore
'Storytelling helps people to heal'

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

Gerard Baker

RAPID CITY - Gerard Baker, the first Native American superintendent at Mount Rushmore, said he envisions the monument as a place of healing and storytelling for all cultures, where visitors will learn about the natural resources and sacred places of the Black Hills.

Baker, a Hidatsa-Mandan raised on North Dakota's Fort Berthold Reservation, spoke before a gathering of Pennington County Democrats at their "Champagne and Chocolates" annual fundraiser at Prairie Edge in Rapid City on Friday, Feb. 9.

When he was first offered the post at Mount Rushmore, his first thought was, "This is a tough place when it comes to Native Americans." But he said he talked to elders, and they told him that he had an opportunity "to bring all sides of the story in."

At Mount Rushmore, he said, he watches visitors' faces as they look at the four U.S. Presidents, and "you can see the emotion in their faces." Particularly after Sept. 11, 2001, "You can see the toughest man with tears coming down," Baker said.

Other visitors, however, just see four faces, he said.

Even though the nation is proud of the four presidents - George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt - "each one had extremely negative Indian policies," Baker said. "I don't put those folks on a pedestal." Instead, he said we need to see them as human beings. "Let's think about the rest of the story."

Baker wants to introduce visitors to the natural world surrounding the carvings on the mountain and plans to do that, in part, with an eight-mile nature trail and a short film called "The Wild Side."

Visitors will be invited to "look at the background," he said - the plants and animals that inhabit the forests, the streams, the pine trees, the sacred Black Hills, "everything that's alive."

He wants to bring in tribes to help interpret the natural world around Mount Rushmore, to explain how they used plants and pines in everyday life and healing.

Programs in the past three years have been open to all cultures, and every Sunday's program features music. "That's the culture of America," Baker said.

He said he has talked to the elders of other countries such as Norway and Italy and learned that later immigrants were told the same thing as Native Americans: Forget about your language and your culture.

But people should never lose their language and culture, he said. "We need to be proud of who we are as cultural beings, human beings."

Baker said he wishes he could bring Lewis and Clark back to show them what has happened to the country, the dams blocking rivers and the development where it shouldn't be, and ask them, "Hey, guys, what do you think?"

"Two hundred years later … would they say 'Good' or 'What the hell did we do?'" Baker asked.

The stories he wants told at Mount Rushmore are hard to tell and listen to, Baker said, but storytelling helps people to heal, especially for the younger generation "to understand what happened so we can make a better tomorrow."

GWTC announces 2007 scholarship program

WALL - The Golden West Telecommunications Board of Directors recently approved the ninth year of funding scholarships for college-bound high school seniors. The Company's scholarship program currently makes $1,000 scholarships available at 44 high schools in addition to one "at-large" scholarship for students from its service area who are home-schooled or don't attend one of the qualifying schools.

Selection of the local scholarship recipient remains the responsibility of a committee overseen by each school's superintendent and/or principal whereas the at-large recipient will be selected by a committee of Golden West employees. All committees are responsible for selecting the winning applicant based on SAT or ACT scores, high school transcripts and scholarship award applications.

The selection committees will also take into consideration leadership in school, civic and other extracurricular activities, academic achievement, personal character and the applicant's motivation to serve and succeed. Students interested in applying for a Golden West scholarship can obtain an application by contacting their local high school. While the deadline for both applications is April 1, at-large applications have to be returned to Golden West and all other applications must be returned to the guidance counselor at their respective high school.

Legislative Reports

Relooking at nursing homes on reservations, meeting planned

By Rep. Jim Bradford
District 27-Bennett, Haakon, Jackson, and Shannon Counties

Week five of the 82nd Legislative Session has come and gone, and the pace sure picked up from previous weeks.

With Feb. 15 being cross-over day, all bills must leave their house of origin or they will die. That means committees will be busy and the daily session will be longer.

In the House Education committee, many bills have come forward that would increase the amount of money the state gives to schools.

Thus far, none have been voted on, but I have heard some good testimony and am optimistic that our children will get the additional money needed for education.

On Friday, Feb. 9, Keith Moore, Indian Education Coordinator at the Department of Education, spoke in favor of HB 1290 which would create an Office of Indian Education and an Indian Education Advisory Council.

The bill will also require new teachers certified after 1993 coming to South Dakota to take a course in South Dakota Indian Studies. The aim of the bill is to enhance Indian education and educate students across the state about Native American culture and history. Hopefully next week we will get the bill out of committee and through the entire House. Regarding the State Library issue discussed last week, the bills brought forth to fix the problem were killed, but I am still working with Rep. Van Norman to remedy the situation.

This week, I met with Governor Rounds about HB 1223, the bill I sponsored that would have reauthorized the construction of nursing facilities on American Indian reservations.

It was decided that a comprehensive study that is going to be conducted in conjunction with the Department of Social Services will examine the "long term care needs" on South Dakota's reservations.

There are also plans for at least one meeting in Pine Ridge to gather input from citizens.

On Feb. 13, HB 1227 will have a hearing in the House Local Government committee. HB 1227 is the bill I sponsored that will prohibit the issuance of alcohol licenses within four miles of Bear Butte State Park, unless the store is within the boundaries of a town.

As for the minimum wage bills, the only remaining bill is that of the governor.

SB 207 passed out of committee and has yet to be brought to the floor. We should see action on the bill this week.

My bill that sought to modify the agreements between the state and tribal governments regarding taxes, HB 1292, was killed in committee.

There was good testimony, so I'm hopeful of making revisions in the future.

As always, I welcome all questions and comments.

Change in state library could cause problems for public

By Larry Lucas
District 26A Representative

The cost of health care continues to be an important issue for legislators to tackle. Health insurance premiums continue to increase with health care costs contributing to suppressing real wages.

The number of uninsured and underinsured continues to increase. South Dakota businesses are also at a competitive disadvantage when they spend a large portion of employee compensation on health care premiums. One new idea is to have the State offer health care insurance for all individuals and have individuals purchase the plan of their choice with monetary support from businesses and the government based on income level. It is unclear at this point what direction this idea will take. It does however highlight the seriousness of the health-care climate as well as show the dedication of this state's Legislature and state agencies' commitment to being part of the health care reform solution. Such reform will likely take a couple of years to implement and may have to be studied more before we embark in this direction.

The House has approved a measure that will allow state prison officials to choose the best available mixture of drugs for lethal injections. The bill was proposed after the execution of convicted murderer Elijah Page was postponed last summer. Rounds stayed the execution because state law calls for the use of two drugs, while the method now commonly accepted for lethal injections calls for three drugs. Page now is scheduled to be executed in July.

House Bill 1140 will lower the general fund levies of a school district by reducing local effort by nine million dollars. Nine million dollars from the tax on cigarettes and other tobacco products will then be deposited into the property tax reduction fund. This nine million will be on top of the three percent increase to State-aid-to-education that is currently in law.

A couple of weeks ago, the Department of Education testified on a bill and an issue was raised regarding the State Library. The Library has been looking at changing its mission effective Jan. 1 of this year, and they did just that.

Per its new mission, the Library is no longer checking out books to the general public. A significant portion of their normal book collection is to be dispersed to local libraries around the state and the Library is to take on a governmental service and training role. As a result, Rep. Van Norman brought forth a bill that would require the Library to continue checking out books to the public. The reason for his bill was the lack of public libraries in both his district and in rural areas of the state. Citizens in those parts of South Dakota currently rely on the State Library for services and the change in mission will cause a lot of problems. In the testimony on Van Norman's bill, the Department of Education was questioned as to who authorized the mission change and the enabling legislation for the Library was cited. Of note, a primary responsibility of the Library, is to "Promote adequate library service for all the people of the state." The Department of Education and the Library were defensive on the issue and Rep. Van Norman's bill, HB 1215, was eventually deferred to the 41st legislative day.

Legislative Bills and other business can be easily followed on the internet. The web site for the Legislative Research Council is: http://legis.state.sd.us/sessions/2007/index.aspx.

Eldon Marshall named to All Century team

WHITE RIVER - Black Hills State University Men's Basketball celebrated their 100th year of basketball with a selection of an ALL-CENTURY Team.

White River's Eldon Marshall, athletic director and coach was selected to this all-century team at a banquet held at the BHSU campus on Saturday, Feb. 3. One player per year was selected and each recipient received an engraved basketball, and they were also treated to a Alumni Social and tickets to all games that weekend.

While at BHSU, Eldon was an All Conference selection '92-93, was the starting point guard for the '92-93 team that has the record for the most wins in a season (24), and that same team also was the first team to win a Conference Championship since 1946-47!

Marshall, Sicangu Lakota, has been involved with basketball since he can remember. After college Eldon played for Kelly's Sports Bar, an Amateur team, who went on to win the South Dakota State Amateur Tourney "A" title in 1997 and 2001. Eldon was named MVP of South Dakota State Amateur "A" Tourney in 2001 and currently is 2nd on the State Amateur for three pointers! He also traveled to many independent basketball tourneys in and out of state, winning numerous championships and individual awards.

Marshall still plays, and gets on the court most often at practice with his basketball team. He still manages to hit a few independent tourneys, but with coaching and a family his travels have slowed down.

Eldon resides in White River with his wife Marc and their sons.

Sen. Tim Johnson working from Washington hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Tim Johnson is reading news clippings and starting to do some office work from the hospital, almost two months after suffering a life-threatening brain hemorrhage. "At this point, he has requested more contact with office and is looking for updates from staff," his office said in a statement last Friday.

Spokeswoman Julianne Fisher said the South Dakota Democrat is starting slowly.

"We do not anticipate him back (in the Senate) for several weeks," Fisher said. "We are bringing work to him rather than him coming to us. His first priority still is rehabilitation."

Johnson has been undergoing physical, occupational and speech therapy since he was transferred to rehabilitation from intensive care at George Washington University Hospital last month. He recently began to read and speak in full sentences, according to statements from his doctors.

Part of Johnson's therapy has been to deal with weakness on his right side. Doctors have said Johnson showed that weakness when he arrived at the hospital Dec. 13.

He was rushed to the hospital after becoming disoriented during a phone call with reporters and underwent emergency surgery hours later. He was diagnosed with arteriovenous malformation, a condition that causes arteries and veins to grow abnormally large, become tangled and sometimes burst.

Johnson was sedated and on a ventilator for several weeks, due to fluid that developed in his lungs as a result of the initial hemorrhage. He was upgraded from critical to fair condition on Jan. 9.

The senator is making decisions about his health care and expressing opinions on his daily activities, the hospital's chief of rehabilitation, Dr. Philip Marion, said in a statement released by Johnson's office.

"He continues to initiate more conversations and questions," Marion said. "His therapy now includes computer exercises and problem-solving activities."

Fisher said recovery is still expected to take some time, saying, "This is not going to be full speed yet."

Johnson's wife, Barbara, said the family is impressed with his progress: "Even though there is a long road ahead to complete recovery, we feel that we have gotten 'our Tim' back."

Lawsuits on voting rights trial begins near Wind River nation

CASPER, WYO. (AP) - A federal judge began hearing testimony last week in a lawsuit challenging Fremont County's system of at-large voting as being unfair to American Indians.

The lawsuit brought by county residents Patricia Bergie, Pete Calhoun, Gary Collins, James E. Large and Emma Lucille McAdams - all members of either the Eastern Shoshone or Northern Arapaho tribes - contends the countywide method of electing county commissioners violates the voting rights of residents of the Wind River Reservation.

The at-large method of electing the Board of County Commissioners of Fremont County was enacted or is being maintained with the discriminatory purpose of diluting the voting strength of Native Americans in violation of plaintiffs' rights guaranteed by Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act ... and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments," according to the complaint filed by attorneys Andrew Baldwin and Berthenia Crocker of Lander.

The American Civil Liberties Union is supporting the lawsuit.

Attorneys for the county have responded that the dispute centers not on race, as required by the Voting Rights Act, but on myriad issues related to the history of American Indians.

``What may appear to be a racial dispute is instead a political, economic, jurisdictional or legal dispute generated by the political structure of tribes and the reservation system,'' wrote J. Scott Detamore of the Denver-based Mountain States Legal Foundation, one of the attorneys for the county, in his trial brief.

The lawsuit seeks to prohibit Fremont County commissioners from using the at-large method, and to not block an election for a redistricting plan for single-member districts, according to the complaint.

If the commissioners don't conduct timely elections for a redistricting plan, the plaintiffs want the court to implement a redistricting plan and schedule the elections so the county complies with the Voting Rights Act of 1965, according to the complaint.

The trial is scheduled to run two weeks.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

How are you doing? I hope your new year is going good for you. Just like many others, I am a devoted reader.

And just like the others, I too am a little curious of what's going to happen in my future. First of all, my mother has seen you awhile back, and you told her I would be making a trip towards the south.

Do you know when and with who? Will I ever find someone for me?

I like this guy, who is younger than me and it is already in a relationship, should I leave him alone?

Do you have advice on how I can handle my children's behavior? I mean don't get me wrong, I think I love them but I don't want to take care of them. I am trying hard not to leave like I have in the past and right now the feelings that are going through my head aren't right.

I don't want to hurt my kids any more then I have already. I want them to be happy, but I also don't want to take care of them.

Please Anna, don't hate me like others do alread, but I need some advice.

I can go on and on about his, but I am sure you got the picture. I don't know if this is right but in my head, I think of things like if I only had a man around to take care of us. I even tried it that way, I got married to him but I wasn't happy,

I miss my son's father too much. Do I do the wrong thing and base the relationship on how good the sex is?

Will I ever get back together with my son's dad?

Well, I'm sure I made your head hurt, mine does.God bless and you have a good day.

Feeling lonely

Dear Feeling Lonely:

I do understand, and sometimes the best solution for children that have a parent that is unable to relate and care in a healthy way is for the children to stay with someone else that can be a better parent.

While your children are staying with a grand-parent you would do well to seek counseling to help you determine who you are, how far you can go, and if you can be a good parent.

Sometimes the best and most generous loving parenting is to let the children be where they will parented well.

Not everyone is geared for parenting - but since almost everyone is geared towards child bearing it seems that those who don't feel they can handle and don't want to handle parenting should use the best birth control possible.

Not everyone is a good parent; some people yell and carry on, are unfair, raise their children in unhealthy environments around the influence of people that are absorbed by substance abuse, don't have the money or energy to feed or clothe the children; don't have the patience to listen to children; and don't want to spend their time absorbed by them - and yet these people are considered good parents because they keep their children in their households.

It is a better parenting skill to allow them to live in a peaceful environment, raised by loving people than to subject them to out of balance, crazy adult behaviors.

Your children, however, influenced by their own hearts, and by societal and cultural standards will feel left out, unworthy, and under-loved if they are not assured that you love them very much even if they don't live with you.

You must assume adult responsibility for directing your relationship with your children with assurances of love and respect - even if they are housed elsewhere.

The most alarming thing that I read in your letter is that you can't tell the difference between love and sex.

You also have trouble with "loving" your children.

Love is not external and based on physical sensation within the body. Love is an attraction and combination of deep caring from the heart.

It is felt - totally inside - and not based on orgasms. You need some real help girl - to take down the walls about love, learning to accept love, and being loving without being promiscuous.

Sex and love have a working relationship, but they are not at all the same thing. Men can have sex with a plastic doll, but that does not mean they want to marry it or spend the rest of their lives shared with the plastic, air-filled bubble-like pseudo human.

I could make the same analogy for a woman, but for the sake of good taste I will refrain from doing that.

Please, life is love: Love of being the body, love of nature, love of each other, love of the visual, physical, emotional, spiritual, love of the energy, love of the mind, the love of action, creating, Love of the adventure of life and love of the idea.

God is love. Find it, feel it, be it. You need counseling.

Dear Anna,

What's it like to be in true love?

Needing the truth

Dear Needing the truth:

Funny how the letters seem to run in the same vein.

Being loving is the first step to being in "true" love. "Tue love between life partners is a decision to join together in one life for the highest and best good of each other. True love is a conscious decision by each person to be "with" each other in accordance with honor and respect, for the highest good of all. In a loving relationship you find little jealousy because there is faith and trust that no deliberate harm would ever be done to the other.

It seems to me that each person involved in a relationship of true love wants the best for the other self - the other half (so to speak). True love is a pledge within self to walk with another person, to never betray another person, to protect that person, and to be loving in all ways to that person throughout time.

It starts as just the thought of love and generates itself into a covenant with God.

Love is amazing; it is the adhesion of all good actions and the conqueror of all things. It is always true; because love in any form is God.

Being in love however, is a whole other ball-game. My best advice is to:

1. Accept it,
2. Feel it,
3. Act like it,
4. Enjoy it and
5. Love it. The biggest question always seems to be of the other person - do they really love you? Knowing the answer is the beginning of a true love relationship.

To simplify then, faith that you are well-loved is the best reflection of "true love."

Dear Anna:

My father in law has three children by a former wife. One of his children is my half-sister (we have the same mother). In other words, my husbands father was also with my mother.

Can you see the problem?

We can't get the families together at any body's house without somebody getting mad and it always ends up in a fight.

I just want everybody to get along. What do you see? Can I help them to get along?

Wants my family to love each other

Dear Wants them to get along:

I read this letter to my son. He said what I will say. No. Pick a Side.

In the event that everybody has to be in the same room together at the same time, I suggest that everyone shut up and get through it. I see that can happen - in about the year 2020.

Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I have read your current and available back log articles and I just want to say that you are one of the most insightful, compassionate, honest, caring and loving spirits that I have come across in my 54 years.

You give people in pain hope along with solid advice instead of just fluffing off their problems with dry inane comments like most advice columnists or even friends.

I have lived a long time and only wish I had a contact like you during all the those years, perhaps then I would have made better decisions and my life would not be so tumultuous now with no light in sight at this time.

You have a lot of young people writing you and this is a very important time of their life when good advice and help can shape their thought processes for the rest of their lives.

You are a gifted soul and I am glad that I was directed to you by the powers that be so I do know there are people like you out there.

Blessings to you and yours.

In memory of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Runsabove Sr.

Mom and dad, you've been gone for 23 years. The day you left, Feb. 9, 1984, we thought we would see you again in a few days. We were wrong. We didn't realize that it would be your last journey. On a lonely road, you lost your lives to a big rig. Mom, you left us first instantly. Dad, you hung on long enough to tell us you loved us and your parting message was for us to take care of your grandchildren. You knew mom was gone and had no desire to live, so at last, you left too. Our hearts were never the same. Though the years be long, memories of you will never fade, just like the roses in heaven.

Your Runsabove children, Georgia, Billy, Webby, Maggie, Leroy and Della.

In loving memory of Olive Makes Good, "my mom"

Nov. 19, 1917 - Dec.15, 2007

When tomorrow starts without me and I am not there to see if the sun should rise and find your eyes all filled with tears for me. I wish so much you would not cry please try to understand that an angel come and called my name and took me by the hand, and said my place was ready in heaven far above and that I'd have to leave behind all those I truly love. So when tomorrow starts without me don't think we are far apart for every time you think of me I am right her in your heart.

PeeWee Fast Wolf and Stuart Makes Good

In memory of Douglas Francis Two Elk

Sept. 2, 1945 to Feb. 3, 2007

As life comes to a sudden stop, wondering why there were no good byes, hoping time could reverse the universe giving second chances in life…starting over were life ended.

Waking up alive and happy and not feeling sad without any good-bys, cared and deeply loved by family, relatives and friends, who respected him a lot.

A veteran that everybody liked, living his life to the fullest, peaceful and happy, as tunkshila took him away from us; life came to a sudden stop leaving unexpectedly without good-by.

"Reading half of an unfinished letter," "staring at his painted picture half finished," empty promises and unanswered questions, knowing he's gone but thinking he's still around.

As time stopped, tunkshila came for him, when the time came guiding him towards the heavenly light, being at peace with tunkshila.

He will be deeply loved and missed by his family, friends, relatives. Amen from Inez, Claude, Lance, Elton, Sally, LaVonne, Jerome, Tuki, Archie, Hehoka Numpa, Alan, all your nieces, nephews, grandchildren, and great grandchildren, thank you very much sincerely Inez White & family.

Mary Youngblood wins second Grammy award

Mary Youngblood just keeps getting better and her second Grammy winning record is certainly a joy to behold.

Stellar flute playing, signature song writing, creative arrangements, and unique instrumentation all combine to make this a superbrecording.

Mary Youngblood has always had the talent to stand out above the crowd, and with this honor she stakes her claim as the number one star of Native American music

Bending tradition, Two-time Grammy Award winner Mary Youngblood, Seminole and Aleut, is often touted as the first Native American woman to professionally record the Native American Flute (traditionally played only by men).

Mary's fifth and latest album "Dance with the Wind" won the 2007 Grammy Award for "Best Native American Music Album."

In an interview after receiving her second Grammy Award, Mary told the print media, "'Dance With the Wind' was created after the 2006 winter storms in Northern California. There was the wind, the rain, the whole kit and caboodle. I looked at the trees in my backyard, I have an affinity for trees, and thought it would be hard to be a tree right now. But it seemed as if the wind was making the trees dance. I thought maybe I can have a new attitude. I was going through stormy times and it was an analogy to see if I can bend and dance with the wind."

Mary's fourth album "Feed the Fire" was nominated for the 2005 Grammy Awards.

Mary Youngblood won her second Grammy on Sunday.

"Best Native American Music Album." Mary's original melodies and lyrics spanned a variety of musical styles and instruments - her wood flutes, piano, alto flute and sweet vocals.

Special guest appearances by Ian Anderson (of Jethro Tull), Bill Miller, and Joanne Shenandoah, all contributed to Mary's album full of energy, warmth and passion. The tribute song 'Feed the Fire' for her birth parents and dedicated to her birth mother will melt your heart.

Mary's third album 'Beneath the Raven Moon', won the 2003 Grammy Award for "Best Native American Music Album."

In addition to Mary's two Grammy Awards and three nominations, she was the first woman to win 'Flutist of the Year' in both 1999 and 2000. She also won 'Best Female Artist' in 2000 at the Native American Music

Mary started piano lessons at age six, violin at eight, classical flute and guitar at ten. As an adult, when Mary received her first wooden Native flute, she was driven to pursue the mastery of this instrument so tied to her own heritage.

Now years later with five unique and accomplished albums under her belt, Mary owns over 250 hand carved Native American Style flutes in her collection and uses a wide variety of them throughout every one of her albums.

Each of her flutes is masterfully crafted from different types of wood, bringing a unique sound and texture to each song.

When Mary performs, it takes only a moment to acknowledge the profound spirituality of the sacred Native American flute and its historical courtship and wooing attributes. Her haunting music is much more than a song ... it's liquid poetry, a prayer.

Mary Youngblood takes little credit for the intense emotions people feel when they listen to her music.

"I am only a vessel between Creator and this instrument. As a sculptor would tell you, the clay has a spirit of its own and decides what it will become; so it is with the flute. These songs came from those who walked before me."

Mary and her family currently reside in Northern California.

Nellie Two Bulls leaves a legacy

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PAYABYA - On Sunday at the Rapid City Regional Hospital, Nellie Two Bulls, an elder, a mother and grandmother, a wife, a singer and an educator gave up the fight and passed into the spirit world joining her husband of 54 years, Matt who had passed away several years earlier. Nellie was 81.

"Nellie and her husband Matt were an incredible treasure," said Bob Brave Heart, superintendent at Red Cloud School, "the Oglala Lakota Nation has lost such a valuable resource, an incredible number of groups and organizations looked to both Matt and Nellie for their knowledge of the drum and Lakota music. Matt and Nellie would come up with a song for every occasion - they were living legends here at Red Cloud during the 20 years they were at the school teaching Lakota language and music; all of us have lost a valuable resource. They took a wealth of information with them."

"Matt and Nellie were so very good at singing an appropriate song for someone at a moments notice," said the late Calvin Jumping Bull, a fellow educator and an original member of their drum group, Sons of the Oglalas on the release of their album, Lakota Olowan back in 1992, "each song is supposed to relay an important message, to praise, to honor and these songs and dances have the ability to heal or cure and each song was composed for a reason with the tone of the songs going back for generations with the lyrics changing to match the event or circumstances."

Nellie was born on Jan. 25, 1926 to George Whitehorse and Susan Blacksheep and was raised by her grandmother Bessie Red Breath Bear White Rabbit Whitehorse. She was the last and eldest descendant of Chief Man Afraid of his Horses.

Nellie is survived by her daughters Melvina Winters of Pine Ridge, Cheryl Between Lodges and Linda Two Bulls of Number Four community, adopted daughter Henny Whalen of Pine Ridge, Grandchildren raised by Matt and Nellie, Lynette Two Bulls of Lame Deer, Mont., George Cuny and Autumn Conroy of Number Four and a sister, Gladys Two Bulls of Number Four. She is also survived by a brother in law, Ed Two Bulls of Red Shirt, a sister in law, Marianne High Crane of Rapid City and 34 grandchildren, 70 great grandchildren, one great great grandchild and many adopted daughters, sons, grandchildren and extended family members.

Passage of child, family code rests with OST council

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

PINE RIDGE - For the past five years, many, many people have been involved in developing a child and family code to better serve the needs children who are processed through the Oglala Sioux Tribe court rooms and child protection programs.

This specific code deals with dependent and neglected children and doesn't address juvenile delinquency, which is a different area of law.

The tribal court system currently uses a code that is dated back to 1934, which was a general code used for most tribal courts.

In the early 1990s, concerned people that included not only community members but tribal officials and people who worked in the systems that made decisions regarding children began the process of developing a code to better fit the needs of the children..

Gloria Pourier Cournoyer, who then was a tribal judge and who now works with women at Cangleska, Inc., and Arlana Bettelyoun, a former OST tribal court juvenile officer and current OLCASA director,

Sicangu youth is third suicide in a month

ST. FRANCIS - Another Sicangu youth has committed suicide just when social service agencies and other mental health professionals are holding suicide task force meetings in order to assist survivors.

A 13-year old Sicangu female was found dead of hanging and it further deepened the dread and sadness of tribal members who are trying to make some sense of what it is that is plaguing the youth.

According to Rosebud Law Enforcement Services Chief, Charles Red Crow, officers responded at 4:30 p.m. on Saturday Feb. 17 to a location west of St. Francis where the incident occurred.

Three officers responded, while emergency medical personnel were already on scene.

Amid growing concerns about the recent deaths of three other young Sicangu tribal members this past month, the Rosebud reservation is scrambling to create awareness and strategies to combat the recent deaths.

The SGU Circle of Care program has taken on the responsibility of hosting task force meetings, while area schools are also examining their protocol to sensitize teachers and administrators about suicide.

A meeting was held on Jan. 21 at the SGU multipurpose building entitled "A Faith Based" gathering and the purpose presumably to address the growing concerns surrounding the youth.

In Mission, an older non-Indian gentleman committed suicide last Friday at 1 p.m. His funeral was held on Monday, Feb. 19.

A couple of weeks ago at the Rosebud Hospital Indian Health Service the Aberdeen Area Office offered mental health professionals a couple of opportunities to study the topic of suicide while reaching out and assisting survivors in their grief.

St. Francis Mission drops claim to $1.5 million against SFIS

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Three weeks ago, the Rosebud Sioux Tribal court heard the case of St. Francis Mission, Inc. vs. Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc/St. Francis Indian School.

At stake was the substantial bequest from the Dolores Cerro Trust in the amount of $1.5 million to be used for scholarships and capital improvements.

In a decision heard by Honorable Judge, B. J. Jones, the court wrote that SFIS is a tribally-chartered entity and thus, enjoys the same immunity from suit that the Rosebud Sioux tribe does. Sovereign immunity as it applies to tribes is interpreted under federal law and cannot be diminished by state or tribal law.

SFM originally claimed that a 1984 agreement between the two entities should prevail and that the SOH charter did not claim immunity in its corporate charter.

The courts disagreed and noted that nothing in the 1984 agreement claimed an unambiguous waiver of the school's sovereign immunity.

SFM also claimed that Mrs. Cerro as a donor was taken by SFIS and that it had a property right to its donor list.

The court noted that even though Mrs. Cerro gave donations to the plaintiff, SFM, it did not vest the plaintiff with exclusive rights to receive gifts from her.

The courts also ruled that SFM had "not demonstrated much likelihood of succeeding on the merits of its complaint." The court also ruled that despite the apparent inequity both parties are in need of financial resources and that both would likely invest their finances in children of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

On Wednesday, Feb. 21, St. Francis Indian School/Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc. issued a press release in which it noted, "The St. Francis Mission has advised the Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc. that it does not intend to proceed with its claim." Attorney Robert Doody stated on Feb. 16, that after consulting with his client the decision was made not to proceed to trial on this case.

Superintendent, Larry Parker, further noted that, "SOH, Inc./SFM administration extend their most sincere appreciation to Dolores Cerro and her family for this much needed financial support."

Passage of child code

were both instrumental in coordinating the efforts to rewrite the code. Both have background experience in child and family systems. Through the five years it took to develop the code, there has been many public meetings and forums for participation and many people involved in developing the code from the actual writing of it to elders in the community who gave input.

Cournoyer said the 1934 code has language that doesn't fit the cultural lifestyles of the current family systems. The existing code had Western European definitions that conflict with traditional Lakota definitions. She said many families believe the current practices deprive them of active participation in the process of resolving problems concerning their children.

The code was completed last year and was presented the Oglala Sioux Tribe's judiciary committee in July for review, where they recommended it go to the districts for review. On Jan. 31 of this year the tribe's judiciary passed the code and now it will go to the full council for approval.

Garfield Little Dog, chairman of the judiciary committee, said the code should go before the council in the April session and if the code is approved it usually takes a 30 day time frame to be implemented. The council members should have the code by now for review.

The new child and family code comes from the grassroots people, with elders and Lakota expertise involved and that he hopes it will be approved.

Cournoyer said the process of developing and writing the code was the work of many dedicated people and organizations. It was a code that wasn't working for the children and the families and it was evident that it would be a long work process to get the code developed.

Wakanyeja Iwicakiyapi Woope, which is a children's advocacy sub-committee called group 7 of Oglala Oyate Iwicakiyapi Okolakiciye (OOIO) This group focused on tribal juvenile code revision and to act as an advocacy for children and families. OOIO was created by community, service providers, and those who wanted to see better for our children and families. The main purpose was to strengthen and empower Wakanyeja (children), Tiwahe (families), and Tiospaye (extended family) through the renewal of the Lakota language and culture and through advocacy , commitment, and collaboration.

The multi disciplinary team of Delores Schrader, Vee Garnier, Kathy Wilson Ecoffey and Connie Pourier are just a few of the people involved in the process. There were public forums and also elder forums to get input from the grassroots level.

"We had a forum in September of 2001 at Porcupine, DPLS, law enforcement, children's programs and many youth. From there was a series of public awareness events to get public input. We went out to the people," Bettelyoun said.

From the public forum, she said they went to the elders with an elder's forum in 2002, who included Gerald One Feather, Ellen Moves Camp and the late Nellie Two Bulls and others. A cultural committee of resource people were developed that included the late John Around Him, Dr. Elgin Bad Wound, Richard Moves Camp, Marie Randall, Elaine Quiver and Pat Catches. Dr. Bad Wound was instrumental in taking the Lakota tiospaye concepts, looking at the families and their strengths and protocols as Lakota and adding those in to fit the laws.

Bettelyoun said, "it was a personal challenge and that came with learning and growth."

Brett Shelton, a graduate of Stanford University Law and a tribal member, wrote the legal portions of the code.

The work dovetailed and resources came available to keep the task of developing the code and analyzing the information gathered and incorporating into a legal working code.

There were lots of prayer and personal journeys that the key players went through in developing the code Cournoyer said.

"As Lakota we had information that represented a circle and it was like trying to fit that circle into a square of the current law. We were told by our elders who were working with us to take the western European law and fit what you can into who we are without compromising who we are as Lakota. Think Lakota and when we did things began to flow." Cournoyer said.

"It is a decolonizing piece of work," she said. "The laws are going to reflect our people's value system. The reason any society has laws is to maintain peace in that society and these laws reflect the value system of that society. "

"In the back of my mind through those years I worked as a Judge I kept thinking that the current code of 1934 didn't come from us, it came from another people who had different values and a different way of life. That code represented oppression and caused confusion in our families facing legal issues," she said.

"We already had a system in place based on tiospaye, so this 1934 code hurt us in the way we dealt with our children," she said.

"This proposed code will go hand in hand with the developing integrated child welfare system on Pine Ridge," she added.

By November of 2005, the group had three parts, the foundation, policy and procedure part and the foster care part and also the input from the grassroots level.

Pat Sekaquaptewa, Hopi and cultural law expert, who was involved in writing many codes was consulted and she took the three parts and her and Shelton came up with one document with many conference calls with the working team.

Bettelyoun emphasized there is a great number of children and families who are affected by the current code in the court systems. In 1999, in the tribe's court system, there were 785 open cases of abuse and neglect.

If approved by council and the new code goes into effect, there will need to be training provided to all service providers as there is a section on compliance. The code will promote empowerment to families, using our value system looking at the families before a child can be taken away. For example to do a search for placement, that is not in law now for the tribe. The code will give grandparents and relatives more rights in a child's placement.

This code will hold programs accountable for the safety of our children.

It will hold perpetrators accountable to child victims.

"What better gift can we give our children who are dependant and neglected and their parents who are hurting and struggling and for our future generations to come. This is the whole intent of this code. It is our hope that it will help them. This proposed code is a small tribute to some of our ancestors who went through boarding school trauma, who went underground with some of our ways because those ways were outlawed, and those who suffered and died so our ways would not be lost. All the efforts that were made to assimilate us didn't work because look at what we are doing. This code is just beginning and opens the door a bit wider to help us once again become a strong nation. If council passes this, it's time to celebrate! " said Cournoyer.

Executive Summary
Wakanyeja na Tiwahe ta Woope

Section 401 lays the groundwork for the remainder of the Code, and sets out the general guiding principles. This code is generally designed to replace Chapter 4 of the current Tribal Law and Order Code.

Section 401.2 repeals this portion of the current code, and other sections of the current code which are covered more appropriately within this new Code. The preamble section places this code within the historical context of our Reservation.

Section 401.5 explicitly requires that, in decisions involving children, seven traditional Lakota values or laws shall govern.

Section 402 is the Definitions section. Traditional mainstream legal definitions as may be necessary are provided in Section 402.3. A major function of this code is the bringing of Lakota concepts to the legal system, and Sections 402.1 and 2 are where Lakota definitions and conceptions are brought in.

Section 403. Lakota children, families, and extended families traditionally have certain rights. This Section describes these rights, and requires that they be considered in decisions impacting the relationships between children and their families.

Section 404. Re-establishes the children and family court, and sets out jurisdiction.

Section 405. Sets out a description of traditional resolution systems for child and family issues, and declares that that is the preferred way for such issues to be worked out.

Section 406. Sets out the procedures for reporting and dealing with emergency cases of children needing care. Who may report, who must report are defined, as well as requirements for investigations of reported abuse and neglect. An innovative incorporation of Lakol wicoh'an here is the requirement that tiyospaye be notified when children are in jeopardy. The section also provides procedures for protection of unborn children and expectant mothers.

Section 407 expresses a preference for removing an abusive parent from a household rather than a child who lives in the household.

Section 408 sets out the procedure to be followed for general, non-emergency cases where children are in need of care. The system set up is designed to fill in when the traditional tiyospaye system isn't able to effectively address a child's needs.

Section 409 contains provisions required for the Tribe to continue to receive federal funding for child protective services. One frequently misunderstood issue about this section is that it incorporates state definitions of crimes. This is not any sort of waiver of sovereignty by the Tribe, or consent to any sort of jurisdiction by the State. Rather, the States definitions are incorporated by reference because they are clear, whereas federal definitions are very ambiguous and problematic. By using the State definitions, the Tribe is acting as a sovereign nation deciding to adopt the best alternative available to it to do what it wants. The tribe remains free to create its own definitions, consistent with the federal funding requirements, but at this time the best-crafted definitions will look almost exactly like the State ones adopted at this time.

Section 410 sets procedures for transfer of jurisdiction for Indian Child Welfare Act purposes.

Section 411 sets the conditions under which the Tribal Courts will afford full faith and credit to the decisions for other courts involving our children.

Section 412 sets up an advisory committee to be a resource to help actors in the system learn and understand Lakota ways in this area, when such learning or expertise is needed.

Part B Section 413-415 Establishes a tribal foster care program, including licensing and plans.

Part C Section 416 requires compliance with this code to be implemented within 120 days or face penalties. Penalties are flexible, up to $1000 per day.

A traditional dancer, Matthew was encouraged by Max Blacksmith and Harry Jumping Bull to start singing in the late 1950s. Matt joined the Oglala Juniors; Nellie started a short time later and both of them sang at Jumping Bull Hall on the weekends and at the annual New Year's celebration before venturing forth to the bigger gatherings like Rosebud, Eagle Butte, Portland and Montana.

Matt and Nellie then formed Sons of the Oglalas with Amos Bad Heart Bull, Calvin Jumping Bull, Leroy Brings Plenty, Max Blacksmith and Harry Jumping Bull. After Calvin left, Matt trained their three sons for the group.

For 26 years, the Two Bulls sang, danced and performed at the Cheyenne Frontier Days. They sang for the movie "Tatanka: Legends of the Sioux" and Nellie and her daughter, Cheryl, sang for the movie "Dances with Wolves."

"Matthew composes most of our songs but when it comes to honoring songs, it is up to me," said Nellie in 1991, "my mother, Bessie Red Breath Bear was a solo singer and I learned most of my songs from her and now I've taken her place." Today, it seems that different drum groups get upset when other people sing their songs but Matt and I have always felt honored when another group chose to sing one of our songs, Nellie added.

"After working with Nellie over the years, I always felt that she had more heart than anyone else I knew," said Milt Lee, a music and video producer, "I remember her talking about Wounded Knee, how sad it made her to even think about what happened there - she was so sweet and her love for Matt, they were like one person."

"Education is the only thing that gives you the courage today to succeed," said Nellie after composing the Education Song back in 1978, a song used for graduation ceremonies from headstart and kindergarten to 12th grade and college and university.

Student speaks out about CHS incident

By Anna Bee
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - On Thursday, Feb. 15, a 17 year old student at Central High School was arrested and taken to the Rapid City Juvenile Detention Center after an altercation at the school.

According to the news report on KOTA television two adult staff members went to Rapid City Regional Hospital for attention after the altercation. The news report cited that the minor male was on probation and implied that the minor involved was guilty of threatening behavior and had caused the altercation.

A teacher, who wishes to remain anonymous because, "I am concerned with retribution," stated that a memo was given out on Friday, Feb. 16, to the staff of Central High School by the administration stating that situation was under control and being handled. According to the teacher the memo was issued as, "an attempt at damage control."

Mandy Standing Bear, a junior at Central High School, along with her mother wanted to tell the media, what Mandy had seen of the incident. Standing Bear said she was one of about 20 eye witnesses present during the incident. She said she took the time to get down 20 names and phone numbers of witnesses who agreed with what she observed, and at that time agreed, if the need should arise, to testify to the police or to the court system.

Standing Bear further stated that after the incident she asked if the boy's mother was being called, as she felt there was great need to inform the boy's mother. Standing Bear is an aunt of the minor involved and wanted to make sure that his mother came to the school to investigate the incident and provide support for her son. She said at first, the school would not allow Standing Bear to call the boy's mother; and in fact did not call the boy's mother either.

She said when the mother was called, "They wouldn't let her see him for 20 minutes," said Standing Bear. "They just closed the door in her face."

Standing Bear reported, "He (the minor student) came into the hallway, and this staff member told him to "pull up your pants." This staff member and my nephew had sort of a thing going," stated Standing Bear, "there is a school policy about those baggy pants the boys wear, and everyday he reminded the boys to pull up their pants. It was kind of a joke-serious approach that seemed to work, and the boys usually pulled up their pants. This time, though, I didn't hear what my nephew said back, but he took a few steps towards the double doors with his back to him, when out of the blue, the dean of students, rushed him (the minor) from the back against the swinging door. My nephew swung back," said Standing Bear, "and two more adult staff members dog piled him."

She said they hurt him and she didn't see any reason for them to do that. "Then they pushed him through the doors and took him into the office and closed the door."

"I went to my counselor, because I was upset and didn't know what to do," Standing Bear said, "she told me she heard about it but didn't want to be involved."

Further investigation into the reasons behind the probation the minor was placed on turns out to be truancy related.

The minor's mother, who has asked that her name be withheld for the protection of her son due to possible legal action, and to protect her son from further harm said, "We are investigating filing a legal complaint and criminal charges. I will not let him return to Central High School as I am afraid of retribution against him. This isn't the first incident of this type at Central," said the boy's mother, "I understand that a committee of citizens is forming and trying to utilize the Mother Butler Center for a meeting of parents and community members who have experienced racial profiling and unfair treatment. We should be meeting later this week." A meeting was to be held Wednesday, Feb. 21 at the Mother Butler Center.

The minor student is still being held at JDC in Rapid City.

The Superintendent's office of the Rapid City School District failed to return calls and did not respond to a phone messages concerning the incident.

Legislative Reports

Bear Butte issue deferred, state library a concern

By Rep. Jim Bradford
District 27- Bennett, Haakon, Jackson, and Shannon Counties

With just twelve legislative days to go, the 82nd Legislative Session is rapidly coming to a close. Session was cancelled on Friday, Feb. 16, due to an impending storm, so the session will be extended by an additional day before veto-day.

Tuesday, Feb. 20, then, is the day all bills must leave their house of origin. The remaining days of the session will be spent examining senate bills and hashing out differences between approved bills in conference committees.

As for my work, on Feb. 13, HB 1227 had a hearing in the House Local Government committee. HB 1227 would have prohibited the issuance of alcohol licenses within four miles of Bear Butte State Park, unless the store is within the boundaries of a town. Unfortunately, the committee deferred the legislation to the 41st day by a vote of 11-2.

As has been mentioned previously, Representative Van Norman and I have been looking into the issue of the elimination of services to the public at the State Library. Dr. Eric Abrahamson, chair of the State Library Board, came to our caucus meeting to discuss the new mission of the library and to answer any questions. While I appreciated Dr. Abrahamson's effort, I still feel it is a major mistake and I am looking for solutions to the problem.

Included in other legislation that passed the House was HB 1293, the abortion bill. The bill passed with a vote of 45-25. It does include exceptions for rape, incest, and the health of the mother, but many of the provisions in the bill including DNA testing to determine if the unborn child is a product of incest, are unreasonable and it is for this reason I voted against the bill. This is a very serious issue and no one takes it lightly. The bill will go before the Senate State Affairs committee this week. The education bills that are still alive will be acted upon soon and everyone is hopeful that more money will make its way to educating our students. With the remaining time here in Pierre, this is going to be a top priority.

As always, I welcome all questions and comments. Until next time.

Excellent testimony given on HB 1290 providing for Indian students

By Larry Lucas
District 26A Representative

Most of you are probably already aware that a bill that will outlaw abortions as a form of birth control passed out of the House this past week by a vote of 45 to 25. The legislation this year will allow exceptions for rape, incest, and the life of the mother. If the Bill passes the Senate it will automatically remain idle until a vote of the people in the 2008 General Election.

It is, however, expected that the abortion Bill will be difficult to pass in the Senate. While it is a very contentious issue, having another state-wide vote on this issue with the exceptions will likely happen either by legislative direction or through an initiated ballot process.

Two bills dealing with the practice of nurse midwifes were also debated in the House last week.

One Bill was defeated in committee and the other failed on the House Floor. HB 1207 would allow for lay midwifes to perform home delivery of babies. There were numerous questions on this issue such as scope of practice in relation to the level of midwife training and who would assume liability for any birth complications. HB 1267 will allow for certified nurse mid-wives to develop independent practices.

Certified nurse mid-wives have education and training in relation to physician assistant and nurse-practioners. The issue with this Bill was, if certified mid-wives should have a practice agreement under a physician similar to what physician assistants and nurse practitioners do.

A Bill that would have let all 10-year-olds hunt also failed to pass as it only received 20 out of a needed 36 votes. Hunters must now be at least 12 unless they turn 11 between September 1 and December 31. Most legislators felt that putting high powered rifles in the hands of 10-year-olds would not be a good idea safety wise.

Excellent testimony was given on HB 1290 which provides for an Office of Indian Education and an Indian Education Advisory Council and to establish certain provisions to enhance Indian education in the state. Representative Jim Bradford amended the Bill to outline the composition of the advisory counsel to addresses to ensure that all tribes are represented fairly. HB 1290 passed out of Education Committee without any dissenting votes.

Education funding was at the forefront of debate in both the House and Senate Education Committees. As has been outlined in the 2005 Alliance Adequacy Study, the state has short funded education by $103 million. The Senate passed out their funding Bill that would give an additional 10 million on top of the 3% state-aid increase.

The Senate's Bill would require that this additional $10 million would be targeted for teacher salaries.

Rosebud Casino has a good showing in January

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Casino report was delivered by Alma Valandra, acting general manager for the month of January. In contrast to the last several months the casino had a good showing on the profit side.

The net income after expenses was $349,357.62 despite the fact that six of the casino's departments did not make their forecasted budget. Best of all, the payment to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe amounted to $229,965.18 and it comes at a time when tribal members are looking to the tribe for energy assistance. December's payment to RST was especially disappointing at $62, 223.21 and it has created some discussion as to what kinds of strategies would serve to increase profits.

In other matters, there apparently is a list of candidates for the position of general manager and it remains to be seen when the council will act to appoint a new GM. The council also voted for ten different candidates for the gaming commission and, in the end, Rose Cordier and Harold James Fuller were seated. The other members of the commission are Fremont Fallis, Marcella Prue with one vacancy existing.

Finally, the RST council briefly discussed two resolutions originally passed in the late 1990s that sought to designate the casino complex as a chartered entity with an accompanying board of directors. The matter was referred to counsel for RST for an opinion as to what the next course of action should be regarding the resolutions.

Oglala Lakota commends decision to retire mascot

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The Oglala Sioux Tribe has commended a decision by the University of Illinois to soon retire its 81-year-old American Indian mascot, Chief Illiniwek.

The NCAA in 2005 deemed the buckskin-clad mascot an offensive use of American Indian imagery and barred the university from hosting postseason events.

American Indian groups and others complained for years that the mascot, used since 1926, is demeaning. Supporters of the mascot say it honors the contributions of American Indians to Illinois.

The university received a letter from the NCAA dated Thursday that said the school no longer will be banned from hosting postseason events if it ends use of the mascot and related Native American imagery.

In January, the Oglala Sioux Tribe's executive committee declared ``the antics of persons playing 'Chief Illiniwek' perpetuates a degrading racial stereotype that reflects negatively on all American Indian people.''

The executive committee also called on the university to return Lakota buckskin regalia it received from Frank Fools Crow, an Oglala Sioux elder, in 1982 and worn by students portraying Chief Illiniwek since.

``We want to thank them for making that decision (to drop the mascot),'' Eileen Janis said. ``We will get a letter out to them saying that. We will also tell them we still want the regalia back.''

Janis is a former Oglala Sioux Tribe vice president and now is administrative assistant to OST President John Yellow Bird Steele. She brought the UI mascot issue to the executive committee early this year.

The university said it purchased the buckskins and an accompanying headdress and other items from Fools Crow. But Mel Lone Hill, Fools Crow's grandson, says the regalia is actually his, and his grandfather borrowed it and gave it to the university for what he thought would be culturally accurate portrayals of Lakota traditions.

Lone Hill says Fools Crow was dismayed to learn the items were used by an athletic mascot.

``I want to thank them for finally seeing the light,'' Lone Hill said, and he said if the school returns the regalia, ``I will put it away.''

Sen. Johnson moved to rehab center

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two months after his brain hemorrhage, Sen. Tim Johnson has left a Washington hospital and entered a private rehabilitation facility, his office said Tuesday.

A spokeswoman refused to say whether the senator remained in Washington or was moved to a facility in South Dakota, citing family concerns about media scrutiny. "They just want him to focus on getting better and not worried about outside cameras snapping away," said spokeswoman Julianne Fisher.

The Democrat's Dec. 13 brain hemorrhage and subsequent surgery highlighted his party's tenuous one-seat advantage in the Senate.

Johnson was rushed to George Washington University Hospital after becoming disoriented during a phone call with reporters and underwent emergency surgery hours later. He was diagnosed with arteriovenous malformation, a condition that causes arteries and veins to grow abnormally large, become tangled and sometimes burst.

He was sedated and on a ventilator for several weeks due to fluid that developed in his lungs as a result of the initial hemorrhage. He was upgraded from critical to fair condition on Jan. 9.

Johnson will continue undergoing physical, occupational and speech therapy at the private facility. Dr. Philip Marion, the hospital's chief of rehabilitation, said in a statement released by Johnson's office that the senator has made "great progress" and a final test showed no evidence the tangled arteries that triggered the senator's hemorrhage remain.

Part of Johnson's therapy has been to deal with weakness on his right side. Johnson's office has said his recovery is expected to take several months, though he has been doing some work from his bed.

Johnson is up for re-election in 2008 and could face a tough race if he runs again in Republican South Dakota.

The pen is mightier than the sword

The "blog" is a fascinating phenomenon created by the wonders of technology. It allows people the opportunity to comment immediately after articles are posted on the Internet on both personal websites and online publications.

Often we see soldiers in Iraq documenting their combat experience through such a medium. Other individuals who create their own space on the net or create their own website often invite such comment.

The idea is envisioned in which organizations who invite "blogs" might receive feedback or constructive criticism about their work. Readers can also comment about the topic at hand and at that point other readers might be educated about the full dimensions of the subject matter. We know that many writers do not provide enough background information on every topic they write about and a comment has potential to clarify a topic or provide more information that makes sense.

We understand, then, that allowing the public to comment on an agencie's website, necessarily brings with it a responsibility to ensure that no "one" culture, people, or sub-segment of our population is "victimized" through vile and hatred.

Local area online editions have the capability, and unfortunately if you examine some of the entries and exchanges between readers, Lakota people are getting all kinds of stereotypical comments directed at them. Some are downright nearsighted and hateful.

For example, when a sensitive issue such as the need to raise funds for low income energy consumers on the Rosebud or Pine Ridge arises, the comments that are posted reflect a deep insensitivity to the root issues which plague many reservation communities. Other examples are education and health issues.

Put very simply, tribal nations in South Dakota are built on treaties which are the supreme law of the land. They are the same legal instruments with which we enter into with foreign nations today. In exchange for the precious hills which many people sit on today, the value of which in incalculable, the trade-off was that Lakota people would be the recipients of certain treaty obligations.

When those obligations are ignored or when the government slides toward the conservative side of the aisle, it is those obligations which are sometimes forgotten.

The issue brings with it a responsibility by the media that permits them, to educate users and readers about the issues at hand. If it takes a history and culture lesson about the Lakota people, then perhaps that needs to be hammered away educating those topics. Lakota people are sophisticated, having survived for centuries, and understand when they are being insulted.

In reading the comments of readers, it is clear that 'racism' exists in our state. Maybe not so much as 'racism' but ignorance. The mass media is a powerful tool in educating their readers and it really doesn't take much to research and make contacts that will help readers to understand the core issues at hand.

For those in power with the media, you have a powerful tool to educate South Dakota about a culture that lives here and has been here many years before it was settled.

Comments about Lakota people that go unchecked are simply indicators of the deep racism, mistrust and misunderstanding that is alive and well in South Dakota.

Incident at Huron

Dear Editor:

It was ten days ago but the memory lingers on. We traveled six hours to get to Huron, South Dakota, for my son's hockey games.

We have played fourteen games this season with half the games in town and the rest on the road. But we travel because my 13 year old loves this sport; he has been playing hockey in Rapid City since he was five years old.

We started out utilizing scholarships, very used, borrowed hockey equipment, and the faith and belief of a six year old that he could do anything.

You know as a parent, when your child feels that way, you want to encourage that kind of thinking, empower him so he can use what he learns here on the ice, in other arenas of his life.

Unfortunately, when bad things are also encountered, these too follow and crossover into other parts of life. Something like that happened when we went to Huron.

As always, we arrived to the opponent's rink an hour early so the boys could suit up, warm up their gear, and get psyched for the game.

This time we got to the ice rink two hours early, so we came in during the middle of another game. We paid and sat down to watch hockey when I heard the sound of a drum….an Indian drum.

It was being played from the announcer's crow's nest by a man with a laptop. Then I started to listen to the words….puerile, immature stories about hockey, with the refrain, "me like hockey, me like hockey". It was definitely demeaning and debasing to American Indian people.

I couldn't believe my ears; I listened for a few minutes to make sure I was really hearing the song correctly.

My husband, my sons, and I are American Indian. I grew up in South Dakota, traveled awhile, but have lived in Rapid City the past 35 years, working in areas of cultural awareness, sensitivity training, child welfare, schools, courts, as a business owner, a consultant, member of Leadership Rapid City, and Recipient of Reconciliation Awards by the Governor.

People tell me constantly, "There is no more prejudice or racism in South Dakota." I wanted to believe that, but am unpleasantly surprised every time it is not true.

As I heard this song, I asked myself:

"What should I do?"

"Why do I have to do something at all?"

"Why is it that I always feel like I have to do something?"

"Why can't someone else complain?"

The answer for myself is what I have taught in classrooms, trainings, and such to others who ask:

"Search inside yourself."

"Is what they are doing wrong?"

"Does it make you feel bad?" "Would it make others feel bad?" "Is it wrong to sit back and do nothing?" "Is it right to stand up and say something?"

So I got up, walked down to the admissions desk and respectfully asked to speak to the manager of the facility. The lady said there is no manager but directed me to the concessions stand. At the concessions stand, I respectfully told the man in the ponytail I needed to speak to the manager of the tournament. He said, "you can tell me".

So I told him I objected to the song the announcer was playing right now. The ponytail man said why. I told him because it is demeaning to Indians; it has an Indian drum beating and a man speaking broken English, saying "me like hockey." Not only does it make fun of American Indian drums, but also of our relatives whose first language was not English.

The ponytail man said he would let Mike (the announcer) know of my objections.

I said thank you, and went back up into the stands. About 5-10 minutes later I saw the ponytail man go up to the crow's nest and speak to the announcer. They both laughed.

The song was not played again, in my presence. But I decided later to make my objection in writing also, as I knew I would be returning the next weekend for the State Hockey Tournament and because I know a few other teams have American Indians on their rosters.

I emailed the president, vice president, and the two coordinators for the Huron Peewees, and my own Association President (so he would be aware) of my objection. The only return email I got (from the Peewee Coordinators) said:

"I am sorry you feel this way - this song is from Canada and I had no idea it had anything to do with American Indians - I have never heard anyone say anything about this song - except that they love the song - its about playing hockey."

As far as I know, there is no action being taken about this song. (I wonder if Indians in Canada think this is funny?)

In my email to Huron I recommended that:

1) their association meet to discuss this as a board,

2) to please stop playing the demeaning "me like hockey" song, and

3) if they truly thought it was funny, to seek some cultural awareness training.

Please let the Huron Hockey Association know your objections by email: redlydmac@santel.net; winny@hur.midco.net; zamboniguy@hur.midco.net; dadux@yahoo.com

Words from the 'trenches'

Laughter is free and it feels good

By Connie Smith-Blanco

Valentine's Day has come and gone and this year I was blessed with a new husband who actually remembered the day without any extra prodding.

I realize that may change in future years but it's nice that he remembers now.

The week prior to Valentine's Day is both happy and sad for me. It brings back memories of my Uncle Dick Howe who died suddenly during the week of Valentine's Day. For a man who was tall, thin, square danced and played volleyball, we would never have thought we would lose him so soon.

When I was younger I was a little afraid of him but that was because he was so tall and could be a stern disciplinarian in his home. When I would spend the night there, I tried to remember all the rules, such as saying grace before the meal and asking permission to leave the table after I'd eaten my meal. He would never hurt any of his children or the collection of nieces and nephews running under his feet. I know I always did everything he told me to do while I was their guest.

That was only my impression of him when I was young. As an adult, my impression changed drastically. His height never again scared me but that was because I was growing taller myself. What I do remember most is that infectious laugh of his.

When something tickled him, he burst forth with this laugh that just made you start laughing right along with him. I loved hearing Uncle Dick laugh.

His son Craig has that same laugh and when I hear Craig laugh I do a double take. When my brother Troy died in July, 2000 my sister and I came home from Texas to help plan the funeral.

Uncle Dick and Aunt Lois and their children were there every minute to help where they could.

As the family was sitting outside my parent's house reminiscing about Troy and family times we'd all shared, it was then I decided that I wanted to come home.

Here we were, sitting under the star studded, blue July sky and actually laughing out loud at the crazy things our family had experienced. Uncle Dick's laugh was the loudest of all, and I realized I missed these family gatherings.

In 2001, I moved back to Martin with my two girls and the first person to give me a mighty hug (besides my parents of course) was my Uncle Dick.

He actually made me feel like he was happy to see me and that moving back to South Dakota wasn't the bad thing others thought it was.

That's what I will remember, acceptance, warmth, and laughter. I mean who else would mail letters to my kids from Rapid City, just to tell them that he was thinking about them.

And who else would mail my children the toys that he found inside his boxes of cereal knowing my kids would love them? (his nighttime snack was always a bowl of presweetened cereal)

So thank you Uncle Dick for teaching me it is okay to laugh out loud, that it's free and it makes me feel good!

And thank you Aunt Lois for marrying Uncle Dick and bringing him into our family. And thank you both for having three great "kids," my cousins, Dicksy, Craig and Kent.

Uncle Dick, without your encouragement I wouldn't have stayed here long enough to find this great job at the Lakota Country Times.

I know you're looking down on me and Amanda and laughing but that's okay..... because I know you're laughing "with" us and not "at" us..... here in the trenches.

Northern Perspectives

Children are resilient

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

There were some rather grim statistics being reported by Dr. Charles Grim of the Indian Health Service to the Senate Indian Affairs Committee last week relative to the percentage increase in Native children who are getting diabetes.

It's a devastating disease that may cause complications to one's health, especially if it happens to be accompanied by other health issues that may be plaguing one. It is like other health issues we see, it may not bother you today but in the long term it may surface and be cause for concern.

It's especially worrisome for me as a parent, as my son is overweight and with the bitter winter days visiting the northern plains, we have not been able to pick up our walking sticks and strike out for parts unknown.

We do most of our walking at the middle school, so I guess we do know where we are going.

We walk down the street sometimes and my son loves that, but I would prefer the track. We have also walked on the hiking trail in Rosebud about halfway to the top of the old Rosebud Hospital hill and it is challenging. My son, Beaux, is looking forward to being a firefighter one day and he will get plenty of challenges and ultimately the exercise is going to be good for him. I once ran a thousand miles back in 1982 and that was my only claim to fame in the hunt for good cardiovascular fitness.

I was hoping that all that mileage logged would help me in the long run and I think, in fact, that it is.

We are going to continue to persevere at Beaux's exercise routine. We are to the point that he does not crave a whole lot of fat containing foods which we used to love.

It takes a kind of mind shift, if you want to call it that, to accept that the food that tastes so good is probably not good for you.

Oooohh, but I love mashed potatoes and gravy, blueberry muffins and fried chicken so maybe I need to do more work with thinking that through.

A couple of research studies last year seemed to establish the fact that simply walking each day or at least 3-4 times a week is practically a not- so-quite guarantee that diabetes will be kept at bay.

Of course, we know that who our parents and grandparents are and what they handed down to us through our bloodline certainly has a great deal to do with whether or not we may have a pre-disposition for diabetes. That sounds rather ominous, as no matter what we do we may get it anyway, if it is a genetic trait passed down through the ages. I suppose that is why we need to keep our medical history somewhat in the back of our mind.

Yet, another consideration beyond exercise and good genes is our life style. Medical practitioners often say that a change in lifestyle is indicated and sometimes we wonder what that means.

Changing lifestyle could mean eliminating smoking, cutting down on trans fats, soda pop, cutting down on alcohol and getting plenty of rest. We cannot forget drinking plenty of water and getting enough rest.

As I noted earlier, the way our health 'shakes out' so to speak when we get older is an accumulation of the healthy and not so healthy habits we engaged in through out the years. Physicians warn that it took years for our bodies to take on the shape it did and it will take years to transform back itself into a healthy form.

I am hoping that research scientists at the more prestigious and liberal institutions in the country will step up their efforts at stem cell research. I sincerely believe that it shows potential as a way to regenerate damaged tissue and maybe even grow new organs. I am hoping that my life will be extended one day by such research.

I realize that such research is progressing slowly, but nevertheless scientists are moving forward. There apparently is some moral debate about using stem cells, but I don't harbor any such convictions. If it is a matter of extending the quality of life for mankind then I am for it.

Lakota children are resilient no matter what is confronting them.

They continue to be the newly minted foundation of our society and I am forever hopeful that any new scientific developments will contribute to some positive choices and innovations that they can choose from.

Notes From Indian Country

The last dance of Chief Illiniwek

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The news is out that the University of Illinois will drop its Chief Illiniwek mascot. It just goes to show that not all "traditions" are honorable.

It all began in 1926 when an Illinois student named Lester Leutwiler put on a homemade Indian costume and pranced around the football field at halftime. It will come to an end on Wednesday when the current mascot, Dan Maloney, will do the splits and other non-Indian dance steps for the last time.

This time-honored tradition faced its first objection when a young lady of Spokane Indian heritage, a graduate student at the University of Illinois, named Charlene Teters, stood alone and fearful at a football game in Champaign holding a small sign that read, "We are human beings and not mascots."

Many of the fans and alumni of the "Fighting Illini" were at first puzzled and then angered at the audacity of this young Indian lady. Some spat on her as they walked past and others flipped burning cigarettes at her. But she tearfully stood her ground because she had grown increasingly sick and tired of having her people insulted every Saturday for the sake of a football game.

To stand alone in the face of such fury and anger from a supposed educated segment of America's white society took courage and determination, but the constant insults and abuse soon caused Ms. Teters to waiver. Her fear was mostly for that of her children and not herself. But tell me this; why should any person fear for their very lives for protesting the use of Indians as mascots for America's fun and games?

After observing a particular crude presentation at the halftime of a Washington Redskins football game in 1982 I wrote a column questioning the use of human beings as mascots in a fashion that demeaned them. The incident involved a group of fans painting a pig red, placing a feathered bonnet on its head and then chasing it around the fifty-yard line as halftime entertainment. The first thing that struck me was what if these fans had painted a pig black and placed an Afro-wig on its head and did this stunt at halftime? Even 25 years ago this would have gone over about as well as a fart in church.

I was stunned by the hate mail I received for this column. I was asked to be on a national radio call-in show to talk about the use of Indians as mascots. Once again, the hate directed at me spewed from the radio. Mind you, I am Native American, Oglala Lakota, born and raised on an Indian reservation in South Dakota. Some of the callers suggested that, "If I didn't like it, go back to wherever in the hell I came from."

One day I got a call from Charlene Teters. She told me she was hurt and frightened by the attacks upon her for standing up against the use of Chief Illiniwek as her school's mascot. She said she was going to quit school and go home. I said, "That is your choice Char, but if you quit, they win." Well, she didn't quit but instead continued her protests even beyond the day she graduated. Soon hundreds of Native Americans showed up on Homecoming Day at the University of Illinois to join Ms. Teters in her protest.

I joined the protest one year as a newspaper reporter. I walked near the protestors taking pictures as they marched. I was once again overwhelmed by the degree of hatred aimed at these protestors. Profanity such as "F" you squaws" or "Get the hell out of here you drunken Indians," rained down on the protestors on their march to the stadium. My God, what a proud tradition! How can a people exude such hatred for real Indians while honoring a phony chief?

Howard Wakeland, president of the Honor the Chief Society said after the decision to remove Illiniwek as the school's mascot that it was like putting the mascot in a museum. "Put him in a cage and walk by and say that's our symbol. That seriously kills the heart of the chief." There will always be those who just don't get it.

In the minds of most Native Americans it is high time Illiniwek was placed in a museum. I hope the traditional Sioux regalia the University purchased from Chief Fools Crow under false pretenses are returned before their mascot is put on display. Fools Crow believed the University purchased the outfit for historical and educational purposes. When I showed him a photo of how the costume was actually used he was furious. Before his death several years ago he asked, "How can I get them back?" The Oglala Sioux Tribe is now demanding their return thanks to Eileen Janis, the former vice president of the tribe.

The University of Illinois joined Stanford, Marquette, Dartmouth and other colleges and universities that saw their traditional mascots as racist and did away with them. There are still handful Indian tribes that have sold out their heritage and allow colleges to use their images as mascots. And there is still a professional football team that uses the color of a people's skin for its mascot.

I honor Charlene Teters for her courage and determination. She has fought for and helped bring about many changes at colleges like Stanford, Marquette, Dartmouth and more that have dropped their Indian mascots and declared them as racist. I will consider America grown up when it finally determines that to name a professional football team "Redskins" after the color of a people's skin is one of the last bastions of racial prejudice in this country.

Finding My Voice

It takes courage to leave

Dana Lone Hill

I called the place. It was like a super secret society. Look out for us, she will pull up in a blue van in 20 minutes. Are you ready?

Yes I said. As ready as I will ever be.

I looked at my 3 sons, sitting on the couch and my heart literally hurt. Here I was dragging them away from everything they knew once again.

I felt the familiar kick in my belly and knew I had to go. I was pregnant, I had not told anyone. The father didn't want anything to do with me or a new baby. So I only had one choice.

Leave.

The blue van pulled up and my boys and I packed everything that mattered to us in the back.

The lady said hi and smiled. We talked for the 40 minutes that she drove me to another location, where I was picked up by another lady waiting. From there we drove with only one pit stop. She stopped at a gas station and I knew the boys were hungry. I had 5 dollars in my pocket. I bought them some snack and on we went. We finally arrived at our destination.

I knew it was when I seen the building. Set in a residential community but with a huge "fort" looking fence around the back yard. We walked in the office side where I finished my paperwork and then we were led to the other side. There, we was assigned a bedroom, given a tour and told how things ran.

I had 30 days they told me to get situated in this new town I decided to make home.

It took me 34 days to find a place to live, find a job and make a new home for my boys.

The Missouri Shores Domestic Violence Shelter in Pierre, helped me so much in assistance.

They not only gave me a new start on my life but they also gave me the confidence to "start over."

Domestic Violence is serious, including all four types of abuse: physical, emotional, sexual, and neglect.

Some people may suffer from abuse and not even know it.

The hold of being emotionally abused is so draining of who you are as a person, woman, mother, you lose all sense of yourself and who you are. There is help out there, you just have to be the first person to accept the help.

The National Domestic Violence Hotline 1-800-799-SAFE (7233) http://www.ndvh.org/

Please remember when spring cleaning or when the holidays roll around and everyone wants to give, there is a shelter in your community and they do take donations of all types. I have seen some women go to these places with only the clothing they have on.

Dana Lone Hill is a 34-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota Community College.

Rahn, Michaud win Region 3A

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

Left: Dave Michaud "Bulldawg" is known as the fierce linebacker or the powerful running back in football or as the tenacious wrestler on the mat or the impenetrable backstop on the ball diamond but few know the quiet Pine Ridge high school senior as the academic and 4.0 student or the potential valedictorian of his senior class. Right: Chris Rahn, a senior at Todd County High School will take a 29-2 record to State A.

HURON - "We just did not know how it would go," said Dave Michaud, Pine Ridge wrestling coach about his son Bulldawg's chances at the Region 3A tournament Saturday in Huron, "earlier in the year, he separated his shoulder during a match at Stanley County, he ended up tearing his rotator cuff and even though he sat out the last four weeks of the season we just didn't know how the shoulder would hold up or how his endurance would be but in the end he pinned all three of his opponents in the first period so it is now onto to state."

Michaud, a senior, took second in the state as a sophomore and hurt his neck as a junior ending up sixth in state at 189. This year, Michaud weighed in at 189, was ranked number two at 189 at the beginning of the season but wrestled at 215 all year to allow a teammate a chance to wrestle at 189 and to wrestle against tougher competition. At the end of the season he was ranked number one at 215 but chose to wrestle at 189 at regions.

Bulldawg opened Regionals on Saturday with a pin in 1:30 over Tyler One Horn of Little Wound, beat Jared Geigle of Pierre in the semis with a pin at 1:00 and knocked off the fourth ranked 189 wrestler in the state, Tucker Ulmer of Winner with a pin in 1:23. Michaud will take an 18-2 record to state and will wrestle Kyle Blake of Belle Fourche in the first round. Michaud lost to Fisher of Gettysburg, ranked number two at 215 in the B, early in the season and took an injury forfeit in the first wound at Winner due to his shoulder.

Chris Rahn, a senior at Todd County pinned all three of his opponents in the heavyweight division in Region 3A and will take a 29-2 record into the State A on Friday in Sioux Falls against Calvin Freed of Sioux Falls Roosevelt. Rahn opened the tournament pinning Stephen Engebretson of Hot Springs, finished off Zach Geigle of Pierre in 2:23 in the semis and pinned number two ranked Jon Strubel of Huron at the 5:49 mark.

Albert "Boo" Her Many Horses, a senior at Todd County, went into the 130 pound championship match in Region 3A with an undefeated 25-0 record but was pinned by Dustin Warnke of Mitchell for his first loss of the year. Her Many Horses will wrestle Alex DeFea of Milbank in the first round of State.

"Bruce "BooBoo" Jacobs has really improved this year," said Michaud, his coach at Pine Ridge," he really felt good qualifying for State as a freshman, something his older brothers did not achieve - Bruce went into Regionals and wrestled the best he has all season and took third at 119."

Jacobs lost his first match to Brady Harkless of Hot Springs but came back to beat Ryan Buck of Mitchell 2-0 in overtime and beat Miles Milius of Winner 10-9 after being down 7-2 earlier in the match. Jacobs will take a 26-4 record into the State A against Tim Waterman of Sioux Falls Lincoln in the first round of the 119 pound division.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte is in a cooperative with Faith and Dupree and they qualified three wrestlers for state. Qualifiers included LD LaPlante, 21-14 at 125 who will wrestle Mike Lappegard of Watertown, Tye Hale, a senior with a record of 27-10 in 135 will wrestle Cody Lowe of West Central in the first round of State and Colby Keegan 24-16 at 145 who will wrestle Cody Wilson of Sturgis.

Preliminary matches for the State A start at 10 a.m. at the Sioux Falls Arena on Friday with the championship matches set for 6:15 p.m. on Saturday evening. The State B has the same schedule at the Barnett Center in Aberdeen.

Mustangs roll up road wins, momentum for districts, regionals and state build

FT. YATES/MCLAUGHLIN/EAGLE BUTTE - Rich Big Boy set the tone hitting five straight baskets in the first quarter helping Little Wound to a 16-0 lead over Standing Rock on Thursday night in Ft. Yates as the Mustangs won their 17th game of the season 115-70 over the Warriors. Big Boy finished the night 10-13 from the field with 22 points, 11 rebounds and four steals. Little Wound scored over 30 points in three of the four quarters opening with a 34-10 first quarter lead, up at the half 53-23 as they slowed down for a bit of air then came out in the third pouring in 30 points to go up 83-47 and closing out with 32 points in the fourth to finish up 115-70.

Little Wound out rebounded Standing Rock 52-35 and used balanced scoring to dominate the game each quarter; Shilo Pierce finished up with 20 points, five steals and five rebounds, TJ McCauley helped with 15 points, seven assists, four rebounds, three steals and a blocked shot, Devon LeBeau chipped in 12 points and Ty Lunderman added 11 points, five assists and three rebounds. Brice Hornbeck scored only five points but pulled down eight rebounds, finished with five assists, three blocked shots and two steals.

On Friday night, the Mustangs had the tone set by TJ McCauley who knocked down 11 first quarter points as the Mustangs went up 25-6 over the Braves. Balanced scoring again was the key as Little Wound continued to shrink the court with pin point passing to the open man. Big Boy hit for 22 points for the second night in a row, McCauley finished with 20 points, eight steals, five rebounds, three assists and two blocks, Ty Lunderman hit for 18 points and led the team with six rebounds while Hornbeck and Pierce both hit for 12 points.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte just didn't have any defense for the Mustangs attack. Cory Straighthead led the Braves with 14 points while Tyson Maxon helped with 12 points. The Braves lost to Pine Ridge on Monday at home 59-57 and at 7-11 will close out the regular season at Todd County on Friday.

Little Wound moved their record to 18-1 and will travel to Bennett County Friday night for the last game of the regular season before hosting Bennett County on Tuesday in the first round game of District 14A. The Mustangs continue to be ranked at number two behind undefeated Parkston.

Red Cloud averaged 94 points a game in defeating McLaughlin 86-62 on Saturday and St. Francis 102-65 on Monday. The Crusaders moved their record to 16-3 with the two wins and travel to Hill City on Friday to finish out the regular season before hosting Hot Springs on Tuesday in the first round of District 15A action.

After opening up a 16-5 lead on the Midgets of McLaughlin, Red Cloud cruised through the game adding to the lead each quarter. Christian McGhee, Red Cloud's point guard and top scorer hit six threes on Saturday for 24 points and added six assists and on Monday he finished with five threes, 22 points and eight assists. The Crusaders had six ballplayers in double figures against McLaughlin as Art Vitalis hit for a career high of 13 points with four steals and four assists, Billy Scott hit for 13 also and led the team with 10 rebounds.

McLaughlin was led by Max Schott who hit for 36 points and 14 rebounds. McLaughlin is now 7-12 and will finish the season at Chamberlain on Thursday or Saturday and at St. Francis on Friday.

Balanced scoring and strong board play set the tone for Red Cloud against St. Francis; five Crusaders were in double figures and Red cloud outrebounded St. Francis 39-20. Joe Richards had a career game with 20 points for Red Cloud while Billy Scott hit for 21 points and six rebounds, Giago added 10 points and six rebounds while freshman Carl Swallow hit for a career high of 12 points.

St. Francis was led by Taylor Brushbreaker's 22 points, Gary Whipple added 18 and Travis Spotted War Bonnet helped with 10. The Warriors are now 10-9 and will host McLaughlin on Friday and are battling Pine Ridge for the number two seed in District 14A, the top two seeds host first round games.

Pine Ridge got by Cheyenne Eagle Butte 59-57 on Monday as Michael Jack hit for 22 points, Jon Provost added 11 and Oris Morrison and Mitch Bagola added 10 each as the Thorpes evened their record at 10-10 and wait to see how St. Francis does against McLaughlin on Friday night to see who gets the number two seed in the district.

Pine Ridge, Red Cloud strong in district openers

PINE RIDGE - Pine Ridge quickly knocked the rust off after a 10 day break downing Little Wound 70-50 in the first round of District 14A tournament play while Bennett County defeated St. Francis 69-40 Tuesday night in Martin to set up a rematch between the number one and number two ranked teams in Class A Thursday night in Rapid City at RC Stevens high school.

After a close 18-13 first quarter, Pine Ridge started opening up the margin with a 35-20 halftime lead and a 56-28 three quarter lead for their 21st win of the season against no losses, the only undefeated team left in Class A. Sophia Janis hit for 15 points to lead the Lady Thorpes in scoring, Nichelle Red Owl and Lacey Weston added 12 while Christian Janis chipped in 11. Weston led the team with seven rebounds.

Little Wound's freshman forward, Kirsten Clifford scored 12 points and led the Mustangs with eight rebounds. Tawni Shay Hunter chipped in 11 while Veronica Richards and Kelsey Brave Eagle added 10 each in a strong team effort for the Lady Mustangs who finished the season 6-14. Brave Eagle is the only senior.

Bennett County rolled to their 19th win of the season with just one loss as Maggie O'Neill hit for 25 points and 11 rebounds, Keely Krolikowski added 19 points and Amy O'Neil grabbed 11 rebounds. St. Francis was led by Kali Brave-Jenkins who hit for 16 points and snared six rebounds. The Lady Warriors finished the year 9-11 and will have four starters back for next year.

Bennett County's win sets up a rematch with Pine Ridge, the Lady Thorpes won the regular season game in Martin 81-80 with a last second three pointer by Robin Webber before a standing room only crowd. Pine Ridge, ranked number one, 21-0 will play Bennett County 19-1 ranked number two on Thursday night in Rapid City at RC Stevens high school; doors open at 6pm, game time is 7pm. Bennett County features the best power forward in the state with Maggie O'Neill and a top point guard in Krolikowski while Pine Ridge lost their top rebounder for the year Keisha Brewer to a torn ACL but even with one of the youngest lineups in the state(starting four sophomores and a freshman).

Red Cloud opened their 15A District play hosting Hill City on Tuesday and came out with some real intensity on defense holding Hill City to 31 points in a 61-31 win for their 14th win of the season. Red Cloud held one of Hill City's top scorers, Kati Ginsbach, to three points and no rebounds as they went up 16-5 in the first quarter and held a 32-16 lead at the half.

"We played good defense and had a solid team effort," said Ted Standing Soldier Jr., Red Cloud's first year head coach, "we have a young team, not one senior and they have shown some real improvement over the year."

Red Cloud finished off the regular season on Saturday with a 81-66 win over McLaughlin on the road. Red Cloud is now 14-5 and will play Custer in the District 15a championship game on Thursday night in Spearfish at the Young Center on the campus of Black Hills State University.

Behind Mandi Morrisette's 19 points, Todd County knocked off Platte 60-46 and will play Winner Thursday night in the District 13A championship game in Gregory.

Diabetes expertise: the challenge is convincing people to change

Symbolism of medicine wheel can create balance

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Loss of tradition has led to an epidemic of diabetes and heart disease in Native Americans, according to two Rapid City professionals who are working to do something about it. But a return to a traditional diet and physical activity could halt the epidemic and restore tribes to good health.

In the normal course of events, diabetes strikes first and heart disease follows.

Kibbe Conti of Northern Plains Nutrition Consulting, a registered dietician in Indian country for 12 years, encourages Native Americans to return to a more traditional diet to fight the epidemic of diabetes.

And Dr. Jeff Henderson, a member of the Cheyenne River Sioux tribe and president and CEO of Black Hills Center for Native American Health, is researching ways of keeping diabetic Native Americans from developing heart disease.

Both Henderson and Conti agree problems with diabetes and heart disease began when tribes underwent a major cultural shift during European colonization in the 19th Century and could no longer observe traditional diet and activities.

Henderson said after the Fort Laramie treaties of 1851 and 1868 were broken, tribes were pushed onto small reservations, kept there "under guard and under gun," and given government rations of "virtually limitless calories" with little nutritional value.

The effect, Henderson said, has been "devastating" and added that about 40 percent of Native Americans in South Dakota are diabetic, and the percentage of diabetes in other tribes, such as the Pima in Arizona, is much higher.

Conti noted that some researchers believe there is a connection between heritage and diet. People of a common heritage are adapted to certain food patterns, and "if you change that, there are consequences," she said. People are not genetically adapted to process a different diet.

Overly processed carbohydrates such as white flour and sugar are particularly problematic for Native Americans, she said. Some races can handle sugars, but Native Americans have to produce "way more insulin to process that same load," and the pancreas works harder. "We just haven't had a chance to adapt to this American food system," Conti said.

Dr. Jeff Henderson and Kibbe Conti have developed theories to challenge diet change with prediabetes and diabetics.

"You'd be pressed to find 30 grams of carbs in a traditional meal," Conti said. A traditional diet used to consist of large game such as buffalo, some small game, and plants found in "quite a variety" because Native people "migrated in a circle," and each season provided them with different plants, she said.

About five years ago, Conti, Oglala Lakota, with the help of Robert Chasing Hawk, former Cheyenne River tribal chairman, adapted the medicine wheel to replace the food pyramid favored by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The Medicine Wheel, a powerful circle, represents balance, and food also "is about balance," Conti said.

The quarters of the Medicine Wheel symbolize many things, including directions, seasons, and elements, Conti said. "It just so happens that a Medicine Wheel does reflect… the four food components," she said, and obesity results from not honoring the four quarters of the Wheel.

The West is associated with water, rain, and clouds, and water "is a food component," she said. "Traditionally we drink water and tea."

Today, people drink too much soda pop and alcohol, not honoring the water part of the food system, Conti said. "Some people don't give their bodies a chance when they're consuming…sweetened drinks," she said. "Sweetened drinks are a big no-no across the board."

A 20-ounce bottle of pop, which according to the label is 2.5 servings, contains 70 grams of sugar.

"That's a lot," she said. In drinking a whole bottle of pop with sugar, "their poor pancreas is working overtime."

The North quarter of the Wheel is associated with the buffalo, which along with other large game was plentiful at one time and provided lean protein.

Today, with processed meats such as hotdogs, people are getting more fat than protein, Conti said.

To get protein without fat, Conti recommends lean meats and other

1999 OST audit can be reversed, tribe to recover $1 million

PINE RIDGE - Oglala Sioux Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele recently traveled to Washington D.C., holding meetings with U.S. Rep. Stephanie Herseth, Sen. John Thune, and Bureau of Indian Affairs Director Pat Ragsdale.

According to Steele, "We made tremendous progress on the two issues I wanted addressed, our 1999 audit findings, and the introduction of legislation to address Angostura Dam."

The tribe had several unresolved audit findings dating to its 1999 audit. In Steele's meeting with BIA Director Ragsdale, BIA officials admitted that the audit findings would be reversed, in response to documentation submitted by the Tribe.

Steele

"This will enable the Tribe to recover $1 million which the BIA wrongfully withheld from the Tribe," Steele stated. "These funds shall be allocated to needed social services, public safety and transportation programs."

The Angostura Dam legislation is a significant success for the Tribe, as well. Stephanie Herseth introduced H.R. 883, which provides funding for improvements at the irrigation project, which will benefit farmers in Oral.

The bill also establishes a trust fund for the Oglala Sioux Tribe, for economic development and environmental projects on the Pine Ridge Reservation, and increases water flows in the Cheyenne River.

"We have been working on this legislation for many years, and we really appreciate Stephanie Herseth's support," Steele stated.

According to President Steele's office, Senator Johnson has supported this legislation and is expected to continue to do so when he returns to the Senate. Senator John Thune is studying the issue, according to Steele. "We are looking forward to receiving funds to address our economic development and infrastructure needs, which is what this legislation provides," Steele stated.

Off-reservation communities received federal projects, such as Angostura, but the tribe has been neglected, Steele said.

The resolution of the past audit issues and the Angostura legislation are major priorities of the Steele administration. "We are getting off to a good start," Steele stated.

Rev. Moore celebrates 85th birthday

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - More than 100 people attended the open house birthday party for Dr. Marrles Moore on last at the Christian Life Fellowship church. Rev. Moore, wife, Frances and their sons, Robert and Jack have shared a fellowship within their immediate family as well as their church family that continues to grow and create togetherness. Such togetherness and unity is something that Lakota people have always cherished and Rev. Moore's family does very well in that regard.

Rev. and Mrs. Frances Moore were married on July 23, 1942 and have kept their sons fully engaged in their Christian work in the Native community. Rev. Moore received a Lifetime Achievement Award last summer in Hungry Horse, MT for his tireless work on behalf of Native ministries.

Last week, Rev. Marrles Moore and Frances celebrated Moore's 85th birthday with community.

The other member of the Moore family is the late, White Eagle, an operatic tenor who was remembered this day, also, by the family. The White Eagle Christian Academy in Antelope bears his name.

Rev. Moore's life story and service as a pastor is well documented and preserved in pictures. Son, Robert, who is a superb singer in his own right and an RST council representative from District 3 Antelope community served as the official emcee for the birthday party.

Rev. Moore's grandson Marrles sang a beautiful Christian song and was followed by Bob and Theresa Stead of Antelope community who minister at their own church known locally as the Carpenter's Shop. Most people were unaware that Theresa could belt out a Christian song in Lakota, but that is exactly what she did. Both Bob and Stead were endearing in their comments as they referred to Rev. Moore as their "spiritual father" and for any cleric that has to be the ultimate compliment.

A parishioner, Danny Stevens, from the CLF church where the party was being held spoke to Rev.

proteins - chicken breast, buffalo, fish, beans, and eggs - prepared in traditional ways: roasted, boiled, dried, or baked. Tribes in the past didn't have an abundance of fat and had no way of frying foods, she said. Today it's easier to cook on the stove top range with frying.

The East, symbolizing springtime, is "a time of renewal," when the gathering of plants begins. And the South symbolizes summertime, a time of cultivation - of corn, beans, squash, starchy roots, and starchy vegetables - for some tribes, she said.

Traditional plants contain, in addition to essential vitamins and minerals, other compounds that have medicinal value, "just as we're learning today," Conti said. "This is a new frontier."

Fruits and vegetables contain phytonutrients such as lycopine and antioxidants that prevent damage to cells and are effective in fighting cancer and aging, Conti said.

"We need to hit the produce section," she said. Melons, berries, lettuce, and other plants contain "really good stuff."

Henderson said one theory of Native American obesity, which leads to diabetes and heart disease, centers around a hypothetical "thrifty gene." People who hunted and gathered food, as indigenous people did, sometimes face feast and sometimes famine; when food was plentiful, the people stored extra calories as fat to be available in times of famine. Then, when food was scarce, the "thrifty gene" turned down the body's metabolism so the stored fat could be burned more slowly and last longer.

No longer the 'hunting and gathering,' but according to theory, their bodies have not yet adapted to having food consistently available and still store fat as if preparing for famine, he said.

To burn the stored fat, Conti recommends exercise for at least 30 minutes at a time. In the first 20 minutes of exercise, the body burns sugar stored in muscle cells and the liver; beyond 20 minutes, the body starts "kicking into fat stores."

Exercise, in addition to eliminating fat, builds muscle, which is metabolically more active than fat, Conti said. Muscle "helps to reverse things," causing the body's own insulin to work more efficiently, she said.

There's a "serious access issue" for fresh food on reservations, Conti said. There are community grants available to address the problem, to assist stores and markets to be equipped with produce coolers to distribute fresh fruits and vegetables. Produce trucks bringing seasonal foods are also a possibility, she said.

On most reservations, gardening has not caught on, possibly because of poor soil or insufficient water supplies, Conti said.

Money is also a problem, she said. Carbohydrates that quickly turn to sugar in the body - white flour, white potatoes, ramen noodles, frybread, donuts - are cheap, taste good, and will stretch to feed a lot of people.

"That's economics," she said. "They're good filler food." But these foods should be treated special, eating small amounts and not very often, she said.

Henderson said the people have undergone a "cultural renaissance" in the past 30 years. "Since the 1970s, it's been okay to be Indian." Now we have many who are involved in strengthening their spirituality by attending sweats and participating in the Sun Dance, and participating and attending pow wows. There has been a "sincere effort" to preserve the Lakota language, he said.

But the switch back to traditional foods - featuring lean protein and fewer carbohydrates, a diet that would improve blood sugars - has been slower to come about.

The challenge, he said, is convincing people to change.

Moore and explained the impact that he has had on his life. He also played "Amazing Grace" on his flute.

Robert then showed a slide presentation of Rev. Moore's family, including a picture of a cliff in Okreek where he received his calling as a pastor.

Rev. Moore built a small church in Rapid City in his early years and then moved to Denver with his family and ministered to a parish there. Son, Jack, who is the President of the White Eagle Christian Academy came home from Denver and proceeded to hold church services at the Rosebud Fair grounds and the Mission town hall.

Robert also explained a little about the families history in South Dakota, including a photograph of Rev. Moore's father, Noble Moore with Louie, Paul and David Dorian, son's of Pierre Dorian. Rev. Moore is the great-great grandson of Pierre Dorian.

In the 1980s Rev. Moore leased a building that previously was one of the original buildings on the campus of the old Rosebud boarding school where he attended school. that closed in the late 1950s.

There is only one other structure from that complex that still stands and which many people still recall on the Rosebud.

Later, WEC academy was created by the Moore family and it now offers instruction up to eighth grade.

Bitter cold prompts need for low energy assistance funds at Rosebud, Oglala and Cheyenne River receive some funds

ROSEBUD - The recent bitter cold spell last week on the northern plains saw Lakota people from Pine Ridge to Rosebud and Cheyenne River huddled in their homes, while the cost to heat those homes has crept up ever so slowly.

The issue is not quite a public health concern; however, it has surfaced in many discussions during recent tribal council meetings and in other public venues. It has even attracted the attention of the Rapid City Journal which published a story last week on the increasing plight of some 800 Rosebud homes which are without propane and an additional 500 more low income homes in the same circumstance with less than 10 percent remaining.

A couple of weeks ago RST apparently borrowed $20,000 for energy assistance, however, with 100 gallons of propane costing $158 for in-town delivery that amount would only service 126 low income households. It is difficult to estimate the total number of homes on the Rosebud reservation, however, some estimates of total enrollment put the figure at anywhere from 18,000 to 20,000 tribal members living within reservation boundaries or within close proximity.

One hundred gallons of propane at a cost of $158 can be estimated to last anywhere from 30 to 50 days. It depends on the temperature and the type of household that is being heated.

The RST Low Income Energy Assistance Program or LIHEAP was also cited as having no funds for electricity and 25 homes were facing shut off by Cherry-Todd Electric.

RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux noted that the tribe is waiting on the signing of a continuing resolution by President Bush that would release low income funds. Furthermore, he noted that tribal programs are operating on last year's funding level.

It is most likely that the issue of LIHEAP funding will on the agenda as the RST council meets on Tuesday.

RST council representative from District 3 Antelope, Jo Colombe, said that when the bitter wind chills were blowing last week, many community members sought shelter in the community center. When the Emergency Preparedness Program was "activated" there were over 200 people on the waiting list for propane, electricity or wood. Colombe said, "There were quite a few with lights shut off. The problem this year is that we did not get the $400,000 for energy assistance from Shakopee like we did last year and also casino revenue is down."

Dixie Larvie, Chairman of Antelope community, said that two families were temporarily living in the community center because their pipes had frozen. Larvie said the community wanted to become proactive and do their own fundraising through a flea market.

RST District 3 Antelope, Cyril "Whitey" Scott, also confirmed the activation of the Emergency Preparedness Program by RST President Bordeaux and said that $27,000 was put in the budget. According to the list that Scott referred to, there were 122 names on the list and in order to receive assistance they had to be at a level of 5 percent or less on their propane meter.

On the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation the Nation of Venezuela has donated $376, 379 through the CITGO Petroleum Corporation. The money will be used for fuel to heat 1384 low income houses at a rate of $259 each. An additional $17, 923 under the agreement will be used to heat buildings that are occupied by tribal social services and to offset the cost of administering the much needed project.

Nine tribes in South Dakota and Montana will receive $1.3 to $1.5 million in free heating fuel. The CITGO program is a spin off from a discounted fuel program the corporation initiated to aid low income victims of hurricane Katrina. CITGO set aside 10 percent of its oil production for low-income residents in the United States.

CITGO apparently was the only oil company that responded when Senators made a request to provide discounted fuel to those ravaged by the hurricane.

On the Pine Ridge reservation former Olympic champion, Billy Mills, has matched a tribal fund of $45,000 and his organization Running Strong is donating $90,000 to be used for heating, electricity or wood. The funds are earmarked for the nine districts on the Pine Ridge.

Mills reported that last year's donation assisted some 1,307 people. Running Strong is also donating $30,000 on the Cheyenne River reservation and low income households can request up to $100 for energy assistance and must provide a matching amount.

Daniel George Iron Cloud Jr.

PORCUPINE - Daniel George Iron Cloud Jr., He Sapa (Black Horn) was born on May 27, 1964 to Daniel Iron Cloud Sr. and Christina Red Eagle Iron Cloud.

He was affectionately known as "Jr." by his family. He was the youngest of four children and his siblings are: Danielle, Manuel (deceased 2003), and Esther. He lived his life in many towns and cities, but called Porcupine his home.

On his father's side, he was the grandson of Edward Iron Cloud Sr. (Hehaka Wankatuya Najin - Elk Stands High) and Emily Bad Wound.

His ancestors on his father's side include Bad Wound, Peter Iron Cloud, Runs for the Hills, Red Necklace and Knife Chief. On his mother's side, he was the grandson of Jacob White Eyes and Susie F. Apple who was the daughter of Chief American Horse.

He lived in Martin with his parents and made many lifelong friends and met many extended family members. Before moving to Mission, where his parents worked at Bishop Hare Home he lived in Porcupine where he went to school.

In Mission he met many boys and young men who attended Bishop Hare Home from all over the United States.

Although he didn't attend Hare Home as a student he did everything that the boys did, which included going to Washington, D.C. This is where he got his urge to travel to many different places and enjoyed seeing all the many different places. He would always come home with stories of his adventures and his family enjoyed hearing of all his travels.

After graduating high school at Little Wound School, he moved to Seattle, Washington where he lived for a couple of years and upon returning he worked at the Porcupine Day School. This is where he met his son's mother, Kim Jacko, and became a father. But as he loved to explore and travel, he could not stay in one place for very long. Daniel Jr. stayed with his brother in Big Bend National Park, Texas, for some time. In 2000, Daniel flew from the lower 48 to Anchorage, Alaska to see his son Isaac Eugene Iron Cloud being born at the Alaska Native Medical Center on September 10, 2000. Prior to that he fished and camped in the surrounding Matanuska-Susitna area until he moved to the village of Togiag, Alaska near the Bristol Bay area where his son turned 1 year old. Daniel Jr. loved the outdoors and fishing. During his stay in Alaska, he worked as a jail guard for the Yupiik-speaking Eskimo people. Also, during his stay in Alaska, he contracted the debilitating disease - tuberculosis, which would eventually cause complications and subsequently his death. As usual he was traveling at the time of his death and passed away in Sioux Falls, SD on February 9, 2007. He will be missed by his family especially his two sisters and son. Members of his family are: six year old son Isaac Eugene who resides in Ridgeway, Pennsylvania with his mother; sister Danielle Two Eagle, and brother-in-law Archie Two Eagle and their children, Delane, Valerie, Archie, Michael, Tarah and Marshall; his grandchildren Shawn, Christina, Darrell, Jesse and Manuel; sister Esther Iron Cloud and her children Stephanie, Isaiah and Zachary, all of Porcupine, SD. He was preceded in death by his father, mother, and brother, Manuel Iron Cloud.

Wake services will began on Thursday, Feb. 15 at the Porcupine Day School. Funeral services were Feb. 17.

Traditional services will be held at the Porcupine school then he will be taken to Mediator Episcopal Church near Kyle, where Christian services will be held and where he will be buried by his mother.

Daniel Jr. will be carried home by his brothers and friends of Jerry Iron Cloud, Jeff Iron Cloud, Ed Iron Cloud III, Orlin Iron Cloud, Bill Tuttle, Mike Iron Cloud, Larry Iron Cloud, Percy Lone Elk, Emmett Steele and Willie Joe Beaudreau. Honorary pallbearers include Paul Iron Cloud family, Eldean Weston family, Pat Iron Cloud Sr. family, Vern Iron Cloud family, Harold Tuttle, Hank Tuttle, Everett Tuttle, Roger Iron Cloud, Jay Parisien, Jimmy Iron Cloud, Harlan Iron Cloud, Richard Iron Cloud, Pat Iron Cloud Jr., Phil Iron Cloud, Lester Iron Cloud, Steve Iron Cloud, Tony Iron Cloud, Randy Tuttle, Marty Fineran, Myron Fineran, Milton Fineran, Marlin Fineran, Verlinda Iron Cloud, family of the late Cleveland Iron Cloud, Byron Wilcox, Kevin Richards, Boyd Richards, Monte Red Bear, Isaac Red Bear, Daniel Bad Wound, Elgin Bad Wound, Jr., Charlie High Hawk, Les Jack, Seymour Jack, Teddy Jack, Jim Red Willow, Gary Red Willow, Pete Red Willow, Marty Frogg, Micheal Frogg, Jon One Feather, Roscoe Black Feather, Tony Black Feather, Dave Black Feather, Jonas Wounded Foot, Duane Iron Crow, Enoch Spider, George Two Eagle, Rodney Two Eagle, Virgil Bush, Rick Two Dogs, Paul Robertson, Jim Miller, Ted Hamilton, Bill Koenen, John Jackson, Harry Eagle Bull, Lenny Yankton, Jim Beaudreau, Frank McGhee, Samuel, Jesse, Louis Jr Jealous, Alex Little, Pat Sr., Pat Jr. and Lamar Afraid of Hawk, William Lone Elk Jr., Fred Byerly, Cecil Red Eyes and the Cornerstone Mission staff.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Do you ever have any real short, simple answers?

Doesn't like to read that much

Dear Doesn't like to read that much:

Yup.

Dear Anna,

Hi, even though I live far away, I really enjoy reading your column and enjoy your answers. So, I decided to send a question of my own, knowing that compared to some of the problems you help with, this may sound pretty trivial.

Here goes: My daughter is 18 years old and a great kid.

She has struggled with learning disabilities her entire life and (I am so proud to say) graduated last year from high school and is now attending a community college in our city with the dream of becoming a chef.

Our problem is this, our daughter started driving later than most kids and finally got her driver's license when she turned 17, around a year and a half ago.

Within the past 6 months she has been in two accidents, both determined to be her fault.

This girl is not a wild driver. In fact our neighbor once commented to us, "I saw your daughter driving the other day and she is such a safe driver!" That was nice to hear but if anything, I think she may be almost too careful if that's possible. She basically drives like...well..my grandma used to drive. Only maybe not as fast.

The first accident she had was definitely her fault and she turned and hit another car. There were minor injuries.

This last accident happened as she was changing lanes on the freeway on the way to school. She swore that it wasn't her fault and the other driver jumped into her lane. Her side mirror was torn off and, thank goodness, no one was hurt.

The insurance company found her at fault anyway, based on the damage and what the other driver said.

Unfortunately now I'm scared to death to let her drive.

Besides the economic reasons (I can't imagine how this'll affect our insurance rates) but I'm also afraid she'll get into another accident and be seriously hurt.

The car is in our name as is the insurance since she doesn't have a job right now because she's attending school full time and it's such a struggle for her.

So far we haven't been able to get the side mirror fixed and have been driving her back and forth to and from school.

She's wondering when she'll be able to drive herself again and, at this point my husband and I haven't been able to agree on that. Should we let her begin driving herself to and from school (about 17 miles away on a busy freeway.) once we get the mirror fixed? Should she just be able to drive around the neighborhood and to the store only?

Or, as my husband is leaning toward, should we give her free reign again once she's out of school, has a job, can buy her own insurance, is married, has two kids, is at least 30 years old, there's finally have a decent President in office, world peace abounds, etc.? (Some of that may be a bit of exaggeration, but you get the idea).

Anyway, we're at a bit of a crossroads and are unable to come up with a wise solution (compromise?)

I would truly appreciate any advice you have to offer.

Take care, M--- (or whatever pseudonym you want to give me)

Dear Best Pseudonym Ever:

Okay. Your daughter is a very wonderful young woman. I took a journey with her during her accidents - I "see" it this way: The first accident: Nobody ever really explained "blind spots" to her. There are points in every body's car where other vehicles are not visible.

That absolutely poorly designed side-post between the front windshield and the driver's side window and the same place on the passenger side,

You just can't see anything in that 2 inch space, which equates when combined with poor timing, a big bang. Teach your daughter to use all of her own personal and intuitive senses.

Teach her to feel your hand with her eyes closed: move your hand and place it two inches behind her head. Let her tell you when she begins to "feel you." Do not touch her. Then, play the same game again, only this time place your hands about six inches from each ear. Now very quietly, move your hands towards her ears and ask her when she first, "hears" you and when she first "feels" you.

Now secondly; let go of your fear. She is learning disabled, not retarded. She knows how to drive. She is fine. She is okay. She IS a good driver. She was reflecting and creating for herself, through the law of attraction, that which she concentrated on: Not Having An Accident.

The trouble is - this thinking or thought pattern is such a set up for failure. It predetermines an accident. Who is it that said, "Yeah, that which I feared the most came upon me?"

Well, whoever he is, he is correct. The Universe has no value system of good or bad. It just responds with Creation within the magnetic field of time. Each thought has polarity (positive/negative). That which the human mind perceives is conceived through manifestation.

Each time that she and everyone combined in the "hope of no accidents or the prayer for safety there is an assumptive thought that you are not safe, so you need attention to the matter of safety.

Key word there is NEED. That created a thought of worry, a negative charge chemically issued by the brain within the body, utilizing the neo ephedrine chemical, creating a molecular electron release of a certain register or a. negative charged electron Positive thinking emits another chemical, which elicits a molecular electron with a positive charge.

It seems that the words positive and negative reflect value when associated with events. The positive attracts: positive. The negative: negative. They want to join together to fulfill each other. So, change your thinking, don't worry, be happy. I mean it. Fear and Joy are equal creators. We need to retrains our patterns of thinking in order to attract better life experiences to ourselves.

Also, more simply put, let me help make you feel better: I talked with six of my friends with teenage daughters who just newly got their license.

Here are the informal sorta scientific results: Out of six girls: six accidents, one with three accidents, two with one accident, and one with no accidents but three tickets.

I had a one car very stupid accident three days after I got my license. I got a ticket for a "no left-hand turn" the second day. Neither of those things ever happened to me again, and I have been driving a very long time.

It is the Law of attraction; we keep telling them...."Be careful, you could get into an accident.

Drive safely, I don't want you to get hurt or killed." We understand what we mean, but it may be interpreted as negative.Try instead, "Have a great drive."

You're daughter has fulfilled her statistics. She can drive safely now for quite a while. She can get a job and work part time and pay for part of her insurance. It will help her not to feel like a victim.

I like the 30 year plan. That's a couple of years better than I did with one of my kids.

On the second accident, your daughter speaks the truth.

It was just not her day, and - just because she was so very thoughtful and careful when she told her side of the story, and that was perceived as "rehearsed," which resulted in the insurance going with the most convincing participant, and she was scared - fear - and she realized her fear.

Dear Anna,

Hello there. How are you doing? Well first of all I need to know who is checking my Grandma's mail?

Well see, awhile back we lost our key in the house or in the car or perhaps dropped it somewhere and to this day we still haven't found it. and when I check mail I have this feeling that someone has checked it already. So if you can please let me know or have any clue where we could have lost it.

Lost

Dear Lost:

Well, I do see that the key to the mail box, and probably your car keys were picked up right on the ground, right in the front of your mail box. Not good news.

So, you had just been there, he saw you come and go. He saw and took your keys because he saw you. When he drives, he drives an older model car. He is, in his terms, not a thief but sometimes an opportunist. He is young. Change your key.

Dear Anna,

I wanted to ask you two questions I know some things you can't answer but I was wondering if you could help me find some glasses we lost when we were having a loss and at that time a relative put a big lump sum of money in the bottom of her purse and it disappeared from her purse.

Can you give a sense of direction to where it may have gone or were the glasses are?

Looking

Dear Looking:

I am so sorry that you have had to experience this disrespectful and hurtful act.

I am saddened by what I see. Two people, Two young people. Not behaving well. Being hurtful to friends and family. Saying mean things. Not coming home when they should. Too much drugs. I don't want to say anymore.

Blessings and I will pray for a good resolution.

New jail to open March 2

Facility will relieve overcrowded Pine Ridge and Kyle jails

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribe's new 58,000 square foot adult offender's facility is set for a formal grand opening on Friday, March 2 at 10 a.m. at the new facility located south of Pine Ridge and ready to accept their first formal prisoners at midnight on Saturday, March 3.

Following an opening prayer, speakers will include John Steele, Oglala Sioux Tribe's president, Len Chester, BIA facility program specialist, James Twiss, chief of police and Jeanne Whirlwind Horse, captain of corrections. After opening ceremonies, a noon meal will be provided and tours of the new 144 bed facility.

"It is just a tremendous relief to finally be able to open the facility," said Jeanne Whirlwind Horse, captain of corrections, "we received our interim certificate of occupancy back on Nov. 29, 2006, we went through a trial run with about 18 prisoners for three days which went well and Saturday at midnight

Michaud wins state wrestling title

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

SIOUX FALLS - "We were all tied up at four all and there were 30 seconds left and I knew I had to go for a win," said Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud after winning the 189 pound division state wrestling championship Saturday night at the Sioux Falls Arena, "if I didn't score then we were going into overtime and I think he had more endurance than I did."

Michaud scored a two point takedown in the last 20 seconds of the third period in his 189 championship match against Devin Clark of Sioux Falls Lincoln for a 6-4 win. Clark opened the match Saturday night on the center matt at the Arena with a two point takedown and a 2-0 lead.

Michaud came back to tie it up at two all. Clark went back to work with another takedown and a 4-2 lead only to see Michaud tie it up at four all. Michaud earned the spot in the finals by pinning Kyle Blake of Belle Fourche in 3:33, pinning Tim Marlette of Sioux Falls Washington in 1:38 in the quarterfinals and beating Josh Lynde of Yankton in the semis 4-1.

Solutions sought to increase spirituality for Sicangu youth

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - A 'Faith Based' gathering was held at the Sinte Gleska University multipurpose building on Wednesday, Feb. 21. It was called by Patricia Broken Leg-Brill, Director of the Wanbli Wiconi Tipi, the RST juvenile detention center. The meeting was well attended by more than 100 Sicangu people and exceeded the 2:30 - 5 p.m. scheduled time.

Many were invited guest, while other community members simply showed up to lend their support. Many ideas presented were documented on large billboard type paper and will presumably be used to create a plan for interjecting a sense of spirituality and religion into the lives of Sicangu youngsters. Many youth are discussing the recent suicides among their peers and questioning some of the foundations which are supposed to represent their support system and perhaps, spiritual base.

The purpose was to gather ideas and create a plan for connecting youth with their spirituality somewhere along their journey from teens into young adult hood. By the time some youth have taken a wrong turn and end up in juvenile detention many have indicated that they do not believe in a higher power or have a spiritual foundation.

Broken Leg-Brill introduced Marlies White Hat of the SGU Reclaiming Futures program and RST tribal court judge, Janelle Sully, while Sicangu medicine man Sam Wounded Head prayed in Lakota. Other detention staff that was present included Pat Bad Hand and Tim Guerue.

The gathering saw a number of very articulate Sicangu spiritual and community people who were not only humorous and inspirational,

Politics hold up infrastructure for new businesses

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Tribes who want to grow economically can take steps to cultivate a business-friendly atmosphere on reservations, according to information presented to Native American entrepreneurs and leaders at the South Dakota Indian Business Conference held Feb. 21 and 22 at the Ramkota Best Western in Rapid City.

The conference, organized by several organizations including Lakota Funds, Lakota Express and Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce, featured panels of business owners, tribal administrators or their delegates, and legal experts, as well as individual speakers.

Business owners told of their experiences in getting their businesses started and keeping them operating.

Karlene Hunter, founder of Lakota Express on the Pine Ridge Reservation, said the lease process stood in her way when she started her business in 1996. It took 18 months to negotiate a tribal lease, which should be a 90-100 day process, she said.

When she did get a lease, she said, it was just for five years, not long enough to get a substantial loan.

Lakota Express had to put in water, sewer, and T1 telephone lines because the existing ones were for government and couldn't be used by private sector, Hunter said.

She said tribal leaders wanting to promote business need to look at the total reservation system, to see "how rules and regulations are prohibiting small business from getting started." Tribes should enact Uniform Commercial Codes and ensure a smooth-running judicial system, she said.

Business people need to think independently, as she did when getting into the China market. "We did that without anyone's permission," she said. Native Americans won't be sovereign "until we start acting sovereign," Hunter said.

Robert Laurenz, a member of the Cheyenne River Sioux tribe, started Dakota 2000 and Ranchland Technologies in 1995, providing computer systems and customer service to tribes.

Laurenz, as well as other panelists, emphasized the importance of researching, becoming educated, and having a plan before starting a business. And, "There's no replacement for integrity and honesty," Laurenz said.

Pete Shelton, owner Native American Office Products in Rapid City, said he got started by marketing meat in 1974. He said he had $3.5 million in business lined up in nine months and could have done more but couldn't get a line of credit in Rapid City. He had to do his banking in Nebraska, where he grew up.

Shelton, Laurenz, and but who provided ideas as to how to reinvigorate the youth when it involves spiritual matters. Pastor Gabe Medicine Eagle of Ideal was adamant when he said that the youth should have been invited so they could hear the passionate testimony of some wonderful local speakers and provide their own.

Judge Sully explained the issue that is confronting youth as they progress through the continuum that is their daily life and corresponding social and spiritual life. She said, "This came about when JDC started, when kids started having trouble at school. From there we developed programs for them to get help even before the police are called. We have the First Offenders program, probation, and the Wellness Court. The last resort is detention and then, post-detention. Can they go home and is it safe for them?" There are some holes that need to be filled in. What is missing is a "faith-based" program…the state says there is a separation of church and state, in tribal culture we all believe in the Great Spirit."

Broken Leg-Brill used a bit of Lakota humor when she pointed out that she, Judge Sully and Marlies White Hat are looked upon as three pronged approach; one incarcerates the youth, one holds them in detention and the other works to reclaim them from the justice system.

White Hat spoke of her work with the Wellness Court and noted, "There were over 500 arrests last year. Many are on probation. We asked them to do a substance abuse assessment when on probation. We're missing the spiritual community. A lot have been traumatized and have PTSD."

Detention officer, Pat Bad Hand, of Two Strike community spoke of the many lessons that he has learned from his elders which he often communicates to the youngsters under his supervision. He explained that "time" is a valuable commodity that many people are aware of, yet because of their job demands and other distractions often fail to dedicate enough of it to their child's life. Bad Hand, also a powwow emcee encouraged everyone to stay, eat and have their opportunity to speak. He said, "Don't be like mosquitoes; they like to eat and run."

Fontaine Guerue delivered a good Christian message when she said, "Our children are lost. They don't have an identity. Stop blaming them and work to find a solution. Teach them there is someone greater than they are. Teach families to open their arms up. We want to put up bill boards reclaiming our children."

Mr. Arcoren of St. Francis explains how he set a poor example for his children and has turned to spirituality.

St. Francis elder, Mr. Arcoren said, "I had five boys go through penitentiary. It hurts. It's a bad situation. I drank with my kids. I tell my boys don't do that and they say, 'You did it.' It is the wrong way to bring up children."

Pastor Gabe Medicine Eagle gave a relatively long inspirational message which illustrated his journey from a traditional understanding of Lakota spirituality to his current role as one who believes in the Bible and is able to interpret it very profoundly. He said, "We have a voice deep down that recognizes God. A lot of the time we shut the voice of God off. We have a fear that if we believe it, then we have to conform to it."

Pastor Jack Moore of the Christian Fellow Church also spoke of parental responsibility and its shortcomings. He said, "The problem is when we don't know what guidance to give them. What's wrong with our children is our fault. When we have no future, there is no consequence. We have given our children no hope for the future. The children who are on the streets are going to lead the tribe in the next generation. They don't know how to do that."

Finally, Charlene LaPointe who works at St. Francis Indian School spoke of a survey she conducted at the school. She said, "The survey asked what would you change at your school? One student said, "All our teachers would 'be back in the day' and all would be Lakota speakers. When we hear Lakota, we feel safe. After school we need a big place here where we can hang out. We really want to be here. It's the only place we can about what is going on at home."

New jail

we will accept our first formal prisoners, I believe we will have 10 prisoners from the jails in Pine Ridge and Kyle."

Construction started on the new facility in 2000 with an original opening date scheduled for August of 2004. The $13 million detention facility was funded by the Department of Justice, was built with 144 beds, could hold up to 200 prisoners and includes a large kitchen, a law library, two recreation areas and nine classrooms.

"Construction problems turned out to be the real holdup, there were last minute changes made to blueprints and a number of change orders," said Whirlwind Horse about the many delays in getting the building ready; "there was a punch list of over 60 items to take care of ; we are now going to have the main building inspected while we wrap up the needed changes to the maintenance building - turns out that the propane tanks were installed too close to the buildings and now need to be moved to meet compliance, just part of getting this large and complex facility up and on line."

The new facility will employ 49 staff; currently there are 31 correctional officers employed and ten administrative and support staff.

According to Whirlwind Horse there are eight correctional officer positions open and being advertised; each officer receives a three week training course on the direct supervision process of the new detention facility and has or will complete an eight week corrections training in Artesia, N.Mex.

Administration of the new facility includes Jeanne Whirlwind Horse, captain of corrections, Leon Little Moon, facility administrator, Darwin Long, facilities administrative assistant, Brent Plenty Bull, Robert Clifford, Pam Star, Emma Quilt and Jude Running Shield are lead correctional officers and Delia Conquering Bear is the head cook. Future plans include closing the kitchen at the Pine Ridge jail and moving the kitchen staff to the new facility to cook for both Pine Ridge old jail and the new detention center.

During the first year of operation Whirlwind Horse sees no more than 70 prisoners housed in the new facility while they find out what works and what doesn't. After a year of operation, the new detention facility is able to enter into contracts with the Bureau for BIA prisoners and the Bureau of Prisons for prisoners from around the country.

Whirlwind Horse states that after meeting inspection requirements that the buildings will belong to the Oglala Sioux Tribe, that the Bureau of Indian Affairs will maintain the facility and through a 638 contract with the Bureau there will be operating resources for daily operations.

With two recreation areas, a law library and nine classrooms, the detention facility will have the space to offer a variety of programs including parenting classes, continuing education courses, 12 step meetings, and a variety of therapy programs.

We will need to depend on a variety of tribal programs to assist with these offerings explains Whirlwind Horse.

"It feels so good to finally open the new facility, we will be able to relieve some of the overcrowding pressure on the jails in Pine Ridge and Kyle; I can't wait to tackle the challenges of operating the detention center instead of dealing with all of the holdups getting it up to speed."

Business conference

Hunter all praised the federal "Buy Indian" program that induces government agencies to buy goods and services from tribes.

Shelton said he does the majority of his business with federal government and other states' governments, such as in Florida and Colorado.

But his own state provides no business, he said. "We have yet to sell the state of South Dakota a pencil."

Baptiste "Bat" Pourier, owner of Muddy Creek Oil and Gas Co. and Big Bats in Pine Ridge and three other conveniences stores, said, "Our foundation is sobriety. We had nothing until then." Pourier said people didn't take him seriously until after he'd been sober about five years. Then he "started building a personal foundation for business," he said.

After establishing credibility and credit, Pourier used the BIA grant program, which helped him to secure a Small Business Administration loan. "The rest of the story is, it takes damn hard work," he said.

Pourier said, "It's not easy to start a business in Indian country." Tribal government needs to set up a structure that is attractive to economic development, with separation of powers, UCC codes, longer terms on leases, and the ability to transfer wealth.

Establish that, and "then we'll see people attracted to the reservation to do business," Pourier said.

Linda Szabo, owner of the Soldier Woman Art and Gift Gallery just south of Mission, said she moved back to the reservation to be near her family and when she couldn't find a job, started a business. She had help from First People's Fund and sells strictly Northern Plains Indian art, she said.

Richard Tall Bear Westerman, a member of Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate, owner of Red Nation Furniture, said he recognized a niche and now is the single-source supplier of furniture and fixtures for tribal schools, clinics, and casinos.

If you have a Native American business, you have to do better than a non-Native business, he said. People seem to believe Native-owned businesses charge more, but he is competitive in bidding, he said.

Requirements for successful business are money, sales, and quality employees who are "just as motivated as you are," Westerman said.

A panel of tribal chairmen or their designates shared their observations and experiences in trying to foster economic development on reservations.

"We don't have too many people knocking on our doors saying, 'We have some money to invest and we want to invest it in Indian Country,'" said Robert Cournoyer, chairman of Yankton Sioux Tribe.

To set the stage for entrepreneurship, people need to clean up their credit and get into position to secure loans with collateral.

Cournoyer also expressed frustration with interference from state government. "We could have economic development if the Governor Mike Rounds would play ball with the tribes," he said. The state mouths good intentions but doesn't keep its word, Cournoyer said.

Sam Allen, Economic Development Resource Coordinator with the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe, also finds state limitations to be detrimental to economic development. "Gaming is very lucrative for us," he said, but market studies show that to compete with Minnesota, Flandreau should have 1,500 to 1,600 machines.

Russell Eagle Bear from Rosebud, representing tribal president Rodney Bordeaux, said his tribe does a lot of business with the local bank, but with every transaction, the tribe has to waive some sovereign immunity.

Ron His Horse Is Thunder, chairman of Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and panel moderator, said giving up sovereign immunity is "a real hard pill for us as tribal government to swallow" because tribes have to fight so hard to keep sovereignty.

Michael B. Jandreau, chairman of Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, said there is a danger in doing business of creating a sub-society, diminishing the sense of tribalism. Tribes can't succeed without spirituality, he said, and have to deal with resources as a body.

The tribe has to build its economic base before individual entrepreneurs can thrive, and bringing in outside elements doesn't work, Jandreau said; "We have found at our tribal level we must develop from within."

Stephen Cornell, who is the director of the Udall Center for Studies in Public Policy at the University of Arizona and co-director of the Harvard Project on American Indian Economic Development was a keynote speaker.

Cornell emphasized that tribal governments need to be supportive of entrepreneurs by changing their attitudes, make investments and change institutions. This could mean changing cultural attitudes so that communities see business owners as helping rebuild communities and families.

Last year, Sen. Tim Johnson held a listening session with tribal leaders regarding his Hometown Prosperity Plan.

At that session, Rodney Bordeaux, president of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, said more than $185 million came through the reservation in a year and 80 percent of that left the reservation.

Former Oglala Sioux Tribal President Cecelia Fire Thunder said $200 million came through the Pine Ridge Reservation in a year and immediately $180 million of that leaves the reservation. The discussion at that session was how to keep that money circulating on the reservation.

U. S. Fish and Wildlife proposing to turn over Bear Butte Refuge

STURGIS - The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service is looking at a proposal to divest itself of any interest in the Bear Butte national wildlife preserve and perhaps, turn the management of the sacred site to the state and the Bureau of Land Management.

The mission of the USFWS is to protect wildlife and when recreation takes precedence over wildlife the whooping crane and other threatened species are unable to use the lake area. Bear Butte Lake is managed by the South Dakota Game, Fish and Parks Department and both USFWS and the SDGFP have some say so over it.

The lake is both a state park and a national wildlife refuge for migratory birds and other conservation and is near Bear Butte, a sacred mountain to Native Americans. The refuge was created in the 1930's and usage by an increasing numbers of people has, in turn, seen decreased usage by birds and other species. The lake occupies 180 acres and is 13 feet deep.

The Bear Butte International Alliance is concerned that other alternatives should be examined by the USFWS as they are proposing to stay with the refuge or divest themselves of the area.

BBIA would have them, instead, ask the state to prohibit boating at certain times during the year. If the USFWS would divest themselves of the refuge, it would be left to the BLM and would likely become a "multiple use" area.

The USFWS will hold a open house on the divestment proposal on Wednesday, Feb. 28 and a report on that will be presumably forthcoming. The public can comment on the USFWS plan until April 9.

Mayer of Aberdeen Central in the semis 9-6 but came back to pin Jeremiah Lafazio of RC Stevens in 1:11 for third place.

In his first two matches, Rahn pinned Calvin Freed of SF Roosevelt in :26 and Harrison Hawley of Vermillion in :15, with three pins, Rahn earned the Dale Westberg Memorial Award given to the wrestler who has the most falls at state.

Albert Her Many Horses opened the state wrestling meet in the 130 pound division by pinning Alex Defea of Milbank in 2:53 then was pinned by Ryan Baxter of Stevens in 1:06 and pinned by Dustin Warnke of Mitchell in 2:46 to close out a 26-3 senior year. Pine Ridge's Bruce Jacobs lost to Tim Waterman/SF Lincoln 18-3 and to Cade King/Belle Fouche 8-3 to close out his freshman year.

"This has been a big goal for Bulldawg since he first started wrestling so many years ago," said Dave Michaud, Bulldawg's father and coach after jumping for joy after the championship match win, "he has worked really heard to reach all of his goals whether it is to excel on the football field or the wrestling mat or in the classroom working for a 4.0 grade point average or earning the valedictorian award his senior year."

Young Michaud reached the championship match of the 160 pound division as a sophomore only to lose in the finals; he broke a vertebrae in his neck as a junior and took sixth in state at 189 and this year battled through a dislocated shoulder and partially torn rotator cuff forcing him to sit out for five weeks.

Michaud could very well have wrestled his last match as his future plans call for college and playing football not wrestling.

"It has been wrestling for the last 16 years, I'm ready to move on and really focus on football and getting a college education," said Michaud, "I've looked at the University of Wyoming and South Dakota State University, the journalism program at SDSU is really good so I'm leaning that way - either school it means walking on as a football player and that's OK, I'm used to hard work and overcoming a lot a adversity, I love challenges."

For coach Michaud this is his second state champion, two years ago Trevor Jacobs won the state at 1`30 and the coach sees a bright future ahead for Bruce Jacobs who qualified for state as a freshman.

"That being said, I'm really looking forward to hitting the road and watching my son compete at the next level, it's exciting to see all the hard work pay off, it's worth all of the long hours of hard work and sacrifice."

Meth addiction a major focus at Crackerbarrel

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Meth addiction and its effect on the prison system was a major focus at the last of this year's Legislative Crackerbarrels, held Saturday, Feb. 24, at South Dakota School of Mines and Technology in Rapid City.

Rep. Brian Dreyer, R-Dist. 32, told the crowd that he learned from a personal experience how hazardous methamphetamine can be. He and his wife owned a rental property in Missouri and found out from authorities that their tenant was cooking meth in the house, he said. They eventually had to gut the house because meth chemicals had saturated the paint and floorboards, Dreyer said.

Because meth addicts, as well as other drug and alcohol offenders, are overloading the prison system, 27 sponsors introduced House Bill 1271, which allows the Unified Judicial System to create a drug court, with a prototype program to be launched in the Fourth Circuit.

The bill sets aside $212,193, as well as allowing the addition of three full-time positions, to the Unified Judicial System for costs and workload related to the drug court program.

Tom Katus and Theresa Two Bulls

The proposed law has passed through the House and through Senate judiciary and appropriations committees and now will go to full Senate for a vote.

Another bill designed to keep addicts out of prison, House Bill 1072, provides funding for statewide 24/7 sobriety programs that require drug and alcohol offenders to be monitored by regular blood and urine tests. The bill appears to be headed for approval; it has passed through the House unanimously and will now be heard by the Senate.

Rep. David Lust, R-Dist. 34, said he hopes that a drug court and 24/7 program will help "stem the tide" of addiction.

Both programs will allow criminals convicted of drug or alcohol offenses to undergo intense supervision and rehabilitation rather than going to prison, which could alleviate prison overcrowding, Lust said.

A West River minimum security prison might have to be delayed for a year if land for construction isn't found. Sen. Bill Napoli, R-Dist. 35, said there were about 11 potential sites that have now been narrowed down to three.

Napoli said South Dakota per capita puts more people in prison than any other state. He said he hopes that the West River facility will be more than just a prison, but will have a strong rehabilitation component.

But Rep. Jeff Haverly, R-Dist. 35, said that time is running out for this year.

If legislators want to get money for the prison project through the appropriations process before the end of this legislative session, they will have to settle on a site fast, he said.

In response to a question about protecting water sources at Edgemont from uranium mining, Sen. Jim Lintz, R-Dist. 30, disagreed that uranium mining will contaminate the water because it's already contaminated.

Citing information he received from mining proponents, Lintz said right now the "radiant content" of the water "might make you glow" if you drink it. He also said the water from the Madison aquifer moves only one foot a year.

"I don't think there is a chance of them polluting the water," he said.

Dreyer answered a question about the possibility of South Dakota's following Minnesota's lead in developing wind energy and other forms of renewable energy. Minnesota's legislature recently passed the strongest renewable energy legislation in the nation.

Dreyer said he's not aware of anything that is being done in South Dakota to promote wind energy in the eastern side of the state.

In response to a question about wind turbines endangering bird species, Sen. Tom Katus, D-Dist. 32, said wind energy technology is evolving, and now revolving drums instead of rotors are being used and don't pose the same hazard to birds.

Katus also discussed the smoking ban, Senate Bill 196, which prohibits smoking in public places and job sites except in sleeping rooms, video lottery establishments, and tobacco stores.

Sen. Theresa Two Bulls, D-Dist. 27, testified for the ban on the floor of the Senate, Katus said, and her testimony helped push the bill through the Senate by one vote.

Two Bulls said she has recently been diagnosed with a lung condition that can be a precursor to cancer, Katus said.

Katus said he voted for the bill, but Rep. Mark Kirkeby, R-Dist. 35, said the bill "needs to die." If businesses want to allow smoking, they should be able to, Kirkeby said, and customers have a choice whether to patronize the place.

Napoli also opposes the bill. He said South Dakotans just voted to impose a higher cigarette sales tax, and it doesn't make sense now to cut the profits by limiting smoking.

The discussion became heated when Senate Bill 187 was brought up. The bill would require medical providers to give information about emergency contraception to rape victims.

Rep. Don Van Etten, R-Dist. 33, said that he does not support emergency contraception. He said if a woman who has had "a rape situation" goes to an emergency room with a "fertilized ovum" resulting from the incident, "a lot of people in South Dakota believe a fertilized ovum is a person."

To those people, emergency contraception is abortion because it prevents pregnancy by one of three means, and one of those means is to inhibit a fertilized egg from implantation, he said.

Kirkeby quickly responded, "Not one single time did he (Van Etten) mention the fact that there's a rape victim involved here." He said that when the legislature was hearing testimony on emergency contraception, one medical facility reported seeing as many as 15 rape victims in a month. Kirkeby said he supports emergency contraception out of compassion for rape victims.

There will be no more crackerbarrels this year, but the legislative session continues through March 9.

RST enacts tribal Lakota language program

Tribal chairmen roundtable on financial literacy March 5

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Sioux Tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, who has an open-door policy for all of his Sicangu Oyate constituents generously sat for a quick update on one priority he has worked on, while explaining a trip he will be taking to the Ft. Randall casino when the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association meets on Monday, March 5.

Several years ago, the RST council passed a resolution designating the Lakota language as the official language, apparently to be used during council meetings and for other official actions.

However, it was never fully implemented as many tribal officials in their efforts to comprehend and maintain the Lakota language, mirror somewhat the struggle that many in the community are encountering.

For most distinct tribal nations, the evidence and maintenance of their native language is what makes them truly distinct from other ethnic people of the world community and without that the differences and uniqueness of a culture sometimes become blurred.

Area schools, Sinte Gleska University and other institutions are working to teach Lakota, and Bordeaux believes that RST should take the lead in rededicating themselves to the process, while making a renewed commitment to language learning and preservation. In fact, the RST council has committed $124,000 for a Lakota language program and a project coordinator. Bordeaux said, "The tribe is depending too much on schools and the university. My position is that this effort should come from the tribe. I am working with the university with all their resources."

One tribal member was heard discussing a lecture that she heard recently from Victor Douville of the SGU Lakota Studies Department. Apparently, Douville cited a hypothetical situation one day when officials from Washington might come down ask tribal members to speak Lakota and if they were unable it might have some bearing on their recognition as a tribal nation.

Bordeaux said that he consulted with Victor Douville and they created a job description and qualifications for the "RST Tribal Lakota Language Program."

The position will require a mature Lakota speaker with a master's degree in communication or equivalent and who is alcohol and drug free.

A computer learning program called "Rosetta Stone" which is used to learn foreign languages very quickly by the military and others will be used to teach Lakota. Bordeaux said it is a style of learning that is taught on a CD and that RST Attorney General, Dana Hanna, swears by as he is learning a couple of foreign languages.

In addition, the federal government has made a recent commitment to Native language preservation through the Martinez Language Preservation Act and it will make grant funding available at future date for language maintenance and preservation through the Administration for Native Americans.

President Bordeaux will be attending a "Financial Literacy Roundtable with Native Tribal Leaders" at the Ft. Randall Casino and Hotel hosted by the Yankton Sioux Tribe.

The Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association will meet with U. S. Treasurer, Anna Escobel Cabral at 10 a.m. on March 5. Tribal leaders from 16 tribes in the Great Plains region have been invited. A press conference will follow immediately after the meeting.

In the afternoon, the GPTCA will hold a meeting at 1 p.m. during which appropriations for the Great Plains Region will be discussed as well upcoming hearings in Washington, DC. The Alliance of Tribal Tourism Advocates will also present to the tribal chairman, as well as discussion on the upcoming hearing of the case "YST vs. Gaffey" a boundary diminishment case. It is apparently an important case for all tribes since it will concern case law which will be made regarding the diminishment of Boundaries Reservations, according to A. Gay Kingman of the GPTCA.

Bill would establish Indian education effort

PIERRE (AP) - A state Senate committee unanimously embraced a bill Tuesday that would set up an Indian Education Office in South Dakota and an advisory council with representatives from each of the state's nine tribes.

The efforts are aimed at making sure teachers are knowledgeable about the American Indian culture in South Dakota.

The legislation would require all new teachers from out-of-state and those who were certified after 1993 to complete a three-hour course in South Dakota Indian history and culture.

Also established by HB1290 would be a pilot program to offer Lakota language instruction to teachers.

The bill was passed earlier by the House. It now goes to the Senate floor.

Thoughts that come from the heart

My son's song touches the lives of many

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

This past week has been a hardship for my youngest son Jeremy Lee Takes War Bonnett, he will be undergoing a tough time in his life for a year. Jeremy and I aren't bonded like I am with my other three children because of divorce. Jeremy was more connected with his father than his mother and chose another lifestyle.

Regardless, he was born my youngest and in my mind is my baby boy. When he was 16 years old Jeremy got himself in trouble and since that time has came a long way to where he is now. He grew spiritually, emotionally and physically in leaps and bounds. I watched him unfold just as a budding rose does, you know that feeling of seeing such splendor of the image that invokes such a beauty that it is hard to describe in words. Then again as mothers, we always tend to paint images of children in hues that are bright and shining, it is just our nature.

Last week, I heard two men who had control of a slice of my son's life tell him in an around about way that they thought he didn't do much in his life and it wasn't worth the money they thought he should have.

I am taking this space to tell my son publicly that he has done a tremendous lot in his life in the last five years. I praise him for that, for he has touched the lives of many people in an indirect way. The very words on the pages of this newspaper are part of what he has created in his life.

You see when Jeremy went through some trauma in his life and made mistakes, he made a conscious decision to do better and worked hard to make that happen. He knew he had an addiction and he knew he had emotional issues to heal and despite the barriers he had to work with, he was persistent to achieve the goals he set out for himself. His main goal was to heal a wound that kept festering in his life and he worked hard at it.

He learned his song.

He often said that he had to learn how to control and understand his own emotional behavior and only then will he be able to be productive in what he needed to do achieve his goals.

Jeremy was the tail end of a nearly 28 year relationship and he didn't quite make it like the rest of his siblings to have that nurturing structure of a two parent family.

Then on top of that, he experienced losses in his life with people that had much value to him and he just didn't quite know how to promote his own recovery from that grief.

There was so many times I often felt guilt for not giving him what he deserved and when I would talk to him about that, wanting to seek some sort of absolution for it, he helped me to let go.

Jeremy went through recovery to gain a better understanding and to analyze who he was and where he was going. He grew spiritually, emotional and physically and academically.

In the process of his recovery, he touched my life immensely.

He taught me so many things that I didn't quite understand before.

But his simple beliefs and his simple philosophy about life taught me to seek a better understanding of myself and my own level of spirituality and health.

He taught me about recovery, he taught me about a power greater than myself, he taught me about empathy and most of all he taught me about compassion and healing.

I continue to seek more of that knowledge by continuing my college classes at Oglala Lakota College in human services to learn methods of healing.

And believe me it is hard to attend classes and trying to publish a newspaper and be a mom and a grandma.

When I began to understand those issues, especially about empathy, it was then I realized that I needed to do more than what I was doing in life.

I wanted to find out what happened to Jeremy's parents where they couldn't be there for him.

It was in trying to understand my son's plight that lead me to make a decision to help others in cultivating a parenting program for Lakota families that were in that same spot that we were once in.

That program eventually touched the lives of nearly 125 parents that were seeking the same thing I was at one time. My hope is what they learned would makes a difference in the lives of their children.

Jeremy taught me simple things about life that helped me heal my own wounds of loss.

In that process of healing and learning, I made a sound decision to take an offer to publish a newspaper that would promote truth and integrity and hoped to somehow entwine the richness of the culture and language.

There aren't enough resources going on in our communities for the hurts and pains that my family went through and somehow I thought by offering simple words here and there throughout the newspaper about healing would help, even just one person then I would do it. And I was surprised at how quickly Lakota Country Times has grown with the print edition and the online edition with a weekly readership of an estimated 10,000 people.

No, I would not have taken the task of doing this if I didn't have my youngest son to teach me about one of life's simple philosophies - heart.

In his healing journey, he taught me about love and compassion. He taught me about the simple things of life that take us a long way.

In his healing journey, he taught himself how to play the flute for healing and his songs truly touch the heart. They touch mine.

Jeremy didn't connect with his spirit alone, he had the help of good people with heart like Francis White Lance, Carmen Cutt, Kevin Locke and Earl Bull Head and his family.

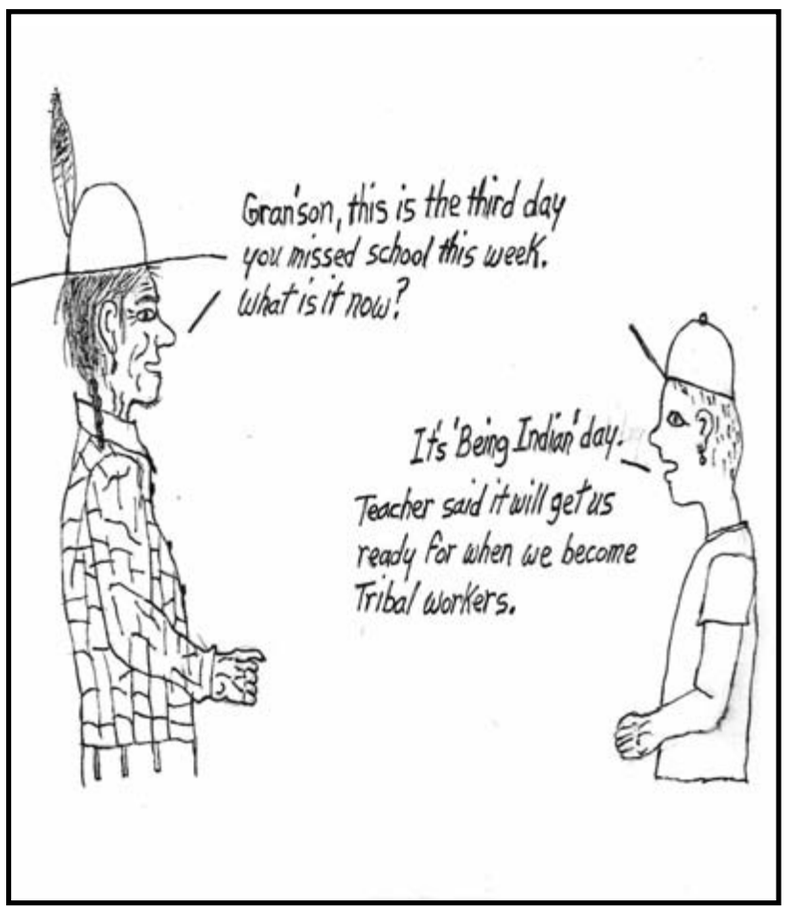
One time I was late for a meeting with a therapist because I believed I needed counseling about co-dependency. You know co-dependency is one social illness that swirls amidst us and impacts the lives of so many Lakota mothers and grandmas and their families.

We sincerely believe that it is something that we need to do to make our families survive. It isn't, we hurt our children more than we help and yet we continue to do it.

I saw Jeremy on the way to the therapist's office and he inquired where I was going and I told him and he said to me, "Why are you spending money on something you already know." Then with that silly smile of his, he told me to save myself some money, "Buy me a pop and a bag of chips and I will tell you what she is going to tell you."

He told me, "Don't be worrying about me and about dad and about things you can't control, just be happy everyday with what you have. Look ahead of yourself."

Those words made an impact on my life, and I probably never will be completely free from being co-dependent but I have a good start.



In my office, above my computer and phone I have a framed photo of Jeremy with his beautiful, flirty smile and everyday I think of him and the power he brought in my life and the decisions I make that day, I think of Jeremy and I think of - heart.

Every week when I go into the inipi to pray, I pray for my sons and I pray for healing for those that are like Jeremy so they will find joy.

So you see my son, you touched the lives of many through your mother, your father, your siblings and the image you paint to others of your spirituality.

It may not be worth the money they think you should have but the strength of your spirituality is worth more than money ever will be.

Sicangu's Lakota Women for Change respond to article

Dear Editor:

I am responding to an article in the Lakota Country Times regarding Rosebud's Secretarial Election.

A quote from Fern Bordeaux indicates just how much confusion there really is about this election. Fern, who sits on the governmental affairs committee, seems to think that the Lakota Women for Change were somehow responsible for this election process. She indicates that we had some responsibility for educating the public regarding the amendments.

While we are ready to assume our responsibility as citizens, the name of our organization appears nowhere in the law.

In fact, since the day we turned in the completed petitions, our name was never mentioned and we were never notified about the progress or lack of progress in the process that would lead to the election. We waited with everyone else to hear what the Bureau of Indian Affairs was doing about the election.

Since we are not a governmental organization, neither the Bureau nor the Tribal government had any obligation to notify us.

Contrary to Fern's belief, comments on the amendments from the solicitor's office were sent directly to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, not to the Lakota Women. At that time, the BIA was in a tangle of confusion because the solicitor's office disapproved of many of the amendments. They wanted the Tribal Council to correct the amendments pursuant to the Solicitor's comments.

The Task force and the Lakota Women took the position that the Tribal government had no right to change them. The task force further took the position that their job was done and they would not take on the task of asking people to fix their amendments.

The Lakota Women, being outsiders to the process, wanted to be careful that we didn't overstep our boundaries.

We decided that the proper procedure would be to get the Governmental Affairs Committee to go to the tribal council and request permission for us to bring together the people who had proposed the amendments. Nothing happened.

We then went to the superintendent and asked if it were possible to delay the election until we had a chance to go to the tribal council ourselves.

The superintendent informed us that only the tribal council could request a delay. Shortly after our meeting with the Supt., the Election date was announced.

The concerns discussed at the Council meeting on Feb. 14 were twofold.

One was the confusion over the amendments and the other was the lack of registered voters. Council people indicated they had received many calls from people living on the reservation who had not received registration packets.

Obviously, the BIA felt that they needed to rush the election after so many months of delay. A little public education and information prior to sending out the registration packets would have allowed the people some time to be prepared.

It would have been a perfect opportunity for the Office of the Special Trustee (OST) to update their records as well. As it was, many people had not updated their addresses in many years, and got lost in the shuffle. We don't think about the BIA or OST when we move.

Rushing into a Secretarial Election is not in the best interest of this Tribe.

Every word in the Constitution will be read and debated for years to come. The Solicitor's comments are important because the BIA still has the authority to accept or deny any amendment, even after the election.

They are not anxious to interfere in our right to govern ourselves, so they may just allow us to make huge mistakes and have to live with it.

We, as a tribe, made some mistakes from the beginning of this process, and we can learn from them. We need to amend the ordinance that sets up the Taskforce and the process of the actual "convention."

We need to have some criteria for the proposed amendments and we should limit the number of amendments that can be accepted by the convention. It should not be up to the taskforce to choose what is accepted or rejected. We should have an actual convention where people sit down together to draft amendments and vote on what should or should not be done.

I am proud of the Sicangu people for having the foresight to provide the people with the right to change our own constitution.

I believe we are the only Lakota tribe to do so.

We will get through this and we'll do better next time.

Notes From Indian Country

The view from a red state with a red neck

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Many Americans view South Dakota as a backward red state. It is not a red state because of the nine Indian reservations within its borders because the voters residing on those reservations are historically blue. Check an election-day map by coloring all of the red and blue counties and you will find that every Indian reservation in the state will be colored blue.

It is a red state because its legislative body is fast becoming the most determined "morality police" in the nation. The state became a laughing stock last year when it tried to push through an anti-abortion law that would have put doctors in jail. The voters put the proposed law on the ballot and soundly defeated it.

Was that the end of it? Not on your life. Here it is 2007 and the "morality police" in state government have made amendments to the defeated proposal and are trying to get it passed again. Last week a legislative committee suffering from abortion fatigue rejected this year's version of the abortion ban.

The bill was amended to include exceptions for rape, incest and the health of the mother in an effort to put the objections of the majority of state citizens to rest. But the bill is not dead yet. State Senator Dennis Schmidt of Rapid City, a Republican of course, said, "It's too important. It's a life-or-death issue."

I am reminded of a comment I saw on a blog on huffingtonpost.com. It said those lawmakers pushing to overturn Roe v. Wade "are a bunch of old white men trying to tell women how it is to be a woman." It is ironic that Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) has joined this religious parade.

Last year we had a bunch of tribal council members on the Pine Ridge Reservation trying to do the same thing.

They broke with a long history of culture and tradition in order to express their new Christian ethics. They impeached their first ever woman president, Cecelia Fire Thunder, because she was an advocate of Roe v. Wade.

In the turbulent 1960s and 1970s South Dakota was known amongst American Indians as the Mississippi of the North. Racial prejudice and discrimination was not only widespread but also inherent to a white culture still steaming over the demise of Custer and his 7th Cavalry at the Little Big Horn. Troopers sporting Seventh Cavalry banners still march in present-day parades.

White South Dakotans are still enamored of an editorial written in 1891 by L. Frank Baum in the Aberdeen Saturday (SD) newspaper calling for genocide against the remaining Sioux population after the massacre at Wounded Knee when he wrote, "perhaps we should wrong them one more time and wipe these untamed and untamable creatures from the face of the earth." He must have been thinking about that comment when we wrote the flying monkey scene is his book The Wizard of Oz 10 years later.

When I was a student at Holy Rosary Indian Mission on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, a school run by the Jesuits of the Catholic Church, there was a strict code fashioned by the Church that governed the morals of movies produced in that era. On the one night of the week when we were allowed to see a movie we had no idea that the movie we watched had to be approved by the Church.

Things haven't changed much in communities like Rapid City. The local movie theater owner decides which movie is going to be shown in this city. It reminds me of the good old days when the Catholic Church did the same thing.

When the Michael Moore movie Fahrenheit 9/11 came out a couple of years ago many of us had to make strong vocal protests to the theater owner before he would screen the movie. The Last King of Scotland and Queen have not been shown in Rapid City yet although the lead actors in both movies have been nominated for Oscars.

That's the kind of mind control and moral policing I am talking about that is a regular occurrence in this fair state.

Indian columnists like myself are barred from writing for the state's two largest dailies, one owned by Lee Enterprises and the other by Gannett. I am sure that neither Lee Enterprises nor Gannett would approve of this censorship if they knew about it. It is strictly a local decision. The old adage that "Freedom of the press belongs to those who own the press" is never truer than in South Dakota.

When a white columnist for the local daily can compare the Pine Ridge Reservation to Iraq and get away with it that should tell everyone about the state of mind in this state.

Former Democratic Senator Tom Daschle just endorsed Barak Obama for president and since Daschle is from South Dakota his endorsement will hardly matter because this red, red state will never go blue for a black man.

Perhaps South Dakota would shed its identity as a "redneck" state if its legislative body and its governor spent more time trying to solve its horrendous racial problems between Indians and whites and worried less about policing the morals of its mainly white citizens.

The efforts of racial reconciliation in South Dakota died with former Republican Governor George Mickelson and there hasn't been a politician or governor of courage and true morals since. It seems they are too worried about telling women what it is to be a woman.

Words from the 'trenches'

The warmth of a hand written letter

Connie Smith-Blanco

One of the benefits of working here at the Lakota Country Times is, it never gets boring! A few days ago I opened my email and there was a message from New Zealand! A lady there really likes our paper and took the time to tell us about it. (Both of us have the same opinion of the paper, and both of us are sitting in front of computers in zero degree weather.

Of course we're both sitting cozy "inside" with the heat on, (at least I hope she is, because I certainly am.) With my arthritis there's no way my fingers would obey me if they were forced to type outside. They barely obey me inside when it's warm. Thanks New Zealand for the kind words!

Another surprise…. a phone call "and" an email from a lady in Alaska. She inquired into advertising "and" selling our paper in her store. What a coincidence…hearing from two people reading our paper in colder weather than South Dakota!

Another coincidence…..my last week's cartoon talked about our "Eskimo cousins in Alaska".

When I emailed my response to Alaska I told her I hoped she had a good sense of humor because two days prior to her call I'd done my first cartoon about Alaska. Apparently all is well, because she still wants us to mail her 10 papers each week.

Looking through our snail mail each week gives me hope that the written word (written on real paper with a real pen or pencil) is not dead yet, despite the popularity of the internet. Don't get me wrong, we enjoy hearing from you folks out there in internet land and please keep those stories and opinions coming.

I just have a soft spot in my heart for the handwritten letter. I suppose it's old fashioned, but getting a personally addressed envelope in the mail has its own appeal. When you hold the letter in your hands, knowing someone far away took the time to buy a stamp and the effort to mail it from the post office ..... well it just seems special.

Amanda and I enjoy any and all the correspondence we get, whether snail mail or email. It helps us remember that our readers do care about our paper and the issues they find in it each week.

Last Friday, Amanda and I sat in our office while the snow fell and the wind blew and our cars didn't want to come to work.

We both tried to make phone calls to various people in schools and tribal offices across the rez but could get no response. We had to remind ourselves again that Friday was a tribal holiday and that no matter how many calls we made, there would be no answer on the end of the line.

We both started laughing and asking ourselves once again…did we both make the right decision to leave good reservation school jobs with paid federal and tribal holidays?

Is it worth it working at a job where your only paid vacation is the week you stayed home because you were too sick to drive?

Our answer, once again, was yes! It's worth it to have the freedom to speak our minds and print what's on other people's minds. And besides, working at the school never brought me emails from New Zealand and Alaska. It only happens here in the trenches.

Connie Smith-Blanco, Oglala Lakota, is co-owner, business manager and marketing director of Lakota Country Times. She has pursued a music career in Oklahoma, Tennessee and lived near her sister in Texas, and after 30 years moved back to her roots in South Dakota with her children.

Finding My Voice

'I always knew he had it in him'

Dana Lone Hill

This story actually starts back in like, 1982.

First of all I want to say that I was always shy (still am) and most of my brothers friends were also my friends (you know, the nerdy older sister that keeps hanging around.)

So Trav and Dirty Steve (he wasn't "dirty" back then) knew each other since kindergarten. Dirty Steve is probably the smartest person I know in real life.

Sometimes he makes me so mad, okay most times, because he always has a solution, or two cents to put in, that makes more sense than what I just said.

He is probably like that guy in "A Beautiful Mind" film. He looks at things as mathematical problems, equations, formulas, solutions, what ever he sees.

Anyway, back in 1982 they tested kids in our school. I just remember it being in the spring of 1982.

In the fall of 1982 when we came back to school, a lady came to my class and singled me out to go with her. She was going around the school and gathering kids left and right. Dirty Steve was one of them. We followed her into this class room that was split into two sections with bookcases.

"Welcome to Gifted and Talented" she said in a loud voice. So thus began me and Dirty Steve's adventure in Gifted and Talented. For two hours a day, this woman mentally tortured us if we didn't know the answers to something, or if we didn't know the meaning of a word, or messed up playing the piano.

Now, here's where Travis comes in. My brother is smart as heck too. Really. He's clever, sly, and YES TRAV ON THE IQ TEST WE TOOK IN JR. HIGH YOU WERE TWO POINTS AHEAD OF ME!! Yeah I had to admit it or else. (since there is no forgetting it!)

My brother is, let's say misunderstood. He doesn't take well to authority, still. On top of all that he's dyslexic and I don't remember when he was diagnosed with dyslexia, but back in 1982 they just threw him in Special Education.

Now if you remember when I was talking about the magical place me and Dirty Steve went for two hours a day, mentioned the room was split into two by bookshelves. Well Travis also went to a magical place, on the other side of the bookshelves.

Yes people, this school put special eduction on one side and gifted and talented on the other. Hey it didn't seem weird to me, didn't bother me, I got to see my brother for two hours a day as he snuck making faces at us, spit wads, and flipping us off.

Now fast forward to 1996 and 1998. My brother worked for this crazy lady named Eileen. He was her head bouncer and she tricked him into being manager.

While he was manager, he hired family and friends and this staff included me and Dirty Steve.

Anyway, soon I was the head bartender, Travis enforced a dress code on us employees, except the entertainment. We were pretty professional , the atmosphere of the bar changed and business was booming.

One night after we cleared the house of everyone and restocked, Travis called us all to the bar for a shift drink and a shot. We had worked 13 hours that day and we were ready for it.

"Sister, make us some Hawaiian Shooters and give Dirty Steve a Tequila!"

Travis held his shot glass up and said:

"Before we drink this tonight, I just want to say to the two smartest people I know, Dirty Steve and Dana, do you remember back in the day when you guys were in gifted and talented and I was in special ed. Do you remember that school had the audacity to put us in the same room, and the only barrier was those bookshelves that we could see over?"

He continued, "I used to watch you guys plucking away on the piano or computer, or playing stock market. Then I would go back to my blocks, trying to fit them in the right holes. Do you guys know what that did to my eight year old dignity and self esteem? Well you know something, I am over it, it don't bother me anymore,.... my employees. Salute!"

Yeah.... we remembered. I always knew he had it in him

'Dooche' Clifford, you are the man

Dear Editor:

It has been a great while since I last wrote any type of article of respect and character for anyone. Matter of fact since Mr. Tim Giago owned the old Lakota Times and the last one was when the late great George Mickleson passed on.

But all in all, there comes a time in all of our lives when we all look back on our lives and learn from our mistakes and move on with the help of our Creator. There also comes a time in our lives when we look back on our past lives and actually see whom has helped us through trials and tribulations in which certain circumstances put us up against the wall, rather it be death of a loved one, or separation of a loved one for a spell, or just everyday needed answers to life's everyday struggles that we can't answer so we reach out to people we trust in and respect in ways that at times we need Mom and Dad to answer these questions of temperature.

There were such respected men in my life like Jake Little Thunder, Dawson Has No Horses Sr. and Jr., Robert Stead of Rosebud, John Around Him and many respected spiritual leaders of this category whom are now with the rest of our ancestors out there at peace forever but all left a legacy behind for me to study and follow and respect forever.

Such a man is still with us today and I want to show my gratitude and respect and thank you to him for all the times in my past I knew him in my community of white Butte south of Manderson.

I remember when I lost my son and many relatives he gave me a hug and handshake and told me to move on and don't look back, that some day you'll see them again. He wiped my tears like a father would and I respect and thank you for this.

I seen him reach into his pocketbook along with his wife and help many people in dire need with money, food, and things of survival we all need. Mainly love and understanding! He expected the Lakota way of life as well & always will. How?

I seen this man one day love his cats, dogs, pigs, birds, horses, and one day even a cow came around the corner, a full grown cow, and mooed and he said "got darnit I suppose you want loving too, and are hungry." I thought this was so cool it knocked me off my feet and thought to myself, if this man is gifted from the spirit of Saint Francis of Assisi - the saint of lover of animals. And that's that!

I watched him go through his trials and tribulations of life as well and I asked him for advice and he told me like it was. Like a man to "to man up" because life ain't no bed of roses everyday.

This I know, but what I didn't know then and know now was your worst enemy could be your so called best friend and its now that I see this but he helped me to realize that life is full of ups and downs forever. A roller coaster.

He helped me to forgive and forget although its hard to do.

This man, my friend and people, is my neighbor and before his time is up I want him to know regardless.

I respect and appreciate all you have done for me and my family and children and people you have helped. Including God's creations-the animals that you once said "they like to eat too."

So Mr. Darwin "Dooche" Clifford you are the man and we thank you and may God bless you forever.

Lakota society is being challenged

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Life on the 'rez' is being challenged from many different quarters and the essence of what it is being transformed into is something difficult to define. There are a lot of negative influences from high unemployment, health issues, funding difficulties, winter weather and a host of other pressing issues. I often wonder if city folk are encountering the same fundamental questions as to their long term evolution.

As we also worry about language preservation and loss, maintaining traditional values and the influence of a new generation of outsides influences, we must also work to counter that with a lot of positive examples of achievement and down right hard work.

There are a lot of very articulate individuals in our midst who often step forward to communicate their concerns and offer solutions.

I was witness to such individuals last week and I was impressed of that fact. I also see a small number of Lakota entrepreneurs, educators and health professionals who are quietly working to make a difference on the Rosebud and that is comforting.

For example, Shelly Harris, at the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital has stepped forward and has quietly done a very commendable job in decreasing the deficit that was apparent when she took over the administration.

There are other people like Patricia Broken Leg-Brill and Pat Bad Hand at the Wanbli Wiconi Tipi who are working closely with youth in detention by having them reconnect with their communities.

Actually, there are too many good Sicangu people who are also working quietly to influence our youth in light of the recent suicides, so I best not try to focus on too many as someone will certainly be omitted. Richard Iyotte at KINI FM radio is continually creating public service announcements that highlight high achievers or local people who have faced uncertainty, who grew up just like the rest of us and then, over came adversity and are doing a great job of modeling good mature behavior.

I attended a lowanpi last night and was quite surprised and happy to see six young people participating and praying for the "oyate." We need more of that fundamental spirituality to spill over to other young people who can positively influence others. We cannot afford to lose any additional youth to suicide and violence. Each time I hear of an adolescent passing into the spirit world in such manner, it saddens me as it goes against everything we believe in with regard to the sacred nature of children.

Pastor Jack Moore of the White Eagle Christian Academy said last week that we have not given our children the skills they need to be our future leaders and I second that.

We need more Lakota men to guide our young people, to set limits and spell out expectations and we simply are not doing enough of that. We are simply not visible in certain professions. There aren't enough medical doctors, teachers, and lawyers who are Lakota and that disappoints me.

I think that when young people are occupied in carving out a niche for themselves in any successful venture, they simply get so busy they do not have time to fall behind and experience the kind of disappointment that many of us occasionally feel because we did not reach our full potential.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

943 attemped suicides and 5 completed show we need to give back to youth

Phil Two Eagle
Sicangu Lakota
Rosebud, S.D.

I want to express my concerns about the elimination of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Youth Affairs Program in Fiscal Year 2007. In 1994, after many meetings and work, A group of us developed and presented a proposal to create the Youth Affairs Program in 1995. What triggered this was and still is the many problems with violence and suicides, at the time I was director of the JOM program then under the Local Indian Education, Inc. (LIE). LIE administered the JOM and Higher Education Scholarship programs at the time and was doing quite well at the time. I was allowed to work on youth and education projects.

As a result the Youth Affairs Program was created after several past attempts to address the needs of our youth. During this time the tribe was experiencing an alarming rate of violence, suicides and suicide attempts. Back then the youth proclaimed that there was nothing to do out in the communities and that there was way too much idleness and lack of activities. The RST Youth Affairs Program was originally created to address the problems of the youth with a tri-folded approach. Firstly, the tribal council approved the creation of a Youth Affairs Committee that consisted of tribal programs and other youth related organizations to combine resources for the youth. Secondly, the tribal council approved the creation of a Youth Council consisting of the youth themselves to provide leadership, solutions and communications with the tribal council.

There would also be the creation of Community Youth Councils in every community. These efforts were to provide direct funding, activities and services out in the communities. Thirdly, the tribal council also approved of the creation of the RST Youth Affairs Program to administer, seek outside funding and provide assistance to the Tribal Youth Council's and the Community Youth Councils in their development.

However, early into the program tribal council action abolished the Youth Affairs Committee.

The Youth Affairs Program then became a processor of vouchers and issued checks to youth groups for mostly sports activities. In my view the program never had the opportunity to run its course and turn into what it was meant to be.

I think that the tribal council should reconsider their action and continue the program to do what it was meant to do with maybe new leadership. I can see the Youth Affairs program providing advocacy, leadership training and technical assistance to the youth in the communities.

I can see the youth providing their own leadership and solutions for the matters that affect them.

The Indian Health Service and the South Dakota Office of Vital Records reported in the Feb. 14 Todd County Tribune that there were 943 suicide attempts with five completed suicides per year. So as you can see, I am urging the tribal council to rethink this since they are the ones that make the final decisions.

Holiday celebrates 'one step forward'

By Natalie Hand
Guest Editorial

On Feb. 27 we celebrate the 34th anniversary of the liberation of the Oglala Lakota Nation. While a few will celebrate this as a paid day off and a chance to go to town, others will wocekiya and offer a wopila to remember those that fought and died for the rights of the Oglala.

What the American Indian Movement did for the oyate in the late 1960s and 1970s took bravery and fortitude. As the song goes, "… freedom's just another word for nothing left to lose!". It was an indelible step forward for the Oglala.

One step forward.

In the 1970s, AIM fought to stop corruption from the lowest level of government, i.e. tribal government, to the highest level in Washington, D.C. After all, the IRA governing body on Pine Ridge is merely an appendage of the U.S. Government. That is an indisputable fact. The majority of the oyate on Pine Ridge were suffering, families were homeless, many lived well below the poverty level. Meanwhile a select group of families held all of the jobs and the proverbial purse strings. IRA leadership was hand picked by U.S. Government officials to ensure the status quo. They weren't listening to the grass roots oyate. AIM brought international attention to these injustices. Through AIM's actions, the U.S. Government was forced to address the third world conditions that they had created on Pine Ridge. Housing, education, and healthcare drastically improved as a result of AIM.

One step forward.

Now, 34 years later, what has changed? The IRA Government is still the governing body. The U.S. Government is still protecting corrupt politicians to ensure the status quo. The 2006 Election is proof of that. Only in a communist country or in some Central American country would you find an election as fraudulent as the 2006 OST election. And yet, the illegal Executive Committee and tribal council carry on as though they have done nothing wrong. They aren't listening to the Grass Roots Oyate. Two steps back.

The illegal executive committee and tribal council have held committee meetings in Rapid City for the last two straight weeks. That is roughly $16,000 just for the travel allowances. That does not include renting the facilities, meals, etc. And there are more meetings scheduled for Rapid City in the weeks to come as the State sporting events come to town. You would think that with all the "workshops" that they attend, the tribal government would be one the most efficient, successful businesses in Indian Country. These illegally elected/appointed officials will tell you that they have a budget for such off-reservation meetings. However, that is only because they designed it that way. It is YOUR money they are illegally spending on themselves. Now the guilty will admonish these words I'm typing, but only the guilty will be offended. The grass roots oyate have demanded that a new, impartial election be held immediately. They aren't listening to the grass roots oyate.

Two steps back.

The illegal OST president will publicly state that he has ordered a special panel of independent judges to come to Pine Ridge and investigate the 2006 election and recommend changes. Can you say political rhetoric? The illegal OST President and his staff will stop at nothing to ensure their job security. In Washington they have a term for these types. They are called "spin doctors". Politically appointed staffers that spend their time making their boss look like a hero and covering up his discrepancies. It should be said that it was the White Plume staff that originally made the suggestion to bring in independent judges.

But the intent was to oversee a NEW election. Since White Plume took office, he and his staff made brave attempts to uncover corruption within the IRA system. As soon as the guilty became aware of this, they set a plan in motion to oust him at any cost. Two steps back.

Today, the reservation is in turmoil over the BIA's decision to rescind some federal contracts from the tribe. Everyone is pointing the blame at others for this action. However, the newly re-appointed illegal tribal treasurer knew that this action was coming. She was given notice of this last year. She was told repeatedly to set up separate line items for these contracts. She did not do this. Did she get reprimanded for her poor performance? No. She got re-appointed. If the treasurer and the tribal council would stop spending so much time shuffling money around to cover up their misuse of funds, everyone would benefit. They have spent the districts' allocation funds. These reactive accounting practices are hurting the Grass Roots Oyate. They aren't listening to the Grass Roots Oyate. Two steps back.

There is a meeting scheduled for Wednesday, March 7, at 10 a.m. in Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge. Go there and let your voice be heard. Stop this illegal Council from taking us any further back. We must go forward…one step at a time!

We all need to understand the disease of AIDS

Dear Editor:

Two warriors, two young men from the Lakota Nation were out scouting for buffalo. At this point in the history of the Lakota people, these warriors had not experienced contact with the white world. Their generation not yet influenced by the flitter and temptation of the Americanized way of life.

The warriors came upon a woman who was along and seemingly vulnerable. One of the warriors saw the beauty of this woman only through her physical self. Behind his thought was an unnatural desire to control her beauty and call it his own. The thoughts he had to take advantage of this woman for his own selfishness was carried through the generations. Throughout Indian country, this warrior's twisted mentality shows itself in this days time.

The high sexual violence of our women and children, our high unintended birth rates, the great challenges to the reproductive health of our Tribal nations. These types of thought and actions continue to incarcerate and destroy some warriors and keep our women and children at preventable risk.

A white cloud encompassed the two warriors who had come up upon this beautiful maiden.

The warrior who had represented the unhealthy thoughts was said to have died a horrible death.

It is said that he was encompassed by a cloud and when it dissipated, there lie the warrior, stripped of his life force because of his selfish thoughts and actions.

The second of the warriors, the one who respected the woman for the sacred being she is was not destroyed. Because he acknowledged this women with respect, he showed himself as the true Warrior.

This sacred woman who brought the white buffalo calf pipe to the Lakota people brought life lessons that are as important to us today as it was to the survival of our ancestors.

These teachings represent the foundation of who we are today as Native people.

This story brings to light the challenges that all women would face in the generations to come. The warriors spoken of in this tale represent one man and the two paths, choices that all men make in interacting with the women in their lives. The woman who brought this life blessing to the people showed us how the power of respect would lead us safely through he challenges of our lives.

Today to have respect for one another, to have respect for ourselves we all need to understand the disease of HIV/AIDS.

It has been said " AIDS in the Native American community has the potential to wipe out leaders, spiritual knowledge and traditional ways.

The characteristics of reservation life; small, isolated populations, many times living in poverty can propagate an already growing national problem" - Indigenous Woman's Health Book, Within the Sacred Circle.

Native Americans in South Dakota represent nine percent of the overall State population. We account for 15 percent of the overall HIV/AIDS infection rate and 25 percent of new HIV infections since 2001.

American Indians/ Alaska Natives have the third highest rate (above whites) of AIDS diagnoses, yet we have a much smaller, youthful population. Within South Dakota Indian country, we have 46 percent of all Chlamydia cases in the State. This common and curable sexually transmitted disease does increase the risk to HIV/AIDS which does not have a cure.

Indian country has all the co-factors, an environment that produces high risk behaviors and high STD rates within our youthful population which increase the probability of HIV/AIDS within our communities. We will never truly see the whole of the problem until we motivate our people to access HIV/AIDS testing and treatment and make common knowledge of what puts a Native at risk for HIV/AIDS.

March 21, offers a shared opportunity for people to learn. The first day of spring commemorates the first ever National Native American HIV/AIDS Awareness Day - Raising Awareness about HIV/AIDS Awareness Day acknowledges our responsibility as a native community to help one another survive the impact of HIV/AIDS. It offers an opportunity to build healthier relationships through shared commitment to increasing resources for testing and early detection. It offers a meeting of our shared challenges to providing quality of care options for those infected. It gives Indian Country the opportunity to bring light to the challenges of HIV/AIDS and how we can address it through the power of who we are as aboriginal Nations.

Lets take this spring day that represents new life and respect ourselves by getting tested for the HIV/AIDS virus.

Get tested together with someone you love and that respect moves forward ten fold.

State reports first death of flu season

PIERRE - South Dakota's first influenza-associated death of this season was reported to the South Dakota Department of Health Feb. 28.

The death was a child younger than 10 from the southeastern region of the state.

"Flu activity is now widespread in South Dakota. It's important that people practice good personal hygiene to prevent the spread of the disease," said Dr. Lon Kightlinger, State Epidemiologist for the department.

South Dakota is now experiencing the peak of seasonal influenza with widespread influenza activity. Nationally, a total of 15 influenza-associated pediatric deaths had been reported, including four in neighboring Minnesota, through Feb. 17.

Wash your hands often with soap and water

Use hand gel when washing isn't possible;

If you cough or sneeze, cover your mouth;

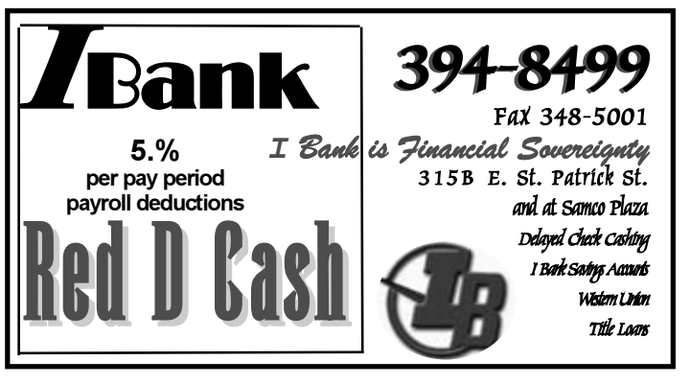
Don't touch your eyes, nose or mouth;

If you're sick stay home.

Influenza is a viral respiratory illness marked by the sudden onset of fever, headache, extreme tiredness, dry cough, sore throat, runny or stuffy nose and muscle aches.

It spreads when an infected person coughs, sneezes or talks, sending the highly contagious virus into the air. Each year in the U.S., influenza results in an average of 36,000 deaths and 114,000 hospitalizations, including many South Dakotans.

Hills of clothes



MANDERSON - Last week, this photo was taken at Manderson. It depicts mounds of clothes and trash bags of clothes that were left over from a very big generous giveaway on the grounds of the St. Thomas Episcopal Church in Manderson. Neighbors are concerned and are urging a clean up of the leftovers. Although many people picked through the clothes, there are still many left over. The clothes are still there despite the strong winds, rain and snow.

Experience wins out as Lady Warriors knocks off #1 Pine Ridge for District 14A title

Red Cloud pulls out tough win over Custer for District 15A championship

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY/SPEARFISH - Maggie O'Neill and Keely Krolikowski had been there before and that experience helped as Bennett County knocked off number one ranked Pine Ridge 74-63 to win the District 14A championship and go on to the Region 7A championship set for Monday.

Pine Ridge took the early lead going up 3-0, 5-4 and 9-8 as sophomore Lacey Weston proved unstoppable in the paint scoring 12 points in the first quarter but the Lady Warriors took the lead 13-11 and never looked back as they fought back each of the Lady Thorpes comeback attempts.

Both teams struggled with turnovers early on but the experience of Krolikowski and O'Neill playing in the big games last year turned the tide in Bennett County's favor.

Last year, Bennett County beat Little Wound in the District finals and got by Todd County to go to the State A tourney where they rebounded from a first round loss to take the consolation championship.

Although they lost Abby Kratovil to graduation and South Dakota State University, the Lady Warriors were led all year by O'Neill's scoring and rebounding and Krolikowski's floor leadership and scoring.

Bennett County needed overtime to get by Winner Monday night 61-59 to win the Region 7A championship and go to State for the second year in a row.

On Thursday, Pine Ridge was led by Weston's 27 points and 11 rebounds; Christian Janis helped with 10 points, six assists, three steals and nine rebounds. Saudia Tasso hit for 13 points and finished with five rebounds.

Bennett County was led by Krolikowski's 25 points, five steals and O'Neill's 24 points and 14 rebounds. Mary Jo May helped with 12 points. Bennett County will head to State in Spearfish with a 21-1 record.

"We had a great year, we learned a lot, matured and gained a whole lot of experience," said Bill Mendoza, in his first year as Pine Ridge coach, "we now need to benefit from what we have learned, work hard in the off season and come back next year and win it all."

Pine Ridge finishes off their year with a record of 21-1 and will lose Robin Webber, Devon Red Cloud and Shaina Lays Bad; everyone else will be back, including all five starters.

Red Cloud was down 6-4 at the end of the first quarter against Custer in their District 15A championship ;game Thursday at the Young Center in Spearfish and even though they had leads of nine and eight points in the second and fourth quarters found themselves tied with Custer with 29 seconds left on the clock;

Below: Pine Ridge's Christian Janis puts up a shot over Bennett County's Laura Porch (5) and Shawna Evans (13) during the District 14A championship game on Thursday night in Rapid City while (Above) Pine Ridge's Saudia Tasso (52) battles Bennett Country's Keely Krolikowski for the ball in Bennett County's 74-63 win over Pine Ridge.

Sophomore Marque Lunderman took the ball and with less than ten seconds to go drove the lane and scored a lay-up in traffic with 2.9 seconds to go for the win, Red Cloud's 15th of the year and their most important one of all.

Lundderman scored eight of her game high 17 in the fourth quarter to seal the win for the Lady Crusaders who under first year head coach, Ted Standing Soldier, Jr. had turned their program around.

Red Cloud lost to Custer in the Lakota Nation Invitational earlier in the year 42-40; Custer was missing their top scorer and Red Cloud hadn't developed their trapping style of defense yet that has forced a number of teams to deal with.

"We stepped up again on defense," said Standing Soldier, "and we cut our turnovers to 10 for the game with only three in the second half, that made a big difference."

Ida Clarke helped Red Cloud with eight points while Lisa Bear Robe added seven points and led the team with five rebounds. Red Cloud is now 15-7 and faces St. Thomas More in the Region 8A championship game on Thursday night at the Civic Center in Rapid City at 8 p.m.; the winner goes to the State A in Spearfish next week.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte downed Stanley County 43-39 to win the District 12A tourney and will face Miller on Friday in Gettysburg for the Region 6A title.

Brittany Azure led the Lady Braves with 10 points while Lacy Leaf helped with eight points and a team leading six boards.

Cherry-Todd Electric worked overtime to repair outages

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - According to Tim Grablander, Director of the Cherry-Todd Electric Cooperative, Inc. his crew of 12 linemen and three other cooperatives worked for up to 36 hours to repair snapped power lines over the weekend. Some 200 households from the Cody and Kilgore, NE, St. Francis, Spring Creek and Rosebud areas were without power and luckily the temperatures and the resulting downed lines were not life threatening.

There were isolated stories of tribal members having to abandon their homes to seek shelter with relatives or community centers which had alternative heating in the form of woodstoves of propane heaters. Some areas in St. Francis and Rosebud had half of the town with power and the other half without.

The situation was compounded by the fact that the roads were slick and began to blow over in rural areas. Sam and Norma Wounded Head of Upper Cut Meat had to seek shelter elsewhere, but reported that their grandson had stayed over night in their home without heat. The Rosebud Police were sent to check on him and apparently he was fine.

In addition to the 12 linemen from Cherry-Todd, 10 other linemen were also called into served and arrived from their respective electric cooperatives in Wall, Murdo and Gregory.

Grablander said, "We responded on Sunday and had a long day on Monday and 98 percent of the lines were prepared. We don't have automatic meter readers. We had many "burn downs" which resulted in 50 breaks from the wind and the ice. We repaired them and spliced them. We also replaced 30 poles."

Personnel at Cherry-Todd also personally manned the phones and a majority of the public seemed to be supportive of their efforts. Grablander said that in future, customers need to pay attention to impending bad weather and make the usual preparations of gathering candles, food, and flash lights. He said, "Storm damage is a common thing and people should use a secondary source of heat if it is practical."

Grablander was previously employed with the Indian

Pine Ridge drug dealer gets almost 30 years in prison

RAPID CITY (AP) -The son of a woman who has been accused of being the ringleader of a cocaine trafficking ring on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been sentenced to almost 30 years in prison.

U.S. District Judge Karen Schreier gave Colin Spotted Elk 352 months in prison and urged him to do his best to live up to his potential after he is released.

Spotted Elk, 26, and his mother, Geraldine Blue Bird, have been convicted of conspiracy to distribute cocaine and of firearms and marijuana distribution charges.

Blue Bird's sentencing was delayed until next month.

Witnesses have identified Blue Bird as the leader of a ring that distributed at least 15 kilograms of cocaine on the reservation and has resulted in 27 indictments to date.

At Spotted Elk's sentencing on Tuesday, a 15-year-old boy who had shot and killed another teenager at Blue Bird's home testified that he and other juveniles held money and distributed drugs for Blue Bird and Spotted Elk.

Rapid City parents hold meetings, voice concerns

RAPID CITY - More than 75 persons, including a number of students from Central High School attended a hastily called community meeting on Feb. 21. Parents and students were upset over an incident on Thursday, Feb. 15 which precipitated the meeting according to a press release from the group.

At the meeting an email from Pat Jones, Central High School Principal, was read to the group. They believed that much of the information was incorrect. The student did have a fractured wrist which was brought to the mother's attention by Juvenile Detention Center. She met them at a clinic and x-rays were taken.

In addition to that incident a number of other items and specific incidents were discussed and a list of demands was prepared from notes of the meeting. Those demands are as follows:

No student should be interrogated without a parent present, especially by persons from the Rapid City Police Department, including Liaison Officer Chris Hansen, Lieutenant Doug Thrash or Detective Kyle Fees. Parents must be contacted by the school when an incident involving their youth occurs.

No student should be written up for the incident that occurred on Thursday because of the amount of emotion and anger involved. If the principal could send out an email containing such false statements, students should be able to express their feelings about the matter.

If there is a sudden hardship I do work with customers case by case. Cherry-Todd penalties are lower than other others across the state. We charge $20.00 to re-connect."

Cherry-Todd has 22 employees and encourages the employment of local people.

Grablander says there are two linemen who are tribal members as well as one employee who works with customers in the outer lobby area.

The Board of Directors has encouraged the involvement of Lakota people, however, there has never been a tribal member on the board which has eight directors, he said.

The boy testified that teenagers had packaged drugs with their parents, users traded firearms and sexual favors for cocaine, and toddlers had access to handguns.

Schreier ordered that the juvenile be referred to by his initials, C.C.

C.C. said he started using cocaine at age 13 and often stayed at Blue Bird's doublewide trailer house in the Igloo Housing after dropping out of school in the fourth grade.

He said he helped ``break up'' marijuana that Spotted Elk sold and cut ``papers'' out of magazines that Blue Bird used to repackage cocaine for sale on the street. C.C. said he sometimes held marijuana or stacks of cash for Spotted Elk.

C.C. named several other juveniles who he said sold drugs for Spotted Elk or Blue Bird. He told of seeing two teenagers doing cocaine with their mother at Blue Bird's house.

C.C. is serving a one-year sentence for involuntary manslaughter at the Western South Dakota Juvenile Services Center. He has admitted pointing a gun and shooting his friend Apollo White Calf, 16, late in 2005.

The crisis team should have been present to talk to students at central on Tuesday.

Statements from students and staff that saw the incident should be taken in a relaxed manner by Gorgie Paulhamus or Josie Peltier. No comments should be made to them during this process. Let them talk and show them respect.

Whenever medics are called they should evaluate not just staff but students as well

No retaliation against students should occur. No retaliation against supportive staff should occur. Targeting people must stop, immediately.

No statements by staff, including teachers, about sending persons back to the detention center should be made.

The disciplinary record of a student should be expunged if the student is found not guilty in a criminal matter or found to not be at fault in any other proceeding.

Disciplinary records should not follow a student if the student has been exonerated in any way.

Indian students (and all students) need to be shown respect and their parents treated with respect.

Demand absolute honesty in reports from both staff, and students.

Specific requirements for clothing worn must be met by all students and no student should be targeted because of their race, as now appears to be the case.

The number of Indian students placed at JDC must be reduced, immediately. A group of parents and students needs to be formed to look at this. Sending a person to JDC for being truant, will not happen in a school that is respectful to all students.

A follow-up meeting is scheduled for Saturday, Feb. 24 at 12 noon at the Oyate Center in Lakota Homes.

At that meeting teams will be formed to continue the activities and to make contact with people who will assist the parents and students.

Tribes urge state to negotiate limit on slot machines

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ Gambling compacts between American Indian tribes and the state were discussed this past week when tribal leaders meet in Rapid City to discuss economic development issues.

The eight Sioux tribes in the state that now operate casinos are bound by contracts with the state to no more than 250 slot machines each.

John Yellowbird Steele, chairman of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, said adding more slots at the tribe's casino would help the tribe and the state.

``Our customers come from Wyoming and Nebraska. We're bringing people into South Dakota,'' he said. ``We're actually helping the economy of South Dakota.''

An expansion plan for the tribe's Prairie Winds Casino that would include a new hotel and conference center could hinge in part on adding more slot machines.

``We need more machines,'' said Eloise Drapeau, secretary of the Flandreau Santee Tribe in Flandreau, which operates the Royal River Casino at Flandreau. ``We're already built to hold 500 (machines) on the floor, so it would be no added expense.''

Drapeau said that especially during weekends, demand at the casino could keep those additional machines busy.

Federal law gives tribes the right to operate the same types of gambling allowed elsewhere in the state and require tribes to have gambling compacts with the state. They also require the states to negotiate those contracts in good faith.

Some tribal members believe the state keeps the limit on slot machines unreasonably low in order to protect video lottery and gambling in Deadwood.

Larry Eliason, executive secretary of the South Dakota Gaming Commission, said the state wants to be fair with tribes but also live up to the ``limited gaming'' philosophy that was stated in law when voters in 1988 authorized gambling in Deadwood, opening the door to similar gambling types on the reservation.

When the Legislature implemented that vote in 1989, it imposed a limit of 30 gambling devices per building in Deadwood and a $5 bet limit which rose to $100 through an initiated measure in 2000.

With the addition of more gambling operations and some creative construction, the 30-machine-per-building limit allowed for 2,998 slot machines and 92 card tables in Deadwood last year. Some tribal members have wondered why Deadwood is allowed 3,000 slot machines when a tribe is limited to 250.

Eliason said negotiating compacts includes a variety of complicated factors.

``The governor and the state need to consider a variety of factors, including the possible impact on other forms of gaming and what public policy is,'' he said. ``Our feeling is that the public policy for the state is limited gaming.''

Today's limit isn't necessarily tomorrow's limit, Eliason said.

Legislative Reports

Still up for debate, minimum wage bill, education funding,

By Rep. Jim Bradford
District 27
D-Representative
Bennett, Haakon, Jackson, and Shannon Counties

Well, we are almost done. As of today, there are nine legislative days remaining in the 82nd Legislative Session. Over the last week, bill topics ranged from education to ethics and secrecy to healthcare.

Many of the education bills came to the House floor. HB 1082, the bill that would force schools to consolidate, passed the full House, 37-33. Three amendments were proposed by Democrats, and all were defeated. The first amendment would have kept certain money in school districts rather than sending it to Pierre. The second amendment would have removed the provision for forced consolidation. Finally, the third amendment would have kept the size of a small school at 200, rather than the adopted 130. I voted for the three amendments and then against the bill. I think HB 1082 hurts many small schools across the state and does little to address the overall problems education faces, namely lack of state aid and paying our teachers. The education funding bills will make their way through the Legislature this upcoming week.

SB 169 was killed in the House State Affairs committee. The bill would have created a legislative ethics committee. The bill had passed the Senate 34-0, but was deferred to the 41st legislative day by a vote of 8-3, with three Democrats voting to keep the bill alive. It is unfortunate that with all of the recent questions posed to the legislature that this bill was killed. The ethics committee is needed and this will have to be addressed during another session.

SJR2 was deferred to the 41st day in House State Affairs. The bill would have put an amendment on the ballot next year that would have made it harder for the legislature to close meetings to the public. The bill was defeated 7-5 in committee with all four Democrats voting not to kill it. Opponents argued there was no problem with current practices and therefore, SJR2 was unneeded. Whether there are problems now or not, this is the people's legislature and meetings should be open to the public. I am disappointed the resolution failed and I hope to see it again in the future.

As for health related issues, the abortion ban was deferred to the 41st legislative day in the Senate State Affairs committee this past week. There was some talk about the full Senate trying to smoke the bill out which would bring it to the floor, but that appears unlikely at this time. HB 1061 passed the House and will appropriate money to provide young girls with vaccinations for the human papillomavirus (HPV), the virus that causes cervical cancer. The vaccinations are needed to combat a horrendous disease, and I voted in favor of the legislation.

With the remaining time here in Pierre, many important issues need resolving. Still up for debate are the minimum wage bill, education funding, and the general appropriations bill.

As always, I welcome all questions and comments. Until next time.

Issues facing Congress are NCLB and Iraq

By Larry Lucas
District 26A
D-Representative
Mellette, Todd

Last week we debated an issue in regard to establishing a minimum size for a school district. HB 1082 passed the House which will require school districts with fewer that 130 students to consolidate or reorganize. The issue on consolidation of schools is a contentious issue and will likely end in a conference committee of legislators from both houses addressing the problem.

HB 1171 also passed the House and will appropriate some $14 million dollars from the recently passed tobacco tax increase to be used for the educational service agencies, career and technical education, schools with increasing enrollments, and for a special teacher compensation plan.

Another Bill, number 1140 which passed the House three weeks ago, will take nine million from the tobacco tax to fund state-aid through the property tax reduction fund. Some preliminary reports are showing that tobacco sales and use are declining which could jeopardize funding for these programs in the future.

The Indian Education Bill that will establish a three credit class on South Dakota Indian Studies for all new teachers along with giving authority to develop course content in American Indian history and culture easily passed the House.

Additionally, the age a student may drop out of school could be raised from 16 to 18. The Senate has already voted 27-8 in support of the change.

The abortion bill that passed the House by a vote of 45-25 failed to pass in the Senate State Affairs Committee where it only received one vote out of the nine members.

One day last week Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth and Senator John Thune visited the State Capitol.

Congressman Herseth pointed out some of the new legislation that has been introduced and passed in the new Congress such as increasing the minimum wage and extending tax relief for Americans.

Two difficult issues that Congress is grappling with is expanding its efforts to include health insurance for more individuals and working to secure funds to adequately fund education efforts to close the achievement gap under the No Child Left Behind Law.

Both Senator Thune and Congresswoman Herseth spoke about supporting our troops in our overseas conflicts.

No doubt the biggest issue before Congress at this time is how to manage, defend, and support the War in Iraq.

State spending will increase for education and health

By Mark D. DeVries
District 26
R-Representative
Bennett, Haakon, Jackson, Shannon

The House met the cross-over deadline last Tuesday. All House Bills were either killed or passed on to the Senate. I was disappointed to see the Task Force education bill, HB 1082, go to the Senate. We were two votes shy of killing it in the House.

The Senate had a similar bill that they passed, SB 157, but some of the most troubling language for schools in District 27 has been removed from their version. There will be some intense negotiations at the end of the session to get the differences ironed out between the Senate and the House. The House did kill HB 1308. This bill would have repealed the 150 percent rule for county assessors as they look at property sales in determining property values for tax purposes in the county, and the bill did not allow ag. land to be assessed on its production capacity.

The House will be dealing with several controversial bills that have come to us from the Senate. In House Education Committee there is legislation, SB 115, to allow the Dept. of Education to write rules for licensed preschools so that they can receive state aid in the future. A bill to raise the mandatory school attendance age to 18 passed out of House Education with only one other "no" vote besides myself. We will fight SB 199 on the floor, but I don't have high hopes of getting it killed.

Another bill we will be hearing in the House that I have received input from constituents is the attempt to raise the state minimum wage.

I am opposed to this legislation for several reasons. At the very least, I think we should wait and see what the federal law is going to do before we start making changes to our state minimum wage law.

Committee action is getting lighter this week as we approach the end of the session. State spending will be increasing for education and health care, but the exact places and amounts of the increases will not be known until the end of this week. Right now I am spending the vast majority of time on taxation and education issues. These were hot topics coming into the session and legislation that is still alive has the potential to make drastic changes in how we tax our property and fund our schools.

Ask Anna

Ask him to place himself in the consciousness of the child and feel the sting of his words as though they were directed towards him. He is exhibiting behavior of an adult child of an alcoholic. He needs counseling.

He does love you. Start from there.

He does want the relationship to work and so do you. That is the good news. Nobody can handle too much direct criticism. He feels any disagreement with his point of view takes away from him.

He is over anxious to keep his house hold under control. You can tell him to relax and to remember that these are little defenseless people. They have no options to remove themselves from the environment so it is up to him as the adult to improve the atmosphere in his home by relaxing his militaristic values.

Keep to the Red Road. Pray that his mind be doctored and his Spirit refreshed. Listen to what your interpreter man tells you about your husband and follow that information.

If your husband continues to live in anger you will have to leave him because you cannot sacrifice your children's quality of life for an adult relationship: you had them first and you owe them first.

I am sorry for you; I know you love him but I also know he doesn't want to listen - he would rather be right than learn a new way of being.The only hope is in prayer.

Dear Anna:

My daughter age 18 ran off with her boyfriend. He is a no-account loser. He drinks and drives too fast; he doesn't work and has no prospects. My daughter called me and she is pregnant. I am sick at heart over this.

What can I do? Can I break them up? Can I get her to move back home?

Sleepless Mom

Dear Mom:

You can do nothing...nothing at all. Release control and accept that your daughter is the ruler of her own life, with her own reality and her own lessons.

She will be all right.

She will leave her boyfriend when the baby is about three weeks old and return home...then you can help her to recover from her hard heart lessons.

Welcome your new tokaja. He is a special blessing. Good Luck Unci.

Dear Anna:

I graduated from college with my degree in business. I can't find a job here on the rez, I have too many bills and feel like killing myself.

Will my life ever get better? I feel like such a loser.

Should I use pills or should I hang myself. I mean it.

Hates Life

Dear Hates Life:

Your hormones are way whacked out. You need to see a physician and a counselor. Please call me...call the paper and give them your phone number I will call you.

You will be employed by June...in a job with Indian Health Services. It is a contract job. You will catch up on your bills eventually...don't let money trouble rule your attitude; we all have money trouble and its something that does not need to destroy the quality of peace in your heart and mind.

You are well loved and all of your family and friends would be traumatically wounded should you bring yourself harm. Just one moment of despair can snuff out all the possibilities of a good and long life. You have a good life - just right now you need special help and attention.

Every human being can fall into a deep chasm of despair - please remember that it is temporary. Please call me...please, please, please.

Keep your head up and your heart open, life will be good to you. Take the chance that it will be good, give yourself time - a lifetime.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

In memory of Myrnette Janis

March 6, 1937 to Nov. 14, 2004

A memorial dinner will be held for Myrnette on April 14, 2007 at Kyle.

Please don't mourn for me;
I'm still here, though you don't see.
I'm right by your side each night and day
and within your heart I long to stay.
My body is gone but I'm always near
I'm everything you feel, see or hear.
My spirit is free,
but I'll never depart
as long as you keep me alive in your heart. I'll never wander out of your sight--
I'm the brightest star
on a summer night.
I'll never be beyond your reach--
I'm the warm moist sand
when you're at the beach.
I'm the colorful leaves
when fall comes around,
And the pure white snow
that blankets the ground.
I'm the beautiful prairie flowers of which you're so fond--
The clear cool water in a quiet pond. I'm the first bright blossom you'll see in the spring;
The first warm raindrop
that April will bring.
I'm the first ray of light
when the sun starts to shine,
And you'll see that the face in the moon is mine. When you start thinking there's no one to love you,
You can talk to me
through the Lord above you.
I'll whisper my answer
through the leaves on the trees,
And you'll feel my presence in the soft summer breeze.
I'm the hot salty tears
that flow when you weep
And the beautiful dreams
that come while you sleep.
I'm the smile you see on baby's face.
Just look for me, my family,
I'm everyplace !

Bush administration proposes $7 billion settlement in Indian trust lands case

Proposal admission of government wrongdoing

By Associated Press and Staff

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. government has proposed paying $7 billion to settle lawsuits over the management of Indian trust lands -- an offer met with immediate objections from tribal plaintiffs.

At issue is a decade-old lawsuit by tribes against the government claiming that the government has mismanaged more than $100 billion in oil, gas, timber and other royalties held in trust from their lands dating back to 1887.

The litigation, filed in 1996 by Blackfeet Indian Elouise Cobell, deals with individual Indians' lands. The money would end the more than 250 tribal cases as well as the billion-dollar Cobell lawsuit over individual Indian funds. In exchange, the administration demands Congress extinguish the government's liability for all future trust claims.

Senate Indian Affairs Committee Chairman Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., said he will hold hearings on the proposal and said the settlement offer is the first time the federal government has acknowledged a multibillion dollar liability for mismanagement of the trust funds over the past century.

Dirk Kempthorne, Secretary of the Interior

"That is a significant admission," Dorgan said, adding that he believes the conditions attached to the settlement offer will be controversial.

In response to the letter, Sen. Byron Dorgan (D-North Dakota), the chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee, said he will conduct a hearing on the settlement offer later this month to give the Attorney General and Secretary of Interior an opportunity to "publicly discuss the origin of the settlement offer and to explain its details." He said plaintiffs would also be invited to take part in the hearing and to react publicly to the settlement offer. He will also invite witnesses from other tribal and Indian interests to present testimony on the settlement offer.

Ultimately, Congress must enact legislation to fund any settlement of the case.

The federal government is currently spending over $60 million a year to defend itself from the lawsuit and has spent more than $300 million in that effort. "It is the role of Congress to ensure that the process is transparent, and that all issues are discussed openly and publicly discussed. I believe that will help ensure fairness for the plaintiffs and help bring closure for the federal government," he said in a press release.

Cobell and one of her attorneys, Keith Harper, said the Interior Department is asking for too much.

Under the terms of the offer, the government would pay $7 billion over ten years, without interest. In exchange

No official word, yet, on RST Secretarial Election 'postponement'

By Archie Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Sioux tribal members are likely wondering what the latest word is concerning the motion for postponement of the RST Secretarial Election scheduled for March 20. Apparently there is no official word, yet, on the request to postpone the election until the end of July as approved by the RST council. The request was sent to the Solicitor General for an opinion as to whether or not it could be moved up.

Sicangu tribal members are being informed of the upcoming election through public service announcements in Lakota and in English on KINI FM radio; another indicator that the election is still on. Rosebud Agency superintendent says that officially the election is on and that the request for postponement was sent on the Regional Director and he is waiting for response. He said he is hoping to get a response in time for the next RST council meeting.

The deadline for registering for the Secretarial Election passed on Feb. 20 when tribal members were to have handed in or mailed their registration forms to the local Rosebud Agency offices in Mission and in Rosebud. At that time, the actual numbers that had registered were 1,085 out of a total of 17,500 enrolled Sicangu tribal members, according to Her Many Horses. The BIA sent out 13, 371 registration packets as of Feb. 13 and 441 of the registration forms were from off-reservation members who registered by absentee ballot.

There was a sense that not enough eligible voters had registered in order to adequately represent the wishes of Rosebud tribal members once the election takes place.

During an Antelope community meeting a couple of weeks ago, several people discussed the Secretarial Election issue in the presence of three RST Antelope council representatives, members of the Lakota Women for Change, and other concerned community members.

District 3 Antelope Council representative, Robert Moore, said he was working under the assumption that the election was all set as originally scheduled and that the February 20 deadline would still be in effect for registering. He seemed confident that a decision would be rendered by the Solicitor General on the morning of February 20 on the request for postponement, but apparently that did not occur.

Another community member was adamant that the RST council had passed the motion to postpone the election until the end of July and cited all the hard work that had been accomplished by the Lakota Women for Change going house to house.

Harold James Fuller, Antelope community member and recent appointee to the RST Gaming for the money, all tribal and individual mismanagement claims against the government would be dropped and the government would be relieved of future liability.

The proposal would also end, over a period of 10 years, most of the government's responsibilities to manage Indian trust lands and would consolidate ownership of Indian lands, which are now often held by many people.

Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne and Attorney General Alberto Gonzales sent the proposal to Dorgan last week, saying they strongly support comprehensive legislation that would help the parties move "from a litigation-oriented relationship to one of economic prosperity, empowerment and self-reliance for tribes and individual Indians."

Harper said the proposal is an insult.

"There's no sum specific for how much is going to be used for Cobell," he said. "It's pennies on the dollar."

He said the plaintiffs estimate the government's liability could exceed $100 billion, though they have in the past considered settling for less.

Cobell said the government is trying to do too much at once.

"It's not fair to throw every problem that exists in Indian country that has been created by the Department of Interior into our lawsuit," she said. "This lawsuit is about individual Indians and accounting."

Interior Department spokesman Shane Wolfe said the department looks forward to working with Congress on the proposal. Congress has attempted to wade into the dispute in recent years, but has yet to find resolution.

"We believe this proposal looks to the future," he said.

An attachment to the letter lists the items an "acceptable" trust reform bill should contain. "The administration is prepared to consider a multi-billion dollar expenditure for this purpose if said legislation ends all actual and potential litigation disputes, associated with those land trusts and is constructed to achieve [trust reform]," the document states.

The attachment calls for enactment sometime this year. In their letter, Kempthorne and Gonzales said the White House Office of Management and Budget, which had been holding up consideration of the settlement last year, won't object if the legislation is consistent with the administration's proposals.

The Administration is prepared to consider a multi-billion dollar expenditure for this purpose if said legislation (as drafted in bill language, not merely outlined in a White Paper) ends all actual and potential litigation disputes associated with those land trusts and is constructed to achieve the following:

Requires conversion of all 128,000 individual Indian allotments, once fractionated interests are reasonable consolidated, into Indian-owner-managed trust status, within no more than 10 years.

*Requires mechanisms and guaranteed priority of all necessary funding (within the overall settlement cap) to consolidate the 3.6 million fractionated interests to the degree necessary to enable individual Indians to gain the beneficial use and enjoyment of their property rights within an owner-managed trust, using both voluntary mechanisms and mandatory authority.

*Includes incentives to enable individual Indian land owners to undertake the duties and responsibilities of property management, and to encourage voluntary conversion to Indian-owner-managed trusts sooner than 10 years.

*Relieves the government of all historical accounting obligations, and deems account balances accurate as of the date of enactment of legislation. Settles all cash mismanagement claims that have been or could be brought by individual Indians, and all land-based mismanagement claims that have been or could be brought by individual Indians (also including disputes about right of way, title recording, trespass, or any others related to land).

*For the tribes requires conversion of all Tribal trust lands into Tribal-managed trust status within 10 years.

*No lump-sum funding. Land consolidation and then settlement administration payouts to be drawn down as needed from U.S. Treasury (i.e., no interest) Funding established up front may be spread over multiple years.

Aim for legislation enactment in calendar year 2007, but recognize that a complex settlement cannot be rushed.

RST Secretarial election

Commission said that it did not matter how many people may have registered by the deadline. He noted that during regular tribal elections the very same thing happens; only a small number of people register and the choices they make impacts the entire tribal membership. A larger bloc of registered voters and a corresponding resulting turnout is desirable, however, that does not always occur for a variety of reasons.

An initial examination of the 27 proposed amendments as certified by the RST Secretarial Election Board and certified by the BIA Solicitor General seemed to reveal a couple of issues which have concerned tribal members. One amendment was too long, while two others seemed to contradict themselves while calling for age qualifications that were inconsistent with each other. Still others thought that 27 amendments were simply too many and that it would change the RST tribal constitution in unintended ways. One amendment seeks to potentially add to the tribal enrollment by allowing non-enrolled members to be enrolled as Sicangu tribal members if they can claim lineal descent.

Also, some RST council representatives noted during an official meeting a couple of weeks ago that more education should have been provided to the "proposers" who wrote the amendments to include additional technical assistance.

The RST Secretarial Election Committee was unable to provide such assistance.

Given that there is no "official word" yet from the Solicitor General's office, it is likely that when a decision is rendered, it would have to result in one of the following; the RST motion to postpone the Secretarial Election to July will be approved, the election will be held as scheduled or the election will not be held at all. Most likely the office of the Solicitor is reviewing some of the same concerns that RST tribal members initially had.

Her Many Horses told the tribal council that under CFR 25 the Secretarial Election could not be held at the same time as RST's general election in the fall.

OLC establishes Matthew and Nellie Two Bulls scholarship

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College has established the Matthew and Nellie Two Bulls Scholarship. Matthew Two Bulls (Oyate Tawa-Belongs to the People) and Nellie Two Bulls (Zintkala To Win - Blue Bird Woman) dedicated their lives to the youth, teaching them the Lakota history, culture and language through their songs. They were a repository for the Lakota people - young and old - who wanted to learn the Lakota songs. They were truly a valuable resource to cultural preservation. They were generous and giving of themselves and were dedicated to helping keep the Lakota culture alive. They were man and wife, they were partners, and they spent a lifetime sharing their lives with others

Nellie served as the elder speaker and addressed the graduating students of Oglala Lakota College on June 21, 1998 urging the students to plan for the future of their children and their grandchildren - for the Seventh Generation - and to keep the Lakota language alive.

OLC adopted the "Education Song" composed and sung by Matthew and Nellie as the opening of its Pathway to Education radio show on KILI Radio.

Nellie served as a Councilwoman for the Oglala Sioux Tribe from 1982-84 and was the chairperson for the Payabaya Community for many years. Nellie continued throughout her lifetime to be very active on a local and national level. She credits her grandmother Bessie Red Breath Bear for her love of music and her willingness to share the songs. Matthew was a cattleman and was a member of the Cattlemen's Association. After lease prices went up and cattle prices went down he sold his cattle. He took what he learned and shared it with the community - he taught farming and agriculture projects through community programs. Together, in 1950, they organized the drum group called "Sons of Oglalas" and were well known, nationally and internationally for their singing abilities.

Matthew and Nellie both taught at the Red Cloud Indian School for 20 years before retiring in 1991. They began at Red Cloud as Lakota instructors and assistant classroom teachers. Because teaching was their passion they decided to take further training at the University in Vermillion and what was then Black Hills State College, receiving their certification in secondary education. They were hired at Red Cloud Indian School by the late Calvin Jumping Bull who was the principal of elementary education at the time and later a fulltime instructor at Oglala Lakota College.

"We are losing great repositories of Lakota songs and culture with the loss of people like Matthew and Nellie Two Bulls, Calvin Jumping Bull, William Horn Cloud and John Around Him," said OLC's President Thomas Shortbull. "We must keep their spirit and their visions alive by continuing on with their teachings to all grades and all ages," continues Shortbull, "at Oglala Lakota College we pledge to continue to urge all staff and faculty to learn the language to set an example for the students at OLC and in schools across the reservation."

Nellie was a recipient of the "South Dakota Indian Living Treasure" award at Northern Plains Tribal Arts and the "Community Spirit" Award from the First People's Fund. The spirit of Matthew and Nellie Two Bulls together exemplify the terms "living treasure" and "community spirit."

People wishing to contribute to this very special scholarship fund should send their donation to the Oglala Lakota College Matthew and Nellie Two Bulls Scholarship Fund, PO Box 490, Kyle, SD 57752. If you have any questions or require more information you may contact Marilyn E. Pourier, OLC Development Director, at 605-455-6045 or President Thomas Shortbull at 605-455-6022.

Rosebud and Pine Ridge LIHEAP disbursing energy assistance

'It is as bad as they are saying'

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Eileen Shot, LIHEAP Director for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe was finally able to sit for an update by the Lakota Country Times on her office's activities regarding the recent donation of energy assistance from Citizens Energy Company and CITGO Petroleum Company. A donation of $695,000 was made to RST, while a similar amount was also donated to the Oglala Sioux and the Cheyenne River Sioux.

A proposal was written by Shot, Marian Little Thunder, assistant director of the LIHEAP office and Patti Douville of the RST Planning and Development office.

For RST households the eligible assistance amounts to $259.00 per household and tribal members could either check a combination of assistance that could be used to pay for wood, electricity, propane of a combination thereof.

Shot said that her office routinely receives 200 or more calls for energy assistance a day and that disbursements had begun on Wednesday, February 25. He staff worked all day the previous Sunday taking applications in the form of a request for assistance and a release of information.

The elderly would be served first, followed by the rest of the eligible households. The vendors were said to be responsive and that electricity bills would be paid before Cherry-Todd Electric would be doing disconnects.

RST will also be eligible for assistance from the CITGO Corporation next year. A recent report on KSFY describing the need for low energy assistance had also yielded some smaller donations.

When Rosebud residents were first notified of the impending availability of the energy assistance funds a couple of week ago, there was some confusion in the communities as to who would actually qualify for assistance.

Shot was interviewed by Richard Iyotte on KINI FM earlier and she said, "The stats were given on how many households we have on the reservation and how many LIHEAP eligible households the LIHEAP Program services. The donor looked at the stats and was able to assist them in the very low income, which is the LIHEAP eligible households."

District 3 Antelope council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott had contacted an attorney for the Cheyenne River Sioux tribe and secured information on the process as required by CITGO. Eileen said, "Whitey went out and did the footwork."

Today, the RST council held a regular council session and Shot was on the agenda to answer concerns about the CITGO funds as presented by a couple of council representatives. Mike Crow Eagle of St. Francis noted that if the funds were a donation, some of his constituents asked why everyone did not qualify for the funds.

Apparently, Shot initially notified CITGO that there were many households that needed assistance on the Rosebud, but they chose to provide enough funding to only cover those who were deemed eligible using federal LIHEAP guidelines.

Rosebud council representative, Ken LaDeaux, said "There is no documentation figures or census of exactly what is available…If we are going to continue to do this, we need an adequate data base to do this. When there is inconsistent information it is hard to program the right amount of money…The time to plan for next year's assistance is now. We are in the same predicament as a lot of people."

Shot said that her office has all of their information computerized now, as compared to earlier years when a lot of the information was on paper.

On the Pine Ridge reservation, Robert Running Bear of the OST energy office said that the CITGO donation funds had been disbursed to the nine district CAP offices and tribal members could apply there. Running Bear had done a lot of the "footwork" also during the previous month.

Lakota urge U.S. Fish and Wildlife to maintain control of Bear Butte Lake

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

STURGIS - U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is inviting public comment on its proposed action to give up its interests at Bear Butte National Wildlife Refuge in Meade County and transfer control of the area to the State of South Dakota.

Tom Koerner, refuge manager, and Shilo Comeau, wildlife biologist, held an open house on Wednesday, Feb. 28, in Sturgis to explain why the Service is planning to relinquish management at Bear Butte Lake and surrounding land.

Koerner and Comeau manage both Bear Butte and Lacreek National Wildlife Refuges. Lacreek Refuge, located 12 miles southeast of Martin, will remain under USFWS control.

Activists working to protect Bear Butte from encroaching development are asking USFWS to hold onto its interests at Bear Butte Lake.

Anne White Hat, who lives near Bear Butte with her family, said that this is not the time for the federal agency to step out, "especially during this time right now when we're struggling to protect this area."

Koerner said the federal easements were acquired in the 1930s from private landowners, the state, and the War Department (now Bureau of Land Management), allowing the Civilian Conservation Corps to build a dam and camping facilities at the lake and establishing Bear Butte Lake as a refuge, sanctuary, and breeding ground for migratory birds and wildlife.

Anne White Hat, urged the USFWS to retain management of Bear Butte Lake.

In the 1960s the State of South Dakota bought the land from private landowners and now owns title and controls all activities and uses of the land within the confines of any local zoning laws, Koerner said.

Meade County doesn't currently have zoning ordinances, although the county commission has been exploring zoning certain areas, including Bear Butte.

At the time the Service obtained the easement, White Hat said, Native American people were not able to express their opinions on how the land was used. Although "these are treaty lands," she said, tribal members were not allowed to leave the reservation in the 1930s and weren't allowed to travel to Bear Butte.

"We weren't even visibly present because it was against the law," she said.

Koerner said the easements gave the Service the right to impound water, but after an artesian well at the site was capped, the water supply has been limited to rain and snow. Therefore the impounding of water is controlled by the elements, not the federal agency, Koerner said.

Bear Butte Lake, a prairie pothole, is very dry right now. By comparison, Lacreek has a good supply of both surface and ground water, Comeau said.

In 1967 the Service entered into a cooperative agreement to turn over management of federal rights at Bear Butte Lake to the state, Koerner said.

Today, the Service's involvement at Bear Butte Lake is limited to completing a comprehensive conservation plan and environmental assessment every 15 years and ensuring compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, Koerner said.

According to an online explanation of NEPA, federal agencies are required to consider environmental impacts of their proposed actions and prepared an Environmental Impact Statement, which the Environmental Protection Agency reviews and comments on.

But Koerner said the USFWS draft plan was not submitted to EPA, nor was it presented to the Advisory Council for Historic Preservation, the agency that reviews federal actions that might affect the integrity of national historic places.

The draft plan, available for review at the Feb. 28 hearing, lists two alternatives for the refuge's future: continued USFWS oversight as it now exists, or removal of Bear Butte National Wildlife Refuge from the national refuge system, allowing all rights to be transferred to the state.

Nancy Hilding, president of Prairie Hills Audubon Society and Meade County resident, said that the state's emphasis at Bear Butte Lake has been on recreation, but the federal obligation is to provide a refuge for wildlife.

According to the draft plan, the National Wildlife Refuge Improvement Act of 1997 established that "wildlife conservation is the singular Refuge System mission." However, recreation is an allowed use if it doesn't interfere with or detract from conservation.

Koerner said the original federal easements contained language to allow for recreation, including construction of a bath house, picnic facilities, and swimming pond.

The Service's draft plan states that recreation at Bear Butte Lake creates "too much disturbance to provide a sanctuary for migratory birds" and there is "little evidence" that the sanctuary purposes of the refuge were "ever enforced."

"Conflicting uses of the refuge as a state park versus a national wildlife refuge creates a problem for the Service to fully implement the refuge's purpose," the draft plan states.The state allows hunting in the Bear Butte refuge, but the Service has the authority to ban it, according to the draft plan.

Currently, if there's a disagreement between state and federal government agencies on use of the area that can't be resolved, the courts would have to settle it, Koerner said.

White Hat said the state "has been severely lacking in doing anything" to protect Bear Butte and its surrounding area. State agencies relinquish their authority to local government, and local government values free enterprise and property rights over cultural and environmental interests, she said.

Nancy Kile, a Sturgis resident and Bear Butte activist, agreed that the state has not acted to resolve disputes surrounding Bear Butte. Meade County policies are "steered toward development that creates unchecked urban sprawl," Kile said. "If taken out of federal status, this refuge land will be vulnerable to other interests who are not concerned with the protection of this fragile ecosystem."

"We need you to stay there," White Hat told Koerner, and added that the easement rights of the 1930s should be broadened to take into consideration the Native American cultural use of the Bear Butte area.

USFWS is taking public comments on its proposal to remove Bear Butte National Wildlife Refuge from the National Wildlife Refuge System.

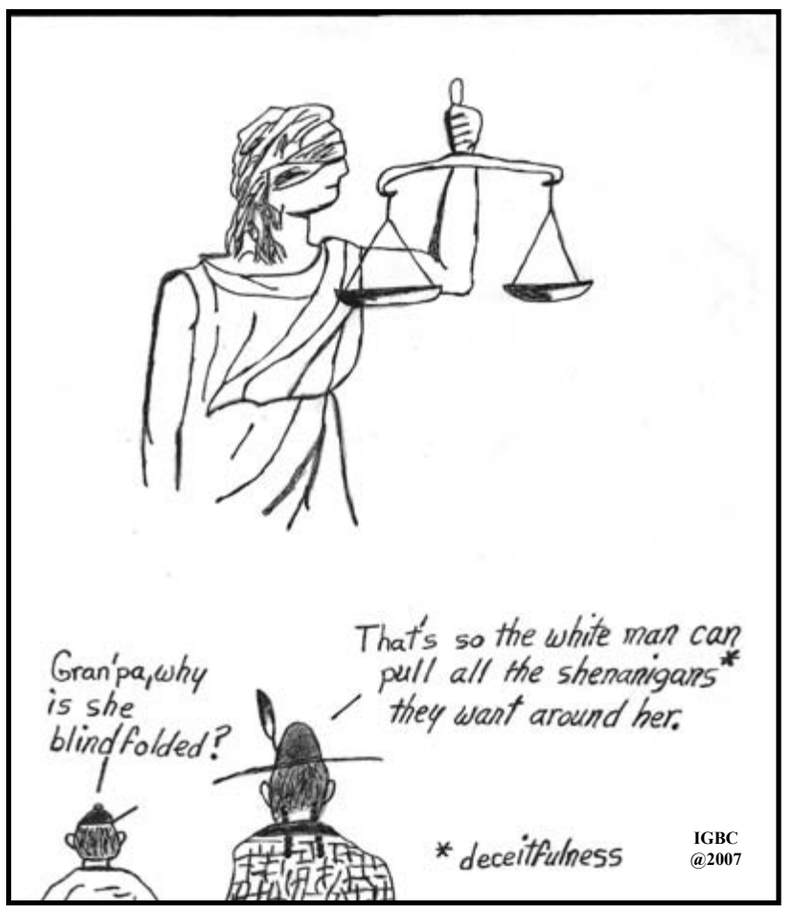
Border town newspapers can make a difference

Small business development throughout 'Indian Country' is highly desirable and is likely the way of the future if we are going to "discard the bonds" that create dependency upon the federal government.

In that vein, then, the American way is to "jump right in" feet first, and take advantage of all that a free enterprise system has to offer. Whether we operate in the city, in rural areas, or even on Indian reservations no one business is allowed to create a monopoly.

We hold tribal business licenses with the tribes we serve and we are fully engaged in reporting news which is culturally-sensitive, professionally reported and, as such, we are a legitimate business entity.

We stand by our philosophy of promoting the way of life of our communities we serve and in promoting truth and Lakota spirit.



We wanted to publish this newspaper so the Lakota people will have their own newspaper, one that stands by factual information and one that promotes positive news about our communities.

There is a large population of Lakota people on the Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservations and we are not going to dry up and blow away, we are here and will always be here. One of reasons we publish this paper is because we got tired of what border papers say about the Indian people or even better yet, what they DON'T say about their neighbors. More than 25 years ago, the old Lakota Times was started because of that very reason and it still hasn't changed today.

We have border town newspapers that still publish with that mentality of ignorance. They have the perfect communication tools to educate the small town mentality of ignorance of who Lakota people are and what they are about and they don't do it. It's not racism, it is simply ignorance. We are not all about money.

They have the perfect tools to promote reconciliation and they don't do it. They cater to that mentality of small town thinking and it's almost as if they are afraid to taint their pages with Indian news, GOOD Indian news. Instead their pages rack up the criminal activity, the court room drama, how unshika (pitiful) we are, the state of poverty we are in, the drug and alcoholism problems or better yet, NOTHING at all. Believe me, there are plenty of good things in our communities and there is much power in knowing that information.

Moving that information to educate not only Indian people but to educate non-Indian people could move history.

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor and Opinion Pages are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

We need to address the complaints of selling ceremonial rituals

Dear Editor:

A recent news article of a premiere New York appearance of another Lakota tribal chief has released a flood of inquiries in to Indian Country on who, what and why is this being allowed. To our relatives far out and in-between, this is a cry out to you to help stop exploiters, profiteers, capitalist, perpetrators, opportunist from committing sacrilege to our sacred ceremonies and sacred sites.

Self proclaimed leaders or hypocrites do not know these ways of the pipe so it falls upon relatives, they sun dance or perform ceremonies and turn around and go home, drink, drug, smoke peji and live their superficial culture. Many of these sun dance's have a fair type of atmosphere, with concession stands and the grounds being used as drug rendezvous for the many outsiders coming and going.

How do we stop these 'leaders' from this spiritual destruction that befalls our people as they play with this sacredness.

We need a solution and they need to stop making money on us and our sacred ceremonies.

Do the people think it was wrong to address this spiritual destruction and devastation we face today with the so-called Lakota leaders in Rosebud or other reservations?

No, we don't think so, not when our sacred Cannupa lies locked up daily or is buried, when as a spirit should live as one with nature and be able to breath as we do.

How can anyone lock up our Cannupa or put it away when our Cannupa is our symbol for life?

Back in March of 2003, the keeper of the pipe put out a protection of ceremonies proclamation. They are out to put our ceremonies into a white religion when realistically we are gifted this way of life to respect, treasure and hold sacred daily through our mother tongue, songs and relatives.

They have been pushing out in the worldwide media that we should have "one faith, one religion and one prayer," where is that leading us to, a "new world order in a white supremacy world?"

That type of role model lowers the standards our youth see and respect. Relatives, read this and take stance, it is time to take charge. Katiya ki na jin pi/po!

We cannot continue playing blind to these so-called leaders whom portray themselves as spiritual leaders, medicine men or spokespeople. Who appointed them?

We sure didn't witness any proper protocols or ceremonies that designated these artificial people.

As these continue, an endless epidemic of this type of negative behavior continues. It's like there is no conscience or spirit present.

Recently, it's been on the Internet of a man from the Rosebud reservation whom is exploiting ceremonies in New York to audiences he has no awareness about. Perhaps, there could be a woman on her cycle or a person with blood on their hands but little consideration is given to these sacred laws, instead the dollar signs play a major role and notoriety.

Another who is a Catholic from New York whom probably got his teachings from a book and is performing or conducting Lakota ceremonies. No consideration is given to these laws put out such as the eagle feather law, the Migratory Bird Act or the Protection of Ceremonies Proclamation.

Our people suffer enough, we've had enough suicides, heinous murders, drugs, alcohol, gambling and the prostituting of our culture and people all for the almighty dollar.

How can we say they help our people when there is no action or interaction with our youth, children and our communities.

We want to enforce and rely on these recent laws to protect us as a people that want to protect our culture, our spirits, our language, our songs and dance and most of all, our Sacred Lakota Nation,

We need to continue being strong in striving for our morals, values and traditional laws.

We can't do it alone, only by strength wowas'ake of standing together will we be protected and perhaps the spirit world will look upon us and give us ultimate power to heal, protect and guide us as we have very little true Leaders.

We must support them when we find them for they are very rare!

We also are proposing a "He Is Not My Chief" initiative, this position of chief should be "earned," not taken or bought for political whims.

To our relatives, we will stand in protest and object promotions or presentations given by the keeper, his followers ask for your continued support in our effort in this petition drive against these exploitations.

Something is obviously wrong when in the midst of winter the thunder beings come and take their course on the supposedly white buffalo named Miracle. It was struck by lightening.

Relatives, please understand many 'miracles' can be born with this new technology. Genes can be crossed or by inbreeding. You can have albinos and create tourist traps.

Take a look at the pictures and ceremonial objects that are boasted, bragged or exploited about the white buffalo and the significance they claimed it portrayed to Native Americans.

So many leaders and people went there to take homage when they could spend their money here in our own communities by adopting a family to assist them in life, to help them live life. After all, adoption is one of the ceremonies brought by the Sacred Woman when she brought the White Buffalo Call Pipe to our people, Tanyan iyukcan pi/po na iyawanka pi/po. Think about this and observe and understand it.

We as Lakota oyate need to address the countless complaints and reports on the selling of ceremonies and violations.

Dawson Has No Horse an inspiration for healthy eating

Dear Editor:

This story is one of many that are touching and inspirational. We don't hear too much about how someone has changed their lifestyle through the death of a loved one. This story struck me as an inspiration to anyone that is struggling with changing their eating habits or lifestyle.

Dawson Has No Horse walked into the office, tall, medium build, looking for that perfect frame. As he walked around, I felt a familiarity about him. Did I know him from somewhere? I thought maybe he used to weigh a lot or has changed in some way. So, I prodded.

Do I know you from somewhere? He looked at me and smiled and said, "I used to weigh 300 pounds or more and I lost a lot of weight." He said he was 6'5" and weighed 200 pounds now. He was a pleasant man, smiled when he looked at you as if embarrassed to talk about it. We continued to talk as he searched for that perfect frame. He said that he got scared when his father passed away and he didn't want to die the way he did. Dawson said his father, also named Dawson, was diabetic, drank and his diet was bad. His blood sugar was never under 200. I used to tell him to quit drinking, but he always had excuses. He weighed between 280-290lbs. His father drove a bus and was a teacher's aid for several years. He passed away March 17, 2001 at the age of 46.

"Everything that my father craved, I pushed myself away from. I cut down on my starches, meat and alcohol. I boil my meat now and prepare my foods in a healthier way and I started to run. I used to eat a large pizza by myself and now I eat it once in awhile. My pants were so big and I have a pair that I keep for inspiration. I could hardly fit into the front seat of my car, I was so big." Dawson says that he has gotten discouraged with his new eating habits, especially when emotionally challenging situations come up. He says that if he eats bad or something that he shouldn't, then he works out more or eats less the next day. He now weighs 200 pounds and feels much better. He watches his blood sugar and is not on any medication, diet controlled.

Dawson, Jr., grew up in Wakpamni with his two younger sisters. I grew up with being around my grandparents a lot, until my grandpa died when I was 10. I had to help take care of my two younger sisters while I was growing up, so we became very close. I always thought about working as an educational administrator.

Dawson continues to live in Wakpamni with his wife. He says he isn't working right now, but will be working again in the summer. He has an aunt that has been there for him, helping him through his ordeal.

When he got his DUI last year, she told him he should've listened to her a long time ago. Dawson says that he is thankful for his aunt telling him things that he needs to hear.

Reader advocates for Caffrey

Dear Editor:

Enclosed is an open letter to South Dakota Attorney General Larry Long regarding parole for Tim Caffrey, who story was covered in a recent issue of Lakota Country Times.

I advocate for the release of this man, who has more than "paid his dues," considering that he was tried as an adult at the age of 17 and has been imprisoned for 26 years.

Please consider the letter for publication in a future issue. Thank you.

Tim Caffrey was the victim of a crime many years before he became the perpetrator of one. As a mental health professional who has worked with victims of child abuse for 30 years, I have learned that physical and emotional abuse can destroy the spirit of a child - severe abuse is, in fact, a form of murder. The trauma that Tim suffered at the hands of his alcoholic father, from whom he learned to abuse drugs, shattered his self image so that he was unable to make positive choices in his life and could only imitate the rage that was projected onto him since childhood.

After 26 years in prison, it is time for him to be released so that he can have an opportunity to live out the last years of his life productively, in a way that he was unable to do as an adolescent.

I understand your concern that he could become a repeat offender. The solution to that is to make the release conditional, i.e. probationary check-ins, mandated

Please turn to Caffrey; A5

Notes From Indian Country

Oglala Lakota face tumultuous times

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Just seven years after the occupation of the village at Wounded Knee by members of the American Indian Movement in 1973, the U. S. Census of 1980 proclaimed Shannon County, the heart of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, "The poorest county in America."

There are those who consider the occupation of Wounded Knee 34 years ago as the anniversary of the liberation of the Oglala Lakota people. Liberation of what to what? When a nation is liberated doesn't that suggest things are going to improve? Didn't the United States call the pre-emptive invasion of Iraq a liberation?

AIM came on to the Pine Ridge Reservation with high hopes. Like so many Indians they were frustrated by the baskets of red tape that stymied progress and by the preferential treatment doled out to those in power. It was an ongoing problem in 1973 and it is an ongoing problem in 2007.

When the people of the reservation elected Cecelia Fire Thunder to serve as their first woman president they hoped that by electing a woman the tribe would get off of the dime that has negated progress these many years. They believed that such a dramatic shift in leadership would shake up the status quo and bring about peace and eventually, prosperity.

But an inconsequential non-issue called abortion muddied the waters. As a former nurse who had been a first hand witness to rape, incest and unwanted babies, Fire Thunder took her stand as pro-choice. It was her downfall. She was impeached. The vice president of the tribe, Alex White Plume, filled her office.

I have known White Plume for many years and have always considered him to be a good man. He was caught up in the circumstances of tribal politics but he filled the job required of him to the fullest. When election time rolled around someone dug up a fact sheet that listed White Plume as having committed a felonious crime. Although more than 20 years had elapsed since this alleged event and the supposed crime had been reduced to a misdemeanor, White Plume's name was stricken from the ballot.

The former three-time president of the tribe, John Yellow Bird Steele, was the eventual victor in the election, but even he knew that things just didn't sit right with this election. He suggested that a set of independent judges be brought in to review the entire election process on the reservation.

The Pine Ridge Reservation is 100 miles long and 50 miles wide. About 20,000 people inhabit it. About 90 percent of the population is Oglala Lakota. There are four high schools and several middle schools on the reservation. There is one college on the reservation. Oglala Lakota College is located near Kyle and the college has extensions in all of the reservation districts. The tribal government charters the college.

The tribe has one casino located off of Highway 79 near the off-reservation community of Oelrichs. While still president, Fire Thunder initiated a loan from the casino-rich Mdewakanton Tribe of Shakopee, Minnesota for $30 million. The money was used to pay off outstanding debts and to expand and improve the existing casino.

There is still an unsettled feeling amongst the Oglala Lakota people. They feel that they have been cheated of their votes on the last election. Many feel that Alex White Plume would have been the eventual winner if he had been allowed to remain on the ballot. They are still upset that the ballot issue came up just two weeks before the election and they believe it should have been settled long before the election was held.

The people of the Pine Ridge Reservation have been in a near constant turmoil since the occupation of Wounded Knee. Too much finger pointing and blame placing has taken place since then. AIM was not 100 percent right or innocent and neither was the tribal government. And both have to take the blame for what has happened since 1973.

The Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 was intended to allow the Indian tribes in America to set up democratic forms of government. Most tribes restructured under the Act, but some tribe like the Navajo Nation, did not accept the provisions of the Act and did not become IRA governments. The tribal government at Pine Ridge is an IRA government and some tribal members find this to be objectionable.

A casino is not the answer, either politically or financially, to the problems at Pine Ridge. Different groups need to stop living in the past and start taking a serious look at the situation as it exists today. As one elder said, "We are all one people and neither AIM nor the IRA government can take this from us. We are Oglala Lakota and that name comes without labels."

Finding My Voice

I am glad of the experience of extended family

Dana Lone Hill

I love my family very much. Too much. They are great, they know how to pull together for the sake of the family.

We also know how to pull away for the sake of the family.

I see other families that stick together, have coffeee, tea or whatever all the time. My family isn't like that, as much as we used to be. When I was a kid I remember the HUGE get togethers and pot luck holidays. I remember Aunt Aggie's homemade banana bread and she even canned her own pickles.

I remember my Uncle Jack telling me to take it "easy on the pickles because I can't just eat pickles for Thanksgiving."

I remember my grandma telling him "BS, Dana can eat pickles if that's what she wants." I remember getting my Uncle Bogey an ashtray or a beer for a 50 cent tip. I remember my Aunt Erna coming in from out of town every once in awhile, she lived far away and I always though she seemed so "city." I remember Uncle Sonny chasing us, and then us forever teaing him, so he would chase us again. I remember all us kids running around outside until dark, or sleigh riding all day. I remember at Christmas, only one select kid was allowed to distribute gifts. I remember when my great grandma's birthday was just like another holiday, and being in January, it was our last big holiday event.

And me being the first child of the oldest, the first grandkid, had no idea all these aunts and uncles were really my grandparents "Indian way."

Holidays were uncles, aunts, grandmas, grandpas and food. We all came together as a family.

These days, we all live in our own seperate lives. We stop talking to each other when one person is mad at another, or when someone don't live the lifestyle that the others want them too. Drama takes place of all those get togethers. People get too impatient with each other. The great extended family get togethers are extinct. Sometimes it gets easier to just have your own little holiday with your own little immediate family, rather than drama.

When did family stop being, well just that, family? Is that golden era of extended family really gone? I am glad I experienced it, it will be missed counseling, a community service program - measures that would allow him to be monitored until such time that he demonstrates stability.

Tim Caffrey could be a blessing to his community, especially to the children, who could benefit from the mistakes he has made and the lessons he has learned in the past 26 years.

You hold the gift of this man's freedom in your hands. In the name of Justice and healing, I ask you to extend it to him, and to the Lakota people.

Words from the 'trenches'

Who Saves in Daylight Savings?

Connie Smith-Blanco

Daylight Savings Time is three weeks earlier this year. I have a problem with that. Switching my body clock twice a year has never been easy. "Falling back" in the fall is easy to do because I actually gain an extra hour of precious sleep time. By precious I really mean "mandatory," as any extra sleep I get seems to give me more energy and keeps me from getting too crabby.

But leaping forward one hour in the spring is next to impossible. I can't "leap" anymore, and don't know that I ever leaped when I was younger. I've always resented losing that hour of time in the spring. I complain about it because my body complains about it. It takes my body several months to recuperate from that loss of one hour a day, multiplied by seven days a week multiplied by 30 days a month and so on….

I find myself dragging around for months trying to get used to less sleep and then "bingo," I'm expected to "fall back" into my regular schedule as if all that leaping never happened in the first place.

Daylight savings time goes from 26 weeks to 34 weeks this year, I'm not sure how they determined we needed more time to save daylight this year, someone didn't trust that idea to us voters.

Closer to home, Amanda and I received a care package this week from a very nice lady in Arizona. We knew it was coming as last week she had called us to make sure the mailing address was correct.

We thought the package would contain coffee and chocolate and we were really excited about that.

To our surprise, gourmet coffee and chocolate were only two of the many items in the package. There were many good things to eat and many good things to read, and smell, thanks Janet.

We got a call from a professor in Ohio who was calling to dispute a claim made by one of his students. This student had announced in his class that her cousin's tribe in Minnesota was making more money than they could spend. Imagine his surprise when I told him his student was correct, that the Shakopee Nation was not only making more money than it could spend, but thanks to them, many other tribal communities, including Martin, were able to realize their dreams thanks to Shakopee loans and grants.

The professor grudgingly accepted this information, but only after I "kindly" repeated it twice. He didn't want to give up his "outdated idea" that Native Americans were incapable of running their own casinos and therefore were making no money from these or any other ventures. I hope he apologizes to his student. He never did say what classes he was teaching and I was afraid to ask.

Tax season is coming to a close and the revolving door at Mary Kay's H&R Block business is slowing down. The lobby gets so full at times that there can be many, many conversations going on at the same time, but nobody cares. Everyone is here to get their taxes done and are prepared to wait. I've seen people bring their lunches but no one seems to mind.

Mary Kay's customer's also stay busy leaving messages in our Happy Ad Box and reading our paper while they're waiting and we like that, here in the trenches.

Prayer, song powerful to youth

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I attended a treaty meeting over the weekend at Digmann Hall in St. Francis and was really quite impressed with the wealth of knowledge that many presenters seemed to have accumulated over time.

It cannot be an easy task to sort through all those court dockets and related materials. I think one probably would have to have some semblance of a legal background to be able to sift through all the related material surrounding the 1851 and 1868 treaties as well as Docket 74.

I am probably like a lot of Lakota people, in thinking that there seems to be several treaty organizations across Lakota country and one of these days I am going to get that straight and figure out who's who.

I probably need to touch base with Johnson Holy Rock again and this time, pay attention to what he is saying. "Toksa upiya anogoptan makinkte." Harvey Whitewoman, of Kyle, was helpful in that regard when he was at the Lakota Funds.

I do know that some treaty councils are independent and represent true "grass roots" people, while others are chartered by their respective IRA governments.

Beyond that, I probably also need to caucus, as they say, with my old friend, Victor Douville at SGU. I learn more things in passing when ever I drop in on him unannounced.

I appreciated the task undertaken by kola Archie Little as he emceed the meeting and despite a lack of attendance, he seemed to keep the afternoon session moving right along.

He made it known that I had not missed anything in the morning, as it did not really get started until lunch.

The roads had been horrendous from the day before when an arctic blast hit the Rosebud and everything was virtually a "white out."

As many Lakota speakers as were assembled that day, I was surprised to hear as much English spoken as I did. "Mis, weki omajula sni eyas, lehan ki'tankelis Lakota unsmiciciye. Lakota ominiceya yuhapi cansna wasicueyapi hantas hecetusni c'ele."

It was a perfect place for the young to hear Lakota and less English. Sam High Crane voiced his concern in Lakota that even when he returned from the service years ago, the young had started to lose their usage and understanding of Lakota.

Towards the end of the gathering, there was an informal appointment of a panel of "Naca" to represent the Sicangu, presumably to attend local meetings and to play a consultative role on others.

Archie Little, Mike One Star, Sr., Darryl Marcus were asked to volunteer, while highly regarded Sicangu elder, Webster Two Hawk, was being considered.

Archie Little asked me to serve on the committee and I agreed, but in the back of my mind I thought it would be better if I served in a technical capacity as a writer and researcher and someone with connections to the media.

Come Monday morning, I stopped in to see Archie Little and to drop off some copies of the Lakota Country Times at the St. Francis elderly center.

Archie then told me that the elders at the meeting said that I had to be a full-blood to serve on the "Naca" panel. I was not surprised at all to hear that and expressed my posture as being "okay" with that.

It was somewhat ironic as Don Moccasin had just given a relatively long talk to the group.

In Lakota, he said that he has several "takojas" and even though some were "wasiculas" or some other ethnicity it was his view that the group did not see along color lines.

It did not matter if one was white, or black, or red they could attend such meetings.

It is still okay with me as I have never been much of a follower among the Sicangu.

In the white world, I graduated from the best university they have to offer and was rewarded for my efforts. I learned to be functionally fluent in Lakota despite my beautiful French name. I slowly learned Lakota from some very tolerant and compassionate Lakota men like, Stanley Red Bird, Sr., John Around Him and Calvin Jumping Bull. I did not spend all that much time with them, but they were secure enough to reach out to me and teach me Lakota by simply being themselves.

As I often editorialize, I appreciate the support of my full-blood peers, like tahansi Ned, kola Pat and even tahansi Lionel who once encouraged me not to forget it while away to school.

Francis Whitebird and Howard Bad Hand, insa hena kolawa so they help to instruct me as I sometimes fumble through Lakota.

I never quite belonged to any one mold as I enjoy "thinking on my feet" and I can write like crazy. I could have relocated and made an enormous sum of "mazaska" but I chose to stay in my homeland.

I live in a trailer house like many here, but I am a proud 'a'te' and I want to be known as a mixed blood Lakota wicasa who made an inordinate impact on the life of a child.

The best part of the meeting was when the "Naca" were asked to form a circle around four Sicangu youth, while a prayer and a song was sang for them.

That had to be a powerful message for the adolescents who patiently sat waiting all afternoon.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Rosebud hospitial CEO receives national award for reducing hosptial debt

ROSEBUD - Shelly Harris, CEO of the Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare Services, the Rosebud Hospital, received a 2007 Managerial Excellence Award from the National Council of Chief Executive Officers.

Dr. Charles Grim, the Director of the Indian Health Service, presented the national award to Harris at the "2007 I.H.S. National Combined Councils Meeting" in San Diego held from Feb. 25 to March 2.

The national meeting was an opportunity for all I.H.S. area directors, chief medical officers, directors of nursing, clinical directors, chief executive officers and chief pharmacists to attend pre-conference workshops for new administrators to a variety of concurrent workshops.

Harris was cited for her work at the Rosebud Hospital in dramatically reducing the deficit when she arrived from over $9 million to $3 million today.

Dr. Grim also noted that Harris has increased morale at the hospital as well as having promoted good communication with the Rosebud Sioux Tribal council. Madonna Long, CEO of the Sisseton Service Unit nominated Harris for the prestigious award; she noted that it was rather meaningful since it originated from amongst her peers.

A View from the West

Only we can promote better health services

By Ivan Star
Oglala Lakota

Several years ago, I stopped relying on our Indian Health Service hospital for medical care. To some, this is certainly a reprehensible deed, but I have a concrete reason. With the exception of a few times, I try to avoid using the hospital and its services for good reason.

On many an occasion, even though we arrived first, we were always the last to see the doctor. Many times, we spent the entire day at the hospital waiting to see the doctor and waiting some more for the pharmacy to fill prescriptions.

More notably, though, I got tired of the less than quality care we were receiving from the professional medical staff. Many times, my wife and I took our sick children to the hospital and endured the contemptible service only to have their illness misdiagnosed. More than once, a bottle of aspirin was their prescribed drug.

With seriously ill children and a bottle of aspirin, we had no choice but to take them to "outside" medical facilities where they received actual care and were able to recover from their ailments. On a few occasions, though, these "outside" doctors were upset with us because we had waited too long or they questioned our parental responsibilities. Again, we had no choice but to inform them of the IHS misdiagnosis and/or maltreatment.

More than once, we had to wait at the hospital emergency room for hours on end. Tired of waiting, we had to take our children to a municipal facility many miles away, like Gordon, Chadron, or Rapid City. Eventually, we purchased good medical insurance and started taking them to "outside" medical facilities. Sometimes, though, this can be difficult.

On Feb. 12, the weather was cold and road conditions bad. We had a three-year old with a temperature of 103 degrees, coughing and vomiting. We called the hospital and were told to get her there before 3 p.m. otherwise; we will have to go to the evening clinic. The time was 2:48 p.m. and the hospital is 25 miles away.

We halfheartedly discussed the possibility of an IHS referral. Knowing that was not likely, and that she will have wait for hours, and that she may not get proper treatment, we decided to take her elsewhere. Fortunately, she is covered under the state's Medicaid program.

Consequently, we drove her over 60 miles (one-way) of slippery snow-packed highways in near zero temperatures to the emergency room in Gordon. She was examined and treated promptly. Consequently, she is doing well and enjoying her health.

Over the years, I've heard stories in the community regarding the poor and inadequate health care on the Pine Ridge, including accounts of patients who died after being treated and/or prescribed wrong medication. I have heard more than one tribal member refer to our IHS hospital as "dangerous".

Of course, there are those who would defend the IHS facility in a minute. Such defenders are either employees with good salaries or patients receiving genuine health care and services. Let us keep in mind the fact that I am talking about a period of about forty years or more; even my late parents talked about these things.

I know a direct local redress effort, a protest, or even a confrontation is not going to accomplish anything for the people. Past attempts have proven this point; existing problems continued without letting up. Due to the vastness of the IHS bureaucracy, any effort at trying to set the record straight directly would be fruitless.

It is my belief that if someone is going to deal with this situation, they must know what they are going to be dealing with. First, every concerned person should do some research.

I present some basics here and hope it contributes to a positive trend. Remember, this is merely a small portion of the immensely complex IHS system.

Let us begin with the repeated outcries of denied treaty rights. In other words, treaties guarantee tribal members medical services and facilities, yet they are not receiving their fair share. I believe awareness of the legal basis regarding this federal obligation is an essential step toward understanding and eventually attaining some form of redress and contentment.

Undeniably, health care is a part of the federal government's trust responsibility to "Indians". Although treaties between the United States and "Indian" nations nearly always affirmed physicians, those treaties are directly connected to an international link; the government-to-government relationship.

Next, Article VI of the US Constitution reinforces this legal foundation; "all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land". Furthermore, Supreme Court cases, federal legislation, and Executive Orders have collectively built up substance for this relationship.

Then there are three congressional laws that affect the IHS directly at the national level. First, in 1921, The Snyder Act provided federal funding "for the relief of distress and conservation of health… [and]… for the employment of… physicians… for the Indian Tribes throughout the United States".

Second, the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 (P.L. 93-638) provided "Indian" nations with the option to either contract for the administration and operation of health services and programs or to remain with IHS administered direct health system.

Lastly, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act (P.L. 94-437) of 1975 supports the options of the earlier P.L. 93-638. Its goal is "to provide the quantity and quality of health services necessary to elevate the health status of American Indians and Alaska Natives to the highest possible level and to encourage the maximum participation of Tribes in the planning and management of those services".

In other words, the "437" law mandates involvement of tribes in IHS activities. However, the law specifically states tribal governments as the point of consultation and involvement. Regardless, this particular stipulation may be problem. Although IHS is required to consult with tribal governments, I am not aware of such.

At the same time, it may be the key with which we can effectively address our health care problems here on the homeland. It is obvious that some people are not getting their pledged medical services. Perhaps districts need to organize an official entity at the local level with which to communicate their health concerns to Tribal Council and IHS.

I believe the IHS "tribal consultation" protocol is problematic. On the face of it, IHS seems to be unaware of community health concerns even with the federal consultation mandate. It seems IHS is making all the decisions while we are receiving less and less services. Is this public discontent merely the result of disgruntled patients?

Although not binding IHS' mission is "to raise the physical, mental, social, and spiritual health of the Indian to the highest level, in partnership with the Indian people." The Indian Health Service goal is "to assure comprehensive, culturally acceptable personal and public health services are available and accessible" to all Indian people.

Anyway, what we should be doing is to establish adequate communication with tribal council with the purpose of involving ourselves in this seemingly one-sided affair. At this point, it seems the people are not involved in IHS activities.

I do know that if we had functioning community governments, IHS and tribal council will not be able to ignore Lakota people anymore.

Mustangs ground Falcons for Region 7A title

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Ty Lunderman and TJ McCauley set the tone for the Little Wound Mustangs Tuesday at the Civic Center arena in Rapid City as they led the Mustangs charge out of the gates against Todd County. Lunderman hit a basket and six straight free throws while McCauley hit two twos and a three as Little Wound went up 26-13 at the end of the first quarter on their way to an 81-60 win over Todd County for their second straight Region 7A championship and trip to the South Dakota State A tournament.

Little Wound's triumph was a team effort as Brice Hornbeck scored nine of his 15 points in the second quarter and as a team, the Mustangs stepped up the pressure on defense throughout the first half forcing Todd County into 14 first half turnovers and took advantage of the transition game to go up 51-23 at the half.

"The team really stepped up defensively," said Jamie Feather Earring, Mustang head coach. "Earlier in the season we played the Falcons in Mission and didn't really come alive until the fourth quarter after we were down by 14 points, this game the boys were motivated to step up from the opening tip-off."

Up by 28 at the half, Little Wound put cruise control on for the second half and eased on into the 2007 State A tourney set for the Civic Center arena next week. With Rich Big Boy recuperating from a knee injury from an earlier game and seeing limited action, McCauley stepped up with 20 points, five steals, four assists and nine rebounds while Lunderman finished with 21 points, two steals and four rebounds including going eight for eight from the free throw line. Shilo Pierce helped with nine points and five steals, Hornbeck finished with 15 points and Devon LeBeau added nine points and three steals.

Todd County had upended Platte 58-50 to win the 13A title but struggled with Little Wound's up-tempo game at both ends of the floor. Gunner Krogman finished with a strong double double 16 points and 15 rebounds while Jordan His Law came off the bench to hit for 21 points and grab six rebounds. Both teams put up 55 shots, Little Wound hit 30 for a 55 per cent shooting percentage while Todd County hit 21 for 38 per cent. Todd County finished their season with a record of 15-9 and will lose Steve Antoine, Ed Bad Hand and Vernie Menard. Both Krogman and His Law will be back for the next season.

Little Wound pushed their record to 22-1 and will play in their second straight State A tourney, this time at the Civic Center March 15-17. The Mustangs lost their first two games last year at state and won their third game for seventh place. Little Wound earns a number three seed behind St. Thomas More and Parkston and will face Chamberlain at 7:45 p.m. on Thursday night, the Cubs beat Little Wound in last year's second round game.

Little Wound defeated Pine Ridge for the third year in a row for the District 14A championship Saturday night at Rapid City Stevens high school 87-56. Red Cloud beats Custer for 15A title loses to St. Thomas More for 7A championship

SPEARFISH/RAPID CITY - In a rematch of last year's Region 8A championship game, Red Cloud and St. Thomas More battled for every possession and point Tuesday night at the Civic Center in Rapid City; it was tied up at 14 all at the first quarter and after a two minute stall that ended up with a charging call and a foul, St. Thomas More led at the half 21-19 on their way to a 53-42 regional championship.

Red Cloud led late in the third 24-23 when they hit a dry spell and couldn't buy a bucket while the Cavaliers went on a 14-0 run to break open a very tight game. With a 13 point lead in the early part of the fourth, St. Thomas More could manage the clock using their three guards to work the ball around and leave Red Cloud with little or no choice but to put them on the foul line where St. Thomas More hit 12 of 17 to ice the game and head for their fourth straight State A tourney. Last year the Cavaliers polished off a 26-0 undefeated season with the State A championship, beating Clark in the finals.

Red Cloud struggled from the field all night long, shooting 13 for 48, a 26 per cent clip while the Cavaliers hit 16 of 40 for 40 per cent. Lester Gotheridge finished with 16 points and 11 rebounds, Christian McGhee helped with 10 points and Dave Giago grabbed nine rebounds for Red Cloud. Kyle Doerr led St. Thomas More with 15 points and 12 rebounds, Nate Jacobson added 13 points and Tanner Wince chipped in 11.

Red Cloud finished the year 19-4, for the second year in a row one game away from State, they will lose two seniors Chris Red Bear and Joe Richards and all five starters return.

St. Thomas More moved their record to 22-1, earned the number one seed playing Lennox the number eight seed in the first round of the State A and will be looking for their second straight state championship.

The Crusaders earned their trip to the Regionals by knocking off Custer in the 15A championship game 56-49 on Friday night in Spearfish at the Young Center.

Red Cloud started slow and after being down at the first quarter break 8-7 picked up the pace and led at the half 23-16.

The Crusaders forced Custer into 26 turnovers and used balanced scoring to seal the deal as Gotheridge and Giago hit for 13 each, Brier Iron Cloud came off the bench for 12 and McGhee finished with 10.

Gotheridge chipped in a team high six rebounds and with McGhee had a team high five steals. The Wildcats would never allow Red Cloud much separation, Trevor Cook led the way with 21 points and Isaac Parsons added 15 as Custer finished the season 17-5.

Red Cloud, Cheyenne Eagle Butte earn State A trips

Red Cloud downs St. Thomas More for Region 8A, Lady Braves knock off Miller Area for 6A

RAPID CITY/GETTYSBURG - St. Thomas More held Red Cloud's Marque Lunderman in check for most of the night and forced the Lady Crusaders into 31 turnovers but as a team, Red Cloud stepped up and overcame whatever the Lady Cavaliers put in their way to win the Region 8A championship 40-33 and earn their first trip to the state tournament since 2001.

"It wasn't a very pretty game but the girls got it done, they played good defense, led at every quarter break and played really well as a team," said Ted Standing Soldier, Jr. in his first year as head coach, "these young ladies have proven to be not just a young team but a good solid team that gets the job done."

Shaina Clifford finished with 11 points, Lunderman, who averages around 18 points a game finished with nine, four blocked shots, two assists and two steals while Lisa Bear Robe led the team with nine rebounds. Red Cloud picked up their 16th win of the season against seven losses and as the number seven seed in the state A tourney will face Bennett County, number two seed on Thursday night at 6 p.m.

Jordyn Brown hit for a team high 13 points, Brittany Azure added 10 points and Nadia Watt grabbed five rebounds. Cheyenne Eagle Butte will take an 18-4 record into the State A in Spearfish taking on Vermillion at 1:45pm on Thursday.

"We have really come together as a team,": said Arlyn Wohlleber, head coach, "we have two outstanding seniors in Azure and Brown, a sold sophomore in the post, Jessica Keckler and two very promising freshman Watt and Lacy Leaf really stepping up while Marissa and Scottie Laundreaux lead a strong supporting cast, we are really looking forward to the State A tourney."

Governor signs law on sobriety project

PIERRE (AP) - A measure to expand a pilot program that requires repeat drunken drivers to check in at jails twice a day for breath testing has been signed into law by Gov. Mike Rounds.

Rounds announced Tuesday he has signed the bill, which allows for statewide expansion of a voluntary program designed by South Dakota Attorney General Larry Long.

Judges could give repeat drunken drivers the choice of participating in the breath testing program or going to jail. People who fail the breath tests or don't show up are arrested and put in jail.

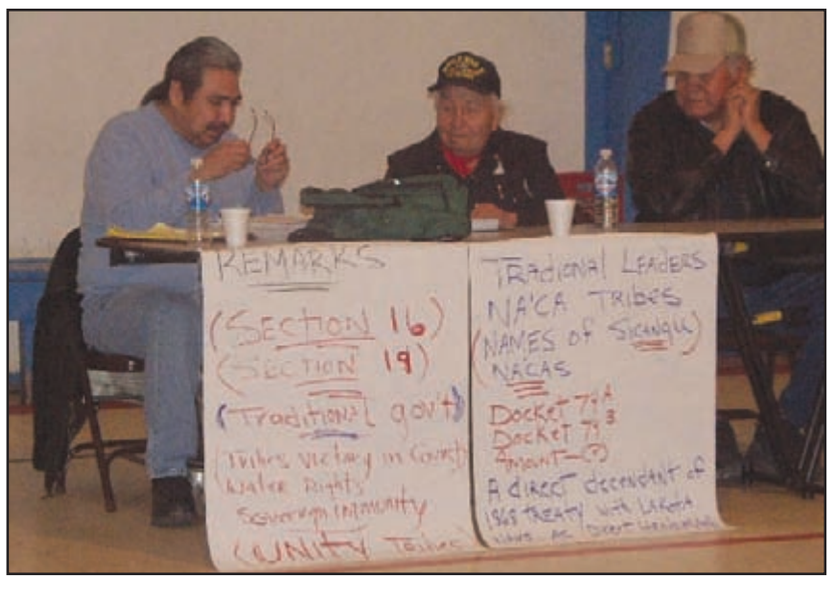
Sicangu Oyate host treaty council meeting

Elders embrace youth with lecture and prayers



By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - Last Saturday, on March 3, Archie Little and Darryl Marcus took the lead for the Sicangu Oyate and hosted a meeting of the Oceti Sakowin Treaty Council at Digmann Hall as 35 people signed in.

A couple of handouts were available as well as an Sinte Gleska University calendar. Lunch was provided by the tribal education department and the diabetes prevention program.

A previous meeting of the treaty council on the Rosebud had been cancelled due to bad weather. This one came on the heels of a blizzard that quickly blew into the Rosebud the day before and led to the cancellation of many other events. It likely impacted the number in attendance as more had been expected.

Participants were seated in a circle and were given the opportunity to speak using the microphone and to introduce themselves. Many would follow up later with their philosophy and attitude about the creation of a traditional form of government that is representative of "grass roots" people. Many also spoke about the treaties and how traditional people are not subject to state and federal law, but instead, choose to continue to adhere to the dictates of the 1851 and 1868 Fort Laramie Treaties.

Byron In The Woods, Dave Bald Eagle and Duane Good Face provided information on the Oceti Sakowin treaty council to the Sicangu Oyate at Digmann Hall last Saturday and presided over the meeting. Photo by Archie Beauvais.

A majority of the speakers spoke Lakota and participants and observers, alike, were fortunate to be able to witness such an event given the great concern that the Lakota language is slowly disappearing.

Byron In The Woods from Dupree spoke at length to the assembled group. He said, "Daku ota cante suta ya he naje…otehi ahikte. Ptala unglunajin." He continued, "I am not chief, but talk for the Naca. I have a lot of knowledge about the laws…'Grassroots" people need to stand up. We have plans and we need elders to stand up for 'wolakota.' How do we survive with no electricity, no food? The system has made us so dependent."

In The Woods handed out a letter in which he previously put out a call for future meetings. He wrote, "I am bringing out a very important issue for our People of the Four Bands of the Tituwan. The Tituwan Oyate is made up of the Mnikoju, Siha Sapa, Oohe Numpa, Itazicola, Oglala, Sicangu and Hunkpapa."

Some of the agenda items discussed included sovereign immunity, Docket 74 A and B, direct descendents of the 1868 treaty, international law and a "national council"

Several "Naca" or traditional leaders from Lower Brule, Pine Ridge and the Cheyenne River reservations served as presenters.

The Sicangu oyate present created a body of "Naca" from those present, including Archie Little, Mike One Star, Sr., Sam High Crane and Darryl Marcus, while Webster Two Hawk was also suggested. In order to fully participate in such treaty council affairs, it is necessary to have such a group of leaders who can explain the treaties. The group must also be of full-blood descent. They may even be called to assist other Lakota oyate as they work to create a strategy for recognition as a traditional form of governance.

High Crane said, "A lot of kids don't understand Lakota…It is a battle to teach the young because their attention span is short. They have candy and pop. We had natural energizers."

There were Lakota youth who participated and who patiently sat through the afternoon presentations.

At the conclusion of the treaty gathering, the "Naca" and those present in the circle conducted an informal ceremony that was very touching in light of the recent tragedies that many youth are witnessing. Little asked the four young people to stand in the middle and another "Naca" spoke to them in Lakota and then, in English. He said, "Takoja, tehi elo. Itokab yahi elo. Wololakota, takoja, ogna yanke. Ca letan tokatakiya iyustanpsniyo. Glus unpo." In English, he said, "Grandchildren, it is tough. You have overcome it. There is the Lakota way. So, from this way forward hang onto it. Don't let it go."

Next, those seated in a circle rose and circled the youth and held hands, while a Lakota prayer was said for them.

Everyone then shook hands with the them. It was a gesture that the youth felt honored to be a part of as it is something that is not demonstrated very often in support of the "Semni" or adolescents.

On this day, it was a powerful reminder that the connection between the young and old needs to be re-affirmed.

A JOURNEY OF HEALING:

'What made you drink in the first place?'

By Anna Bee
Times Correspondent

OGLALA -On March 3, Babe Little celebrated her 27th year of sobriety. I was able to celebrate my sobriety birthday by going to the sweat lodge on Saturday night. The spiritual experience was very beautiful and peaceful and I thanked the Creator for allowing me to be able to live this long. "I've been sober 27 years, but only in recovery for 18 of those," said Little.

Little grew up in Oglala and left when she was 17 years old, returned again a few times and left again a few times and eventually moved back in March 2004, and said she plans to remain.

"Upon my return back to the reservation I found the problems of alcohol and drug addiction combined with lack of recovery are still the main problem of the Lakota people. Getting clean and sober and recovery are not the same thing. I have been sober for 27 years, but only in recovery for eighteen of those years," said Little.

'Babe' Little promotes recovery and encourages people to seek recovery and understand why they are addicted.

"The reason that I say sobriety and recovery are not the same is because that in order to really sober up you have to recover from what made you drink in the first place. Most people nationwide who have lived on the reservation have been exposed to alcohol, drugs, co-dependency which is enabling others to be irresponsible for their behaviors and responsibilities, relationship addiction, and have lived in toxic environments," she said.

When Little speaks to groups, individuals, friends and acquaintances about recovery she always speaks in the first person, making the experience personal and relevant and not targeting behaviors in others. "Most of us Indian people have been exposed to drinking and drug environments that have paved our way to unhealthy behaviors, dysfunctional relationships, suicide, compulsive gambling, and low self-esteem," said Little.

"In Indian Country the shame has always held us down and because of it we have not experienced life to its fullest potential," she emphasized. An example is seeing our children involved in sports, especially basketball. They have tremendous talent, they are so gifted and they are beautiful children. After they graduate high school most of them never go on to play college or professional basketball. They have the talent to do it but somehow their lack of desire dwindles due to problems they have endured growing up in alcohol and drug environments and they also begin drinking and using drugs.

"When I began to educate myself about adult children of alcoholics I had maybe ten symptoms of the test for being ACOA . Some of those symptoms are shame, low self-esteem, compulsive and addictive behaviors, such as alcohol, drug abuse, being attracted to other people who are also ACOA, addicted relationships and other compulsive behaviors. Were used to patterns of chaos and instability because if we don't have it we create chaos because we know how to handle that type of dysfunction and it's so familiar to us. We are also unable at times to complete projects or fol-

State lawmakers set up Indian education office

By Carson Walker and Joe Kafka
Associated Press Writers

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - South Dakota lawmakers have sent Gov. Mike Rounds a plan to give South Dakotans a better understanding of American Indian culture by making it a permanent priority in public schools.

Both legislative chambers have passed a bill offered by the Republican governor that would set up an Indian Education Office and an Indian Education Advisory Council with representatives from each of the state's nine tribes.

The legislation ensures that Indian education will be a permanent part of the state content standards so a future governor can't do away with it, said Marcia Zephier, a member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe who is on the advisory council and testified for the bill.

``And then it gets the ball rolling in terms of individual school districts starting programs in their schools,'' Zephier said.

The measure requires all new teachers from out of state and those who were certified after 1993 to complete a three-hour course in South Dakota Indian history and culture.

It also includes a pilot program to offer Lakota language instruction to teachers, which could be extended to offer Lakota language instruction to Indian students. And it requires the state Education Department and the advisory council to establish a curriculum in Indian history and culture.

``The spirit of the bill is to look at the K-12 curriculum and to say, 'What do we want all students in South Dakota who go to public school to know about our native population?' Anything dealing with tribes and native people and history and culture,'' said Gail Swenson, supervisor of Indian Education in the Sioux Falls School District.

low through with logical decisions," she said. Instead we continue the multi-generation cycle of raising our children that way because it's a learned behavior that we have learned from our grandparents, parents and guardians.

"We carry these behaviors with us," says Little, "until we have the desire to educate ourselves and find out why we behave the way we do."

"Going to Bureau of Indian Affairs and Catholic boarding schools took away our culture and shame was instilled in us just for being Indian. We still see the after-effects of these symptoms in the 21st Century! When you take someone's culture you take their spirit and some of the consequences we still see in our people are alcohol and drug abuse because of their broken spirits. The federal government was very smart in trying to mainstream us. By sending us to bureau and Catholic boarding schools they taught us the divide and conquer tactic and today we are still doing it to our own Indian people. They also broke up what was very important to us and that was our families.

From this type of abuse we still lack parenting skills, interpersonal communication skills, trust, generosity, honesty, compassion and other values that were our natural way of life.

"The long term effects of this cultural oppression include alcohol and drug addiction, co-dependency, sexual abuse and a displacement of the ideals that weaken the identity of our people. Now, we have a chance to recover our balance and become healthy people," she said.

"That is why treatment is very important. It goes hand in hand with sobriety. In treatment, through honesty, you over-come your shame and it opens the doors to serenity, peacefulness, acceptance, high self-esteem, security within yourself, and also helps you to understand other people's behaviors. It helps you to have more compassion, empathy, honesty and resourcefulness when dealing with others."

"I just want to help open the door to all the Lakota people, the door to recovery is just waiting for everyone to walk through. I know that many people do not understand the difference between sobriety and recovery and I want to help bridge that gap. How many of our children come to school everyday from an alcohol and drug environment home? We all need to know through our personal experience how that is affecting our Lakota children. This way of life leads you to poverty, despair, hopelessness and death. Maybe this is why many of our children are committing suicide on every reservation in the United States and Canada," she said.

In 1980, she said Dawson Has No Horse introduced her to the Red Road and Basil Brave Heart gave her the opportunity to attend family therapy and co-dependency programs at Hazelden in Center City, Minn. Hazelden Foundation is a non-profit organization that has been helping people with addictions since 1949.

"Today, I use the Red Road, sun dancing, sweats and ceremony along with music, guitar and singing, and my love of horses to bring me peace, acceptance and serenity in my heart, soul and spirit," Little said.

Little attended the University of Wyoming and Augustana College where the majority of her studies were in political science with a minor in psychology. Little says, "I still have the desire to further educate myself as far as a doctorate degree in public administration. I feel with the political science and public administration emphasis that I would be able to help educate the Lakota people and to assist them in operating a more stable government and how to properly administrate that government."

"I want people to know I understand what they are going through and how this type of environment affects their daily lives," she said. She encourages people to contact her at 605-867-2064 or 605-441-8640 if they have questions regarding this article.

"I will be more than willing to help and assist you in any way that I can. Everyone of you are special because you have grandparents, parents, brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles and relatives who love you. You all need to be treated special and you deserve to have a happy and fulfilling life.

Little said in the future, she will be submitting more articles regarding recovery and on issues of adult children of alcoholics.

Legislative Reports

Hopeful to get the Indian health care bill reauthorized

By Rep. Jim Bradford
District 27
D-Representative
Bennett, Haakon, Jackson, and Shannon Counties

Now in the final days of the 82nd Legislative Session, only a few items remain on the agenda: the general appropriations bill, a few conference committees, and vetoes by the governor. This past week saw the education and property tax bills come to the floor.

SB 115 came before the Education committee after clearing the Senate 21-9. The bill would allow the Department of Education to create rules for pre-school in the state. I am a firm believer that children ought to attend preschool. This bill, while not mandating children to attend preschool, would have improved all preschools in the state. The committee killed and deferred the bill to the 41st day by a vote of 8-7, but after reconsideration, the committee referred the bill to the full House with a do not pass recommendation. The House then defeated the measure by not striking the "not" by a 28-42 vote, with only two Democrats voting no.

I sponsored HCR 1009 along with Sen. Two Bulls, which requests the Congress and the President of the United States to reauthorize the federal Indian Health Care Improvement Act. Both the House and Senate passed the resolution with near unanimity.

The lone dissenting vote in the House spoke with me after the vote and said he misunderstood the resolution and apologized for his nay vote. With all 105 legislators supporting the resolution, I am hopeful we can get the Indian Health Care Improvement Act reauthorized.

This session was eventful and much was accomplished.

We secured additional funding for our children's education, albeit not as much as I had hoped for.

We addressed several other issues as well, including health care, child safety, open government, and the minimum wage. It has been a very productive year and I look forward to the 83rd Legislative Session next year.

As always, I welcome all questions and comments. Thank you.

Until next time.

Minimum wage to be increased only if Congress passes same

By Larry Lucas
District 26A
D-Representative
Mellette, Todd

During the last full week of the legislative session we debated the Bill that would have expanded on the South Dakota Clean Indoor Air Act by repealing exemptions which presently permit smoking in bars and in restaurants that serve on-sale alcoholic beverages.

The Measure failed by one vote in the House Health Committee.

Another Health Bill was the bill to adopt the Revised Uniform Anatomical Gift Act in South Dakota. This Bill passed and will create uniformity among states and territories and help to prevent issues that exist when a transplant involves two or more different jurisdictions.

The bill also clarifies procedures for revoking anatomical gifts and is intended to prevent family members of deceased or dying persons from overriding the decision of an individual to be a donor. This is a very complex issue and, I believe, we need to better education people regarding their options for being a donor at the time of their death.

Both the House and Senate agreed to set a separate Board to govern the four Career and Technical Institutes in the State. This will allow for career and technical education to develop courses of study that will better prepare students for emerging job professions in our state.

The big showdown of the Session has been funding for K-12 schools. The House State affairs removed addition money for state aid to K-12 back to the required 3 percent cost of living increase, while at the same time, the Senate amended a House Bill for a 4.3 percent increase.

Advancing the State's level of funding for our K-12 schools has developed as one of the most critical issues of the Session. SB 157 was originally intended to raise teacher salaries by at least 3.7 percent. Hopefully, the issue can be dealt with in a fair manner in a conference committee between the House and the Senate. The core of the funding debate is how much the State can afford to spend for state-aid.

Finally, the Legislature also passed SB 207, which raises the minimum wage to $7.25 in 2009. However, the House State Affairs Committee added an amendment that prohibits the legislation from taking effect unless Congress raises the Federal minimum wage.

Keith Moore, state Indian education coordinator, said the academic success of Indian students does not match that of the general school population. Indian students' tests and scores are below par, and efforts are under way to raise achievement levels, he said.

The average ACT college entrance score of South Dakota students is 21.8, Moore said, but the average for the state's Indian students is 17.5.

Lakota people are the state's largest minority group and make up 8.4 percent of the population, or about 63,000 residents, according to the Census Bureau.

Besides helping Indian students academically, the effort also should help race relations, said Zephier, who teaches the Native American Connections classes at Roosevelt High School in Sioux Falls.

The classes are offered to students of all races. ``I hope that we can educate not only Indian students but our non-Indian students about the rich traditions and cultures of our ancestors,'' she said. ``And hopefully that will help relations statewide between Indians and non-Indians.''

Student Genevieve Gregory, who is part Indian, said the class teaches the culture from the native perspective.

``It's from our side and it's more in depth,'' she said. ``They don't go into depth in certain history classes and don't explain why we were mad or retaliated.''

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I've seen you tell a lot of people these answers that they seek. So I have something to ask you. This happened in August or September and I was living at my boyfriend's house at the time.

My Thorpes bag had everything I owned in it, from my diploma, my daughter and my Social Security cards and birth certificates. I don't know what he did with my bag but could you tell me what he did with it. All he tells me is that he can't remember what happened to it.

I think he loves me but why won't he tell me what he did with my "life"

I call it my life cause my clothes, important papers and what I barely achieved in high school, my diploma.

That's all I want to know because every time I think about it I cry to him begging him to tell me where my bag is. But he just says he doesn't know.

Was it burned or thrown into the dump or given away?

Can you give me some clues or a hint cause it's hard getting a diploma.

Please help me, you are my only chance to find my Thorpes duffel bag.

Desperate To Know in Pine Ridge

Dear Desperate:

I am sorry. The bag was tossed into a dumpster. It is gone. To get a new copy of your diploma you have to call the office of the school and they will direct you.

It is true that you can't just run up to the office and get one - because their records are archived.

You can get copies of everything you need including the birth certificates - but you are right it is inconvenient.

I am not sure who tossed the bag - it may not have been your boyfriend, but whichever way it went, it is gone.

Please reconsider such close involvement with a man who throws temper tantrums.

Dear Anna,

What do you think of the recent young deaths in Indian country, especially over in Rosebud? I think of why children so young would want to hurt themselves.

Being clairvoyant, do you have an insight that you could share with you readers?

Curious

Dear Curious:

I am saddened by the despair that I feel from these young people.

Each one of them did not really intend for the suicide to be successful - they didn't take it that far within their own understanding.

They just wanted "the pain" to end. Most of the suicides involved alcohol - a warning to all children.

Alcohol is a depressant, especially in Indian children, who genetically have less tolerance for alcohol due to the lack of an enzyme that helps filter/process/break down alcohol.

When I "tune" into the victims who have forfeited their lives I hear: "Nothing can be done about the decisions that have been made, the regrets are enormous, the impact heinous, and the grief immense.

None of the children involved actively understood the impact upon family and friends.

All of the children have been guided through their deaths from loving family members in the Spirit World.

There is no hell for those confused, lost and sick children. They are met and counseled by those on the other side whose task is to awaken the love of life and the gratefulness for life within each victim and to remind them of their own sacredness.

It is a wake up call to all children who pursue their first or 700th drink: Stop before you begin, the life you dream about is never inside a bottle. It is not cool to party - it is sad and can cost you everything. It is cool to be strong and proud of who you are."

One of the children who took his life is the son of a friend.

He didn't live in a household of drugs and alcohol. Everyone at home is clean and sober. He didn't live in poverty yet he still took his own life due to depression over another friend who had committed suicide. Alcohol played a role in those suicidal decisions.

All Indian schools need to have a life raft thrown at them.

The schools need to counsel the children and the staff concerning these losses.

A network needs to be established - a suicide watch phone line of volunteers who will answer the phone and help anyone that is thinking about taking their life.

Drug and alcohol prevention are no longer secondary down the budget line but need primary attention and funding. It's a matter of life and death.

It is part and parcel of the recovery from oppression and historic trauma.

It is part of the recovery from adult children of alcoholic syndrome (ACOA). It is part of the recovery from living in poverty and dysfunctional environments.

We are all marked by these suicides.

We will grieve for our whole lifetime for these children, please let their memory begin a huge campaign of education and recovery for the adults - for the sake of the children.

There is denial on the part of adult community members.

They do not want to be culpable for the loss of the children; and they say that on their way to the bar to spend a social evening with alcohol.

Dear Anna,

My father and my mother have diabetes. So does my grandmother. I am over weight and I try to diet but my family lives on donuts and coke.

I am t13 years old.

How can I change what my family cooks for dinner and how they eat, and they never walk they always drive and the watch television all the time.

I think they are killing me. What can I do?

Living in Sugarville

Dear Living in Sugarville:

You are on the right track. Awareness is the first step. Tell your family that you are watching your sugar intake and then do that. You cannot force them to change, but you don't have to eat the donut - you can eat carrots instead.

Your mom is not a mean woman; she will diet with you - and although she won't be as good as you are at dieting she will buy carrots and other healthy foods at your request. She will read this column and shop better the next time she goes to the grocery store.

Use your own money to buy yogurt and other healthy foods for yourself. Good Luck!

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

'Scalped' paints a rough picture of the reservation

Comic takes place on fictional reservation in state, tackles issues with 'Sopranos'-like crime drama

By Robert Morast
Reprinted with permission from Sioux Falls Argus Leader

Sometimes the comfort of fiction is that the story's sensationalized plotlines are traced over a world far away from us.

That's why we can feel entertained while watching a faraway space cyborg like Darth Vader slice off his son's hand without remorse or see mobster Tony Soprano shoot his best friend in the head and then drop the portly mobster into the Atlantic Ocean's big gulp without wondering if this all-too-real scenario will break into our homes and strip us from our safe, cozy recliners.

But when fiction outlines a world closer to home, the effect can be more like a slap in the face than a subtle sensation. Such is the case with "Scalped," a new comic book set on a fictional reservation in South Dakota.

Written by a white, stay-at-home dad in Kansas, "Scalped" is a violent crime drama scripted on the Prairie Rose Indian Reservation. Again, the Prairie Rose rez is imaginary, ripped from author Jason Aaron's mind. But the setting is too familiar for anyone who's spent considerable time on one of our state's many reservations.

On pages with muted colors and scratchy drawings that look like they were penned by a Frank Miller disciple, "Scalped" shows a sensationalized view of a reservation coping with bureaucratic corruption, exploitation of land and the struggle between traditional values and contemporary habits.

With only one issue out, "Scalped" is being described by comic industry folks as "The Sopranos" on the rez. And while its plot is a mafia-like conspiracy story complete with an undercover FBI agent returning to his homeland to spread justice, the story feels too real. It reads like a bloodier version of the reservation corruption stories I heard while growing up next to the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota.

That's what makes this comic so good. Like Louise Erdrich's fabulously detailed book "Love Medicine" or Chris Eyre's striking and contemplative film "Skins," "Scalped" feels more like a commentary on contemporary reservation ills than an entertaining crime drama that could compel some comic nerds to drop $3 on the latest offering from DC's adult-orientated Vertigo imprint.

"If the book helps to raise awareness about issues faced by Native Americans today, that's fantastic," Aaron says via e-mail. "But I didn't go into writing this book with some sort of agenda in mind. 'Scalped' is still meant to be an entertaining crime series, but hopefully a series with plenty of meat on its bones in terms of social relevance."

The comic succeeds in both respects with stark - and mature - images such as a corrupt casino owner sitting next to a man he just scalped or alcoholics crossing the border into Nebraska to buy some beer.

The scenes seem too real to come from a wasichu who's never even been to the Pine Ridge reservation - which served as a model to Aaron's comic book setting. And I wonder if this cautionary thought is simply the byproduct of me working at a PC-conscious newspaper or the harbinger of skepticism to come. So I called Gabe Night Shield.

The Sioux Falls rapper grew up on the Rosebud reservation and is an avid comic book fan who lights up with excitement the rare times we talk about comics. When asked if Aaron's white skin and lack of first hand reservation experience bothers him, Night Shield says, "I don't care.

"I think it's cool. I went down and bought (the comic) as soon as I read about it," Night Shield says. "It's very rare that something like that has to do with Native Americans that's not stereotypical."

Rather than damn Aaron for presenting reservation dilemmas the writer only learned through research, Night Shield is more concerned with how he can get into the book that's based on land so familiar to him.

"Hopefully I can make a guest appearance and get killed or something," Night Shield says with a laugh.

Ultimately, I wonder if that's the reaction we should all have from "Scalped." Do we praise it for underlining social problems on ignored reservations, or do we simply applaud the comic for its writing and entertainment value?

I suppose it all depends how close we're sitting to the reality of "Scalped," and how we worried we are that this reality will spill into our lives.

A tribute to Mom, my friend
Mrs. Loretta Nellie Whirlwind Horse
"Mato He Yea Win"

June 23, 1938 to March 2, 2007

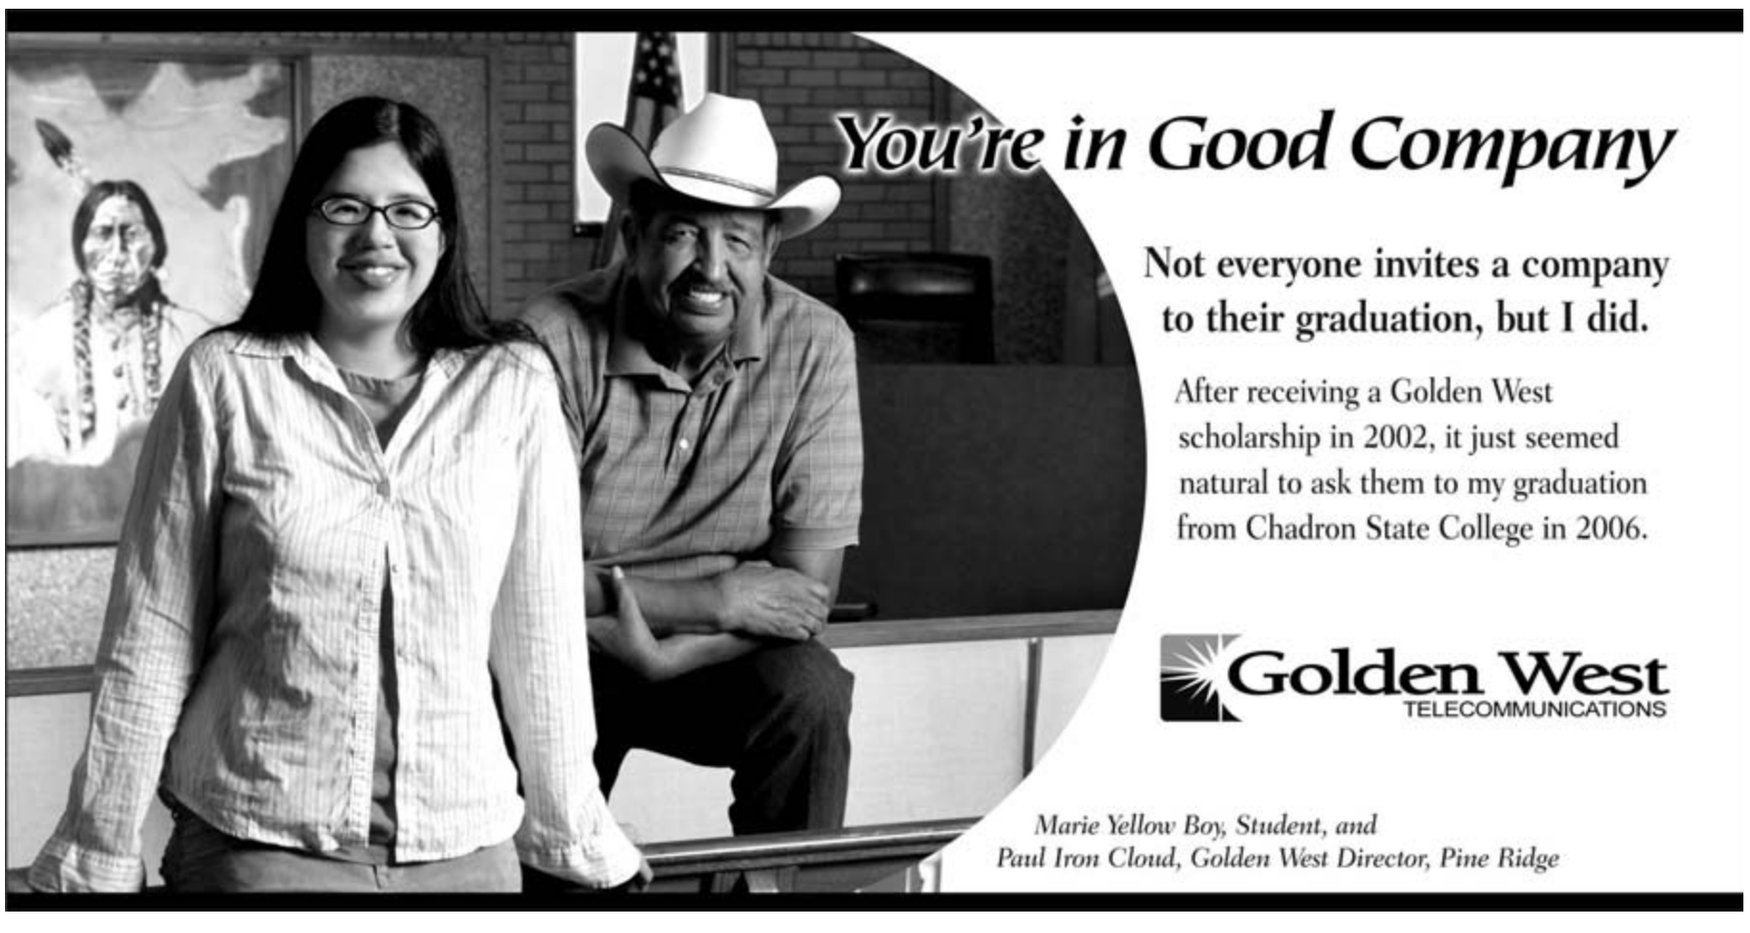
She was a traditional lady born of Louis M. Bulltail Scout of Rosebud and Anne Locke of Porcupine on June 23, 1938 at her Porcupine home. Mom was raised in the Native American Church Ways, and also in Traditional Lakota Ways by both her parent's and grandparents and also by several Aunts and Uncles.

Throughout her life, Mom was actively involved with People. Some of her many accomplishments include Pass Creek District Representative to the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council (1984 - 1986), an OST Public Safety Officer, C H R in the Pass Creek area, a Counselor at Anpetu Luta and Flowering Tree, taught Traditional Medicines at Oglala Lakota College, a cook and an Immersion Teacher for the kindergarten students at American Horse School, drove the Allen bus run for the Bennett County students daily,

Mom always enjoyed a good visit with lots of laughter, good jokes, and good food. Whether at home with friends and relatives, on or road trips to Montana visiting relatives there, Mom's smile was always evident, brightening even the coldest winter days

Mom was always quick to extend a helping hand to others, no matter the time of day. The doors to her home opened wide to invite many new faces to visit, to chat, to enjoy a good meal, and most importantly to Mom were those times when prayer filled her home. Mom was a brave, humble, honorable, and respectful and generous lady. She carried her dignity wherever she went.

In spite of the many tragedies that struck Mom throughout the years, She was a Woman Warrior. No matter how rugged the times may have been, Mom, You have always been a Tremendous Inspiration to me.



Mom, Your last many months together here with us, with all the pain you carried on a daily basis, You remained so dignified, so honorable, so humble in your ways Mom. The strength, and courage you somehow found is one of your greatest gifts to me.

Thank You Mom, for Your Love and Your patience.

Your sons and daughters, nieces and nephews, grandchildren and great grandchildren.

'We have greatness in our own culture'

Don Montileaux, well known artist shares his story of art and life.

RAPID CITY - The bon voyage party for Don Montileaux's painting was also a reunion of sorts.

On March 8, South Dakota School of Mines and Technology hosted a going away party for Montileaux's painting "Looking Beyond One's Self," which has been acquired by the Smithsonian in Washington, D.C., for its permanent collection in the National Museum of the American Indian.

It was the first time Montileaux had seen his painting in 12 years, he said. In March 1995, it took a trip on the space shuttle Enterprise and after that was stored in a NASA vault.

Brought back to Rapid City for the party, the painting - done in acrylic on watercolor paper - features three Native American figures, two males and one female, all looking in different directions. In the background is a starry sky.

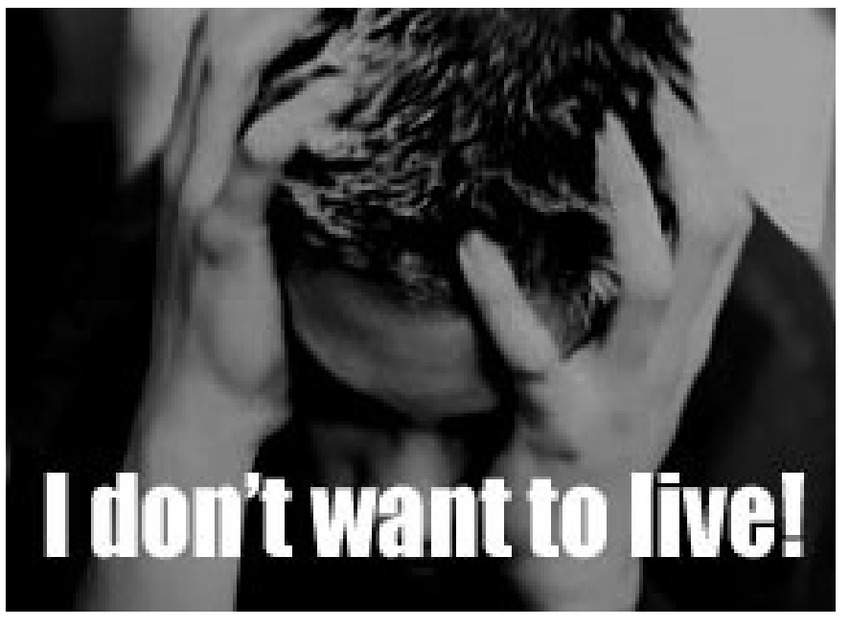
The painting was commissioned by SDSM&T in 1995 to raise money for its SKILL program to encourage American Indian students on reservations to study science and engineering.

A School of Mines alumnus who worked with NASA saw the painting and talked to then-President Richard Gowen about putting the painting aboard the Enterprise.

Montileaux said that when Gowen told him, "We're going to put this thing in space," his immediate thought was, "Yeah, right."

But in March 1995, after the space shuttle had launched, Montileaux said, "I looked up at the sky and thought, 'Man, I'm up there.'"

Education is key



At the age of five, Montileaux knew he wanted to be an artist.

And his parents knew what it would take for their only child to succeed. "They knew education was key," Montileaux said.

Montileaux's family lived in Kyle, but his parents moved to Rapid City to work so their son could attend parochial school. When Montileaux was in the eighth grade, however, he started talking about becoming a priest, and his

Suicide prevention plan needed for Oglala Nation

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

PORCUPINE - Suicide can be a silent killer on both the Oglala and Sicangu nations and people are coming together in the spirit of Okiciyapii, "helping one another" to take action against it.

On Monday, March 12 at Porcupine, 16 people attended a suicide circle of care meeting to develop a plan of action for suicide prevention and awareness for the Oglala Nation area.

The meeting was hosted by Wakanyeja Pawicayapi, Inc. of Porcupine was attended by representatives from the Lakota Oyate Wakanyeja Owicakiyapi, Oglala Sioux Tribe health administration office and health education, Kyle Indian Health Center, Rosebud Sioux

RST attorney general submits resignation to council

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Last week RST Attorney General, Dana Hanna, went before the RST council and announced his resignation effective in 30 days.

Once he completes his tenure, Hanna will be retained to work on a number of cases representing RST relative to the tribe's lawsuit against BBC, Inc. and a hearing in which the tribe's revenue department is seeking to revoke the business license of First Dakota construction company of Pierre. He will also argue an Indian Child Welfare Case in Lexinton, Neb. as he is the only RST attorney admitted to the Nebraska bar association.

RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux said, "I did not support Dana's resignation because he was effective and wasn't afraid to take on controversial cases that need to be addressed. He was not intimidated and was a litigator. The decision to accept his resignation was up to the council. He did take cases, or, pursue actions leading up to cases being filed, where, someone else may not have been so aggressive as to not pursue what was right. However, I do support the council's actions to retain Dana to finish the RST's vs. BBC litigation, the First Dakota licensing hearing, an ICWA case and the ACLU case against the Winner School District."

Hanna noted that his office has a well qualified and dedicated staff. Hanna said that his resignation did not have a negative connotation attached to it, he simply wanted to go back into private practice as an attorney and will open an office in Rapid City.

Hanna's practice will concentrate on Indian law, education law, civil rights and criminal defense and his hope is that he can continue to represent RST long into the future.

He recommended that once he vacates his position that RST's in-house attorney, Mato Standing High, be installed as Attorney General in an acting capacity.

The experience gained in representing RST seemed to please Hanna who has been with the tribe for four years as Attorney General. He was especially appreciative to RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux for his support and guidance. The experienced gained in tribal court and tribal government has proven invaluable to Hanna and he

Panel begins review of OST election

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - In early January the Oglala Sioux Tribe executive board passed a resolution appointing a three member legal panel to review the OST Constitution, the OST election code and the roles of the election board, court of election appeals and the tribal court. On Thursday and Friday, March 1 and 2, the three judge panel was in Rapid City to initiate a legal review of all the documents involved in the OST 2006 election.

Led by Dan Naranho, a former chief judge of the Kickapoo traditional tribe of Texas and alternative dispute resolution expert, the panel included John St. Clair, Chief Judge of the court on Indian Offenses on Wind River Reservation and John Thorne, a Native American lawyer and a current court of appeals judge for the State of Utah. More because of inclement weather than anything else the panel met in Rapid City and started the process of reviewing all of the documents generated by the 2006 OST tribal election process.

"The review wasn't set up as a hearing but set up to evaluate the current election process used and if they had recommendations on how to improve the process to present them to the Executive Board and eventually the council," said Donna Salomon, executive assistant to tribal president John Steele, "It is my understanding that members of the election board and two court of election appeals were asked to speak and other interested individuals had an opportunity to be heard - there has been talk about the possibility of a listening session here on Pine Ridge late this month or early next month but nothing has been decided on that and it may depend upon available funding."

The review panel has been authorized to review the tribal constitution and election code, to review the roles and functions of the election board and the court of election appeals, review the role of the tribal court and recommend what role the court should play in reviewing violations of civil rights by the election board or the court of election appeals and to review the decisions made by both the election board and the court of election appeals concerning the 2006 tribal election.

With the explicitly stated goal of improving and strengthening the OST election process, the OST Secretarie's office, the court of election of appeals and the election board have been asked to give full cooperation to the review panel and according to the resolution passed by the executive board, any information provided shall only be used to improve and strengthen the OST election process.

"It is unrealistic and outside their scope of work to expect the panel to order a new election," admitted Bruce Whelan, a tribal member and past Republican candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives, "it seems the most we can hope for that they are able to make strong recommendations to improve the election process here on Pine Ridge so that we do not end up with another illegitimate government; we need an election process that is beyond reproach that people have some trust in that their vote will be counted and will make a difference, that it will be run with integrity and will be fair."

A number of factors contributed to the need for a review panel including: following the OST primary election in October of 2006, the court of election appeals declared the primary election null and void due to a number of discrepancies and misprinted ballots

Suicide prevention

Tribe health educator, Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Alcohol Treatment Center and community members.

Recently there have been several suicides on the Rosebud reservation and some alarming statistics were provided for the Pine Ridge area on attempts and ideations. The representatives from the Rosebud organizations came to the meeting to share their concerns and working activities they have been doing for suicide prevention and awareness in the communities.

Monique Giago, executive director the WPI, gave an update on a suicide prevention project in Manderson called the Wiconi Un Wicaki Pan Pi "Calling with the Voice of Life" which is made up of 6 to 8 active advisory board members and has 35 active youth, community members and service providers. In their community they have promoted healing and awareness activities for the community. They developed a suicide prevention plan for their community.

Mary Tobacco, of the OST health education office, shared some statistics for the Pine Ridge village area from the service unit there. These statistics did not include Kyle and Wanblee health centers. The figures can be alarming.

Official suicide statistics were not available at the meeting but anecdotal reports indicate a suicide attempt occurs every two and half days on the Pine Ridge reservation.

There needs to a more accurate accounting of actual numbers that would include the service units, Bennett County Hospital and Oglala Sioux Public Safety.

At Rosebud, there are several organizations who are working on suicide prevention and awareness which include the Rosebud Hospital's mental health department, Sinte Gleska University "Circle of Care" program, the juvenile detention center, the housing and the police department. The Rosebud Sioux Tribe's JDC or Wanbli Wiconi Tipi held a meeting a couple of weeks ago at the SGU multipurpose building to formulate a plan of action to re-instill spirituality in incarcerated youth and those in the system.

Ronald "Beanie" Valandra, Rosebud's health administrator, said a student survey was conducted at Todd County Schools and a lack of spirituality and religion in their lives seemed to be a high need with the students. That sentiment seemed to be the objective of the JDC meeting as noted above.

Verlyn Walking Eagle, assistant director of the RST tribal health administration, said community people voiced their concerns from the impact of the recent deaths and a lot of dialogue came through the meetings.

In a recent RST council meeting, Representative Steve DeNoyer of Okreek community said that there as a need to take action instead of talking so much about the issue.

Phyllis Wilcox, a community member from Wanblee, has been voicing her concern from the recent suicide attempts that were made with six youth in the last several months. Representatives from the Kyle Health Center, the tribal offices and community members have been meeting to promote prevention and awareness in their community.

The objectives formulated from the meeting on Monday include getting more statistics from other institutions, developing an understanding of protocol from the hospital and law enforcement, promote reports and community awareness through the media, possibility of combining figures from Rosebud and Pine Ridge to get more funding, develop an office and a suicide hot line which will include training for QPR.

QPR stands for Question, Persuade, and Refer which is three simple steps that anyone can learn to help save a life from suicide.

Lisa Dillon Schrader, OST tribal health administrator, said there is a possibility of identifying funding and personnel for a temporary hotline until permanent funding and space can be sought.

The overall objective is to develop a reservation wide plan for suicide prevention and awareness.

Among those in attendance at the meeting were Rick Two Dogs, Monique Giago, Elicia Goodsoldier-Zephier, Lisa Dillon-Schrader, Mary Tobacco, Ed Iron Cloud, Phyllis Wilcox, Kimberly Thunder Bull, Austin Last Horse Jr., Anne Eagle Bull, Dr. Todd Wiese, Rick Two Dogs, Verona Red Feather, Ronald Valandra, Verlyn Walking Eagle and Robert Clairmont.

The next meeting is Monday, March 26 at the Wakanyeja Pawicayapi building.

An applied suicide intervention and prevention training will be taking place at the Quality Inn in Rapid City on March 22 and 23, sponsored by Aberdeen Indian Health Service. For more information on the training, Amy Peltier can be contact at 605-226-7341.

Hanna

noted that it will always be an honor to have represented the Sicangu Lakota Oyate and always will.

In recent years he has devoted some of his time to litigating a couple of powerful cases that have implication for student's rights. As a matter of fact, he is presently involved in a civil rights case brought against the Winner Public Schools by the American Civil Liberties Union. The case is Antoine v. Winner School District.

The plaintiffs in Antoine v. Winner School District are Lakota parents and Hanna will continue to work on the case along with ACLU attorneys. The plaintiffs are seeking legal remedy for discrimination against Lakota students in the school district. Hanna noted that RST is not a party to the law suit, but is supportive. He will not be billing the tribe for costs associated with arguing the case.

Antelope District 3 council representative, Robert Moore, has also insisted that the Attorney General's office be engaged in litigating claims against the Rosebud Hospital for mismanagement during the last administration.

He offered to continue to serve as lead attorney representing RST once he leaves his current position. The rationale is that he has a thorough knowledge of most of the cases as a result of time spent researching and arguing the cases in court.

Antelope District 3 council representative, Jo Colombe, inquired as to whether or not tribal attorney, Standing High, would be able to assume the cases after Hanna's departure. Both Hanna and Standing High informed the council that the usual practice was that attorneys did not interfere with each other's cases.

In one particular case involving the First Dakota construction, Hanna said that there was to be a hearing on March 29 and that he would be present to represent RST. He hoped that it would be settled at that point.

The RST council voted to extend a special contract to the Attorney General at the conclusion of his term given his in-depth knowledge and experience with the pending cases. The council then voted to examine the issue and bring it back during the next council meeting.

Montileaux

father decided he'd had enough parochial school, Montileaux said.

Montileaux transferred to public school and graduated from Rapid City High School in 1966.

His education continued that same year when he got a tribal scholarship and went to the Institute of American Indian Art in Santa Fe.

At that school, "I learned who I was as a Native person," he said. In Rapid City schools, he had learned about Custer's Last Stand and the Battle at Wounded Knee; through later teachings, he heard the other side of the story, about the Battle of Greasy Grass and the Wounded Knee Massacre.

Montileaux earned a bachelors degree at Black Hills State College in 1970 and interned with Oscar Howe at the University of South Dakota. Eventually he returned to Rapid City, married Paulette Hudson in 1974, and had two daughters and a son.

Needing to make a living, Montileaux worked at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center for 22 years, eventually becoming assistant manager, but his education and artistry never stopped. He continued to create art, and at the Civic Center he saw art and crafts shows and learned how other artists marketed their work.

"That was good background for me as an artist," Montileaux said.

He decided seven years ago to give up the day job and try to make a living solely as an artist. Although he enjoyed his years working at the Civic Center, the reliance on a paycheck "just ruins you after awhile," he said. "There's a false happiness, I believe. True happiness is doing what you really want to do."

Now Montileaux markets his work at art shows and in galleries, and doing that required learning a whole new set of skills.

At major art shows in Santa Fe, Indianapolis, Scottsdale, and Phoenix, Montileaux observed how the other professional artists presented their work and themselves to potential buyers and noticed that they dressed well and had nice displays.

"I think you should be polished" Montileaux said; a high level of professionalism projects competence to the big buyers.

Montileaux also had to learn how to price his work, take payments by credit card, keep books, project costs of going to a show, make travel arrangements, and get tax numbers in the states where he sells his work himself.

His ongoing education has paid off.

"I am what I wanted to be," he said. "There's very few that can achieve that in the art world."

Tradition, spirituality, history

Montileaux, Oglala Lakota, credits his mentor, the late Herman Red Elk, as a primary artistic as well as spiritual influence in his life. Cultural education needs to include religion and ceremonies, Montileaux said, and Red Elk "gave me that foundation, that solidness."

Red Elk taught Montileaux the art of hide painting, from processing hides to learning what the designs mean to indigenous people. "I learned what it meant to be Native American," Montileaux said.

Another traditional art Montileaux has perfected is ledger drawing, a form of illustration that joins European bookkeeping with Native Americans' attempts to preserve their history and culture.

In the 1800s, Montileaux said, buffalo hunters were encouraged by the government to deplete buffalo herds, and by about 1860 they were fairly successful. "Kill a buffalo, kill an Indian-that was their philosophy," Montileaux said.

In danger of losing their culture and with no written language, Plains Indians had to devise a method to record the events of their lives, Montileaux said. And so they obtained cast-off ledger books from storekeepers and banks, and in them illustrated the major events of their tiospaye.

"This became our journal," he said. "This whole book was a very valuable book."

In later years, collectors acquired the books and removed individual pages, and "ledger art was born," Montileaux said.

Continuing this tradition, Montileaux has a collection of antique ledger books in his studio at Prairie Edge, and he incorporates the elegantly penned lettering on ledger pages into the designs he draws with colored pencils.

Through his art, Montileaux is giving something back to the next generation of Lakota people. Prints of "Looking Beyond One's Self" continue to be sold to support SDSM&T's SKILL program to provide mentoring and support for gifted Lakota students.

And Montileaux's book, Tatanka and the Lakota People, a creation story written in both English and Lakota, tells a story with a message of importance for Native American children: "We have greatness in our own culture," Montileaux said.

used in polling places across the reservation. The council voted to not accept the decision of the court of election appeals, voted to continue forward with the general election and to remove the court of election appeals. Five days before the general election, the election board decided to remove Alex White Plume from the ballot because of a felony conviction in the early 1980's.

White Plume moved into the presidency after Cecelia Fire Thunder was removed as tribal president in June of 2006. White Plume was the top vote getter for president in the primary and immediately filed an appeal with the court of election appeals.

Rather than issuing a decision on White Plume's appeal, the new court of election appeals recommended starting over with a new timeframe. The election board had printed two sets of ballots, one with Steele and Fire Thunder and a set with Steele and White Plume. The election board went with the Steele and Fire Thunder ballots on general election day citing the appeals court's failure to respond to White Plume's appeal. On the day of the general election, the court of election appeals certified White Plume as a candidate who in turn sent the decision onto the chief of police who sent out a memo ordering the confiscation of all of the ballot boxes.

Steele won the presidency by a wide margin and the new tribal government was sworn in on Dec. 5 at Piya Wiconi, Oglala Lakota College's main office outside of Kyle. For a couple of days both Steele and White Plume operated out of the Red Cloud building in Pine Ridge.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs through their regional director recognized the new tribal government right after the Dec. 5 swearing in ceremony and stated that the BIA would honor the decisions made by the tribal courts. The Bureau has also agreed to pay for the costs of the three member review panel supporting the intent of the XB resolution to strengthen the tribe's overall election process.

According to Salomon, a report from the three judge panel should not take more than a couple of weeks to complete once the review has been completed.

Seminar focuses on teaching methods for poverty areas

FORT YATES, N.D. -The problem, though enormous, is pretty straightforward: Poverty has a tremendous impact on how students learn, communicate, behave, and view themselves; most teachers are from middle class-with middle class values, attitudes, and expectations-and need advice and tools to better connect with those students and help them succeed.

The "hidden rules" of different socio-economic classes form the basis of this timely training opportunity being held at the Prairie Knights Pavilion in Fort Yates, N.D. on March 28 from 8:30 a.m.-3: 30 p.m.

Internationally-respected author and career educator Ruby K. Payne, Ph.D., will present a workshop for local and regional educators based on her best-selling book, A Framework for Understanding Poverty. The book has sold more than one million copies.

"Teachers serving students from poverty are under-equipped to help kids succeed," Payne said. "Middle class teacher backgrounds differ vastly from their students living in poverty."

From classroom teachers and administrators to school support staff, board members, and even parents, this breakthrough training provides practical, real-world support and guidance to improve your effectiveness in working with children from all socio-economic backgrounds.

Audiences will learn how to:

Recognize the "hidden rules" that govern poverty, middle class, and wealth.

Comprehend the facts of poverty as they apply to children in a school setting.

Understand poverty's impact on communication, motivation, performance, and behavior.

Identify-and help others recognize-the strengths and abilities of children from poverty.

Arrange teaching opportunities that increase interest, retention, and achievement.

This event is sponsored by Sitting Bull College and the Northwest Area Foundation, with participants encouraged to pre-register. Morning refreshments and lunch will be provided, with book signings by Dr. Payne scheduled during the workshop.

Todd County students work with Earl Bullhead on handgame techniques during a day long session.

Students learn techniques of hand games from Earl Bullhead

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Earl Bullhead, the Lakota language project director at Lower Brule Community College, held a hand game clinic at the Todd County School District for hand game advisors, community youth leaders and mentors on Friday, March 9.

Leta Brandis, the Indian Studies Coordinator for the school district explained that there is a need for all hand games players and sponsors to understand the rules. Often times, when the rules are not standardized there is a tendency toward confusion.

The other objective for holding the clinic is that there are many Indian studies personnel and language teachers who are not familiar with hand games, in general, and the clinic served to provide additional exposure and "hands on" experience.

There was a cross section of an estimated 35 young people at the clinic, including several high school students. Some of the outlying areas were represented including Okreek, Horse Creek Community and Milk's Camp.

For those who had the pleasure of listening and interacting with Earl Bullhead for the first time, it is obvious that his sense of humor has developed over time through working with students, educators and Lakota studies personnel over the years. He said, "You can't be 't'su' when working as a teacher." His relies on his sense of humor to draw contrasts between Lakota people and the mainstream and it is often quite hilarious as his observations are classic examples of his ability to see humor in everyday events.

He said, "When you play, use the CHR's to take sugar counts and blood pressure to see how much has changed.

Earl Bullhead, worked with staff and students on the history of hand games.

Everyone has to dance and move. Moving and having fun."

The class engaged in a hand game contest leading up to lunch and everyone had a chance to loosen up a little. A set of 17 rules were given to the students and they were able to examine the beaded sticks used to keep score.

He said he had gone to the Lakota Nation Invitational and American Indian Higher Education Consortium hand games contests and it was often confusing to see differing rules. He wrote, "Many games held a central place in ceremonies, and many popular sports began as religious rites. Often games prepared participants for such activities as war and hunting…Hand games were a common guessing game for many tribes and are still played today. Two members of one team will take bones or sticks and hide them under their hands, shifting one to another while other members of the team sing, drum and distract the other team. At the end, the second team has to guess where the bones are."

He first observed a time prior to 1968 when some Lakota grandmothers and grandfathers had a great time playing hand games. They apparently were quite animated in the way they moved and did not appear to be self-conscious.

Hardly anyone is left from the time when he saw some folks playing a game called, "hanpa ape' icunpi" which translates into "hitting moccasins."

No one knew much about the original term, so he took a 16MM camera and recorded some of the hand games being played at Little Eagle.

There was a certain etiquette in playing such games; Bullhead said, first of all the "akicita" were always included and respected, while no one was to glare at those speaking. You could, however, gently stare down the person but were never allowed to touch them.

There apparently are many hand games rules and songs posted on the internet; however, Bullhead said that the Lakota have to put into proper perspective the way the Lakota play them. He said, "I want to encourage you to play the games that belong to us. The two button game belongs to the Blackfoot.

It is also difficult to find singers who know which hand game songs to sing and many times they learn on the job. Another issue is that the songs that are sung may not be appropriate for hand games, but were created for other social settings, according to Bullhead.

Bullhead was very instructional minded during his entire talk and a lot of his advice and illustrations referred to a Lakota context. He explained that tobacco was to be used for ceremonial purposes, while the term "akicita" meant "security" and not always warrior.

He spoke of his work in creating a couple of music CD's and said that each of them featured songs that came off an old wax cylinder in Washington, DC.

Urban Indian health care funding could be struck down by courts

WASHINGTON, DC - If the Bush administration had its way it would have the courts strike down funding for urban Indian healthcare funding. The U. S. Senate held a hearing last week on the reauthorization of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act which has been held up by Republican senators. Apparently the Department of Justice is questioning the eligibility of urban Indians and lineal descendents to receive federal services.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-CA) said yesterday that "Cutting off funding for the Urban Health care program is a mistake…I will work to restore funding for the program." Feinstein, a prominent Democrat is head of the Senate Appropriations Committee whose responsibility it is to draw up spending bills for Indian health care.

Restoring the funds for urban Indian health care would represent 22 percent of the programs projected needs and Democrats and some Republicans are working hard to ensure its inclusion in reauthorization of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act. Sen. John Kerry (D-M

A) was quoted as saying "It would be a irresponsible step backward to cut funding for programs are proven to significantly help Native American residents.

Another California Senator, Barbara Boxer, and ten other Republican and Democrat senators are in favor of funding the urban Indian health care program. In her own state, some 200 people have been turned away in Santa Barbara who could not Eligibility for health care services has always stood on treaties, federal law and trust responsibility, but the Bush administration claims that it is based on race and therefore is unconstitutional according to the DOJ.

On the House side, a hearing was also held last week by a bi-partisan group including Representatives Nick Rahall (D-VA), Frank Pallone (D-NJ) and Don Young (R-AK.)

The Senate Indian Affairs Committee also met last on March 8 and heard testimony from Dr. John Agwunobi, Assistant Secretary, Department of Health and Human Services, accompanied by Dr. Charles Grim of the Indian Health Service. Rachel A. Joseph of the National Steering Committee on the Reauthorization of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act and others. The hearing was carried on the internet and lasted two hours.

The Senate Indian Affairs Committee documented the fact that there are 34 urban Indian organizations providing a full range of health services for some 430,000 eligible Indian clients. Apparently more than half of all American Indian and Alaskan Natives live in urban areas and the latest administration posturing threatens their future access to quality health care.

Rachel Joseph made the argument that the definition for American Indian as used in the reauthorization request is the same one that has been used for 30 years. She also added that the same definition is used in the pending re-authorization of the No Child Left Behind legislation as proposed by the Bush administration.

Attorney Edward Lazarus also testified to the fact that the statistics show that the high rates of diabetes, suicide, alcoholism, etc. support the need to reauthorize the Indian Health Care Improvement Act as the rates are compelling both in the city and on reservations.

The planned cuts to the urban Indian health funding amounts to $33 million and will affect South Dakota Indian health centers in Sioux Falls, Pierre and Rapid City.

Badlands considers fee increase

INTERIOR - Badlands National Park will hold a public hearing next week on a proposed increase in the park's entrance fee.

Park officials say fees collected benefit both Badlands National Park and other national parks. Fees paid at the park are split with the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

Fees paid at the park have been used to improve trails and restrooms, help finance a fossil dig and support the reintroduction of bighorn sheep and black-footed ferrets within the park.

The fee hearing will be held this Thursday at the Ben Reifel Visitor Center in the park.

Finding My Voice

Remembering SuAnne

Thorpe pride and the red dress

Dana Lone Hill

Today, March 15 is SuAnne's birthday

When I was in high school I was a cheerleader. For every sport I could cheer for. Yes, me. My friends all cheered with me in 1989 for the girl's basketball team where we went to school, including my best friend Andrea and cousin Georgine.

Our girl's basketball team was awesome - the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes. I don't remember the record, though I do know out of the whole season they lost only four games. We had to deal with things other schools didn't have to, mainly racism. Although other Indian schools didn't like us at all either and the neighboring reservation bombed our pep bus with rocks....injuring some kids. We were used to not being liked, our boys team had won the State Championship only two years before. I was a junior in 1989 and SuAnne was a sophomore.

Everybody remembers something about SuAnne and I will tell you what I remember.

She liked to sing off key and loudly, especially television show tunes and it always put the whole team and cheerleaders in a good mood. Try traveling across a boring state with 30-some teenage girls and you will appreciate this fact.

She was an over-achiever in all she did, whether it was something she excelled at like sports or something she wasn't good at like art - she was the ultimate perfectionist.

In a powder puff football game one time she scored all her teams touchdowns and tackled every member of the opposing team. It was supposed to be tag football and the reason I didn't play was because of the fact that I knew she was going to tackle.

She broke a state record, that year in her sophomore year. She scored 67 points in one game. More than the other team scored altogether.

She had two older sisters she was extremely proud of and one nephew she was proud of.

She had a dedicated mother, who appeared at every school event.

She didn't ever drink or party. She never used drugs. This is rare growing up on a reservation where there is nothing for teens to do. She was passionately against it. I started "Dry Friday" when I was a junior. When I was out of high school she took over. We all got together and brought our own snacks and rented movies. The local substance abuse program provided the money for snacks movies and a place for us to chill out on Friday nights. I heard she added more activities to this after I was gone.

She fought racism with humor and let me tell you how:

The year was 1989 and our high school was still coming off of a buzz from the boys winning State in 1987. We were playing a tough team from Lead-Deadwood. The game was tough, rough, and very competitive. After getting booed, having derogatory remarks shouted at us and their fans war hooping, we won in overtime. After we got dressed and went out to our bus we noticed something. Someone had vandalized the bus. What had once said: PINE RIDGE THORPES had now had two of the letter stickers pulled off the charter bus. It now said: PINE RIDGE HOR ES. That was an instant downer. We all stood around depressed, while our coach called the cops. He was livid. A crowd had formed, due to the cop cars. All of a sudden, out of nowhere SuAnne yelled "Come on you whores, let's get on the bus!!" To which we all busted out laughing. As we climbed onto our bus she started a cheer..."If you're proud to be a whore clap your hands." We all continued it in our singsong way. The righteous parents standing around covered their kid's ears and scurried off. They can let their kids partake in racism, but not hear the word whore.

We easily made it to the state tournament that year. We fought hard all year for the number one rank, I don't remember if we ever got it, and hardly ever were given credit for it. But we walked proudly into the city across the state with our heads held high and as number one seed. Even though most of us were too superstitious to think a number one seed was a good thing. We mostly thought number one was just a reason to get taken down.

Our girl's team won the first two games easily. We ended up in the championship game on a Saturday night. On the way to the arena that night, someone gasped. We then noticed our windows. The T had fallen and the people with the P in their window had forgotten to leave the light on. From the street it said: H O R E S. It was worth a small scatter of nervous laughter. Everything went by so fast, we didn't even realize what it meant to us. Just like the game. It was so defensive. All I remember really is it was low scoring. At the end I remember we was tied and we got the ball. SuAnne had run down the court with it, there was only seconds left. She threw up a wild shot from the free throw line. It was hard and bounced back at her she caught her own rebound and wildly threw it up again. The buzzer went off, time was out. The whistle blew and the ref announced it as good. She shot before time ran out.

WE WON!!! WE WON!! Even us cheerleaders, who cheered the girls on forgot there was such thing as a cheerleading competition and the poise that went with it.

The next day was weird, like any other day. I thought we would automatically be known as state champs. We did decorate our bus. But we was treated the same everywhere. Once we got on the west side we had to go through the neighboring reservation which had months earlier bombed our pep bus with rocks. We had police escorts and joked about taking cover. Instead we were in for a complete shock. The road there was lined with people from that reservation. They held signs up congratulating us and clapping for our team. We were shocked. Our enemy was proud of us, I don't know about any of the other girls but I was swallowing back tears.

Somebody then said, "I wonder how it is going to be back home?" Home, was still an hour away. About 20 miles out of our hometown and right into the "rez" we seen them. Cars were lined on the side of Highway 18. They were all cheering, war hooping, clapping and had their cars painted. They proceeded to follow us home. SuAnne had the bright idea of opening the emergency latch on top and peeking out. The coach even let her hold the trophy up. All the cars honked. We all took turns peeking out and waving, it was awesome.

When we pulled into our hometown, Pine Ridge we seen that the four way was closed off by the police. The four way, which did at the time have a stoplight and was at the time the only stoplight had been closed off for all of us on the bus. As we descended we realized that everyone was there for us. I mean we knew it, but I think it hit us when we came out of the bus. There was a drum group in the middle playing the Sioux honoring song. We all round danced with all the people and then they led us into the Billy Mills Hall, which is our local town hall named after an Olympic hero from the 60s. There we had a feast waiting for us. I don't remember eating it. I remember everyone crying with pride, making us sing the school song, and praising our girl's team for the championship. I remember being proud of who I am, yes being a Thorpe was proud, always. I remember feeling the pride of my people, of being proud that I was Oglala Lakota and feeling like our people were proud of that. I remember looking at them and realizing for the first time in my life I was proud of who I was and where I came from, and it had nothing to do with my school.

The other thing I wanted to tell you of SuAnne and share about her was how good of a friend she was. In 1990, I was elected homecoming queen and had no dress to wear. I had no dress to wear, as my prom dress had been the dress from the junior year royalty. SuAnne let me use the dress she had bought in Hawaii. It was red and backless and beautiful. I won that night and she came up and gave me a hug and told me she was proud of me. That following spring she let me use the dress again for senior photos. The school paid for the homecoming pictures because they hung them in the halls along with the pictures of the graduates of that year.

The following year I moved to the nearest city to forget about my life on the "Rez." I had forgotten all the pride that had swelled within me only two years earlier. I worked hard and I heard news from home, but immediately just wanted it all to be gone. I didn't care where I was from. I had heard SuAnne and my bro Charlie had been crowned the new homecoming royalty. I didn't congratulate them, I only tried to forget my life back there. I was working in a Native American Arts and Crafts Gallery while all this was going on. I remember distinctly the night I heard it on the news. It was on the local news, it was Feb. 9, 1992. SuAnne was on her way to the South Dakota Miss Basketball ceremony when she got in a car accident.

From the minute I heard of her death, I did not accept it. I didn't go to her funeral. I tried to stay away from the "Rez" blaming the "rez" for all that is wrong with my life. I had forgotten the pride that I once had thanks to SuAnne and about a dozen other girls the night we brought home the state trophy. I had forgotten all of it. I just merely ignored it all and chose to try and forget. About three years ago, our girls team was in the State championship game again. I watched it on TV with nostalgia. I fought back tears. Our girls lost it but SuAnne's little cousin Jamie won "The Spirit of Su" award. A four color star quilt given to a single member of the tourney for good sportsmanship. Her cousin cried and so did I. It was then, I realized she was gone. She had been gone since the age of 17. The one person, who had scholarships to Division I schools and maybe would have had her dream come true and played in a professional league for women and deemed us all proud to be Thorpes, native, Oglala Lakota, women, was gone. My friend whose death I denied for years. And why did I deny it? She helped give me all the pride that was swelled inside of me when I was 17. Pride about who I was and where I was from.

And it took me over a decade to realize she was gone. SuAnne was a part of my life, my youth, my pride, in myself. I am truly blessed to have been acquainted with her.

When I go back to the high school and see my red dress picture hanging next to her red dress picture, I am proud, just like the day we came home...on top of the world.

Dana Lone Hill is a 34-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota College.

Spencer's work is revolutionary

Dear Editor:

I wanted to tell you that I went to an event this past weekend at Manderson Day School Gym in Manderson.

The event was titled the 2007 South Dakota Golden Gloves Boxing Tournament and featured more than 20 fights.

I was very honored to be asked to be the Master of ceremonies for the event as I am a former Amateur fighter myself.

I fought from 1988 - 1991 for Neil Whitesell of the Rapid City Boxing Club and briefly in 1993 for Eddie Martinez of the Martinez Boxing club.

I want you and all your readers to know that the Lakota Nation has a very good thing going for itself right now through a young man named David "Chissie" Spencer. He is the Head Coach for the Nation of Outlaws Boxing Club in Manderson, SD, and is a true inspiration to many of our young people.

Chissie has taken Lakota Nation boxing to another level, not just in the ring, but in the inner political cirlces that always accompany boxing.

He has become a true and dedicated voice for Indian fighters in and out of the ring, and has created many opportunites for them as well.

The work that Chissie Spencer is doing right now is revolutionary to be sure, but more importantly it is precedent-setting, in that young Lakota amateur fighters and young Indian fighters in general are going to have wide doors opened for them now and in the future.

Mr. Spencer put on a high-class event this past weekend and deserves sincere support and accolades from the Lakota people for his hard work.

I am emcouraging all my relatives to get behind him and empower him to fight for the rights of young Indian fighters throughout the local, state and national venues where they need representation.

Hoka Hey.

Finding My Voice

Remembering SuAnne

Thorpe pride and the red dress

Dana Lone Hill

Today, March 15 is SuAnne's birthday

When I was in high school I was a cheerleader. For every sport I could cheer for. Yes, me. My friends all cheered with me in 1989 for the girl's basketball team where we went to school, including my best friend Andrea and cousin Georgine.

Our girl's basketball team was awesome - the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes. I don't remember the record, though I do know out of the whole season they lost only four games. We had to deal with things other schools didn't have to, mainly racism. Although other Indian schools didn't like us at all either and the neighboring reservation bombed our pep bus with rocks....injuring some kids. We were used to not being liked, our boys team had won the State Championship only two years before. I was a junior in 1989 and SuAnne was a sophomore.

Everybody remembers something about SuAnne and I will tell you what I remember.

She liked to sing off key and loudly, especially television show tunes and it always put the whole team and cheerleaders in a good mood. Try traveling across a boring state with 30-some teenage girls and you will appreciate this fact.

She was an over-achiever in all she did, whether it was something she excelled at like sports or something she wasn't good at like art - she was the ultimate perfectionist.

In a powder puff football game one time she scored all her teams touchdowns and tackled every member of the opposing team. It was supposed to be tag football and the reason I didn't play was because of the fact that I knew she was going to tackle.

She broke a state record, that year in her sophomore year. She scored 67 points in one game. More than the other team scored altogether.

She had two older sisters she was extremely proud of and one nephew she was proud of.

She had a dedicated mother, who appeared at every school event.

She didn't ever drink or party. She never used drugs. This is rare growing up on a reservation where there is nothing for teens to do. She was passionately against it. I started "Dry Friday" when I was a junior. When I was out of high school she took over. We all got together and brought our own snacks and rented movies. The local substance abuse program provided the money for snacks movies and a place for us to chill out on Friday nights. I heard she added more activities to this after I was gone.

She fought racism with humor and let me tell you how:

The year was 1989 and our high school was still coming off of a buzz from the boys winning State in 1987. We were playing a tough team from Lead-Deadwood. The game was tough, rough, and very competitive. After getting booed, having derogatory remarks shouted at us and their fans war hooping, we won in overtime. After we got dressed and went out to our bus we noticed something. Someone had vandalized the bus. What had once said: PINE RIDGE THORPES had now had two of the letter stickers pulled off the charter bus. It now said: PINE RIDGE HOR ES. That was an instant downer. We all stood around depressed, while our coach called the cops. He was livid. A crowd had formed, due to the cop cars. All of a sudden, out of nowhere SuAnne yelled "Come on you whores, let's get on the bus!!" To which we all busted out laughing. As we climbed onto our bus she started a cheer..."If you're proud to be a whore clap your hands." We all continued it in our singsong way. The righteous parents standing around covered their kid's ears and scurried off. They can let their kids partake in racism, but not hear the word whore.

We easily made it to the state tournament that year. We fought hard all year for the number one rank, I don't remember if we ever got it, and hardly ever were given credit for it. But we walked proudly into the city across the state with our heads held high and as number one seed. Even though most of us were too superstitious to think a number one seed was a good thing. We mostly thought number one was just a reason to get taken down.

Our girl's team won the first two games easily. We ended up in the championship game on a Saturday night. On the way to the arena that night, someone gasped. We then noticed our windows. The T had fallen and the people with the P in their window had forgotten to leave the light on. From the street it said: H O R E S. It was worth a small scatter of nervous laughter. Everything went by so fast, we didn't even realize what it meant to us. Just like the game. It was so defensive. All I remember really is it was low scoring. At the end I remember we was tied and we got the ball. SuAnne had run down the court with it, there was only seconds left. She threw up a wild shot from the free throw line. It was hard and bounced back at her she caught her own rebound and wildly threw it up again. The buzzer went off, time was out. The whistle blew and the ref announced it as good. She shot before time ran out.

WE WON!!! WE WON!! Even us cheerleaders, who cheered the girls on forgot there was such thing as a cheerleading competition and the poise that went with it.

The next day was weird, like any other day. I thought we would automatically be known as state champs. We did decorate our bus. But we was treated the same everywhere. Once we got on the west side we had to go through the neighboring reservation which had months earlier bombed our pep bus with rocks. We had police escorts and joked about taking cover. Instead we were in for a complete shock. The road there was lined with people from that reservation. They held signs up congratulating us and clapping for our team. We were shocked. Our enemy was proud of us, I don't know about any of the other girls but I was swallowing back tears.

Somebody then said, "I wonder how it is going to be back home?" Home, was still an hour away. About 20 miles out of our hometown and right into the "rez" we seen them. Cars were lined on the side of Highway 18. They were all cheering, war hooping, clapping and had their cars painted. They proceeded to follow us home. SuAnne had the bright idea of opening the emergency latch on top and peeking out. The coach even let her hold the trophy up. All the cars honked. We all took turns peeking out and waving, it was awesome.

When we pulled into our hometown, Pine Ridge we seen that the four way was closed off by the police. The four way, which did at the time have a stoplight and was at the time the only stoplight had been closed off for all of us on the bus. As we descended we realized that everyone was there for us. I mean we knew it, but I think it hit us when we came out of the bus. There was a drum group in the middle playing the Sioux honoring song. We all round danced with all the people and then they led us into the Billy Mills Hall, which is our local town hall named after an Olympic hero from the 60s. There we had a feast waiting for us. I don't remember eating it. I remember everyone crying with pride, making us sing the school song, and praising our girl's team for the championship. I remember being proud of who I am, yes being a Thorpe was proud, always. I remember feeling the pride of my people, of being proud that I was Oglala Lakota and feeling like our people were proud of that. I remember looking at them and realizing for the first time in my life I was proud of who I was and where I came from, and it had nothing to do with my school.

The other thing I wanted to tell you of SuAnne and share about her was how good of a friend she was. In 1990, I was elected homecoming queen and had no dress to wear. I had no dress to wear, as my prom dress had been the dress from the junior year royalty. SuAnne let me use the dress she had bought in Hawaii. It was red and backless and beautiful. I won that night and she came up and gave me a hug and told me she was proud of me. That following spring she let me use the dress again for senior photos. The school paid for the homecoming pictures because they hung them in the halls along with the pictures of the graduates of that year.

The following year I moved to the nearest city to forget about my life on the "Rez." I had forgotten all the pride that had swelled within me only two years earlier. I worked hard and I heard news from home, but immediately just wanted it all to be gone. I didn't care where I was from. I had heard SuAnne and my bro Charlie had been crowned the new homecoming royalty. I didn't congratulate them, I only tried to forget my life back there. I was working in a Native American Arts and Crafts Gallery while all this was going on. I remember distinctly the night I heard it on the news. It was on the local news, it was Feb. 9, 1992. SuAnne was on her way to the South Dakota Miss Basketball ceremony when she got in a car accident.

From the minute I heard of her death, I did not accept it. I didn't go to her funeral. I tried to stay away from the "Rez" blaming the "rez" for all that is wrong with my life. I had forgotten the pride that I once had thanks to SuAnne and about a dozen other girls the night we brought home the state trophy. I had forgotten all of it. I just merely ignored it all and chose to try and forget. About three years ago, our girls team was in the State championship game again. I watched it on TV with nostalgia. I fought back tears. Our girls lost it but SuAnne's little cousin Jamie won "The Spirit of Su" award. A four color star quilt given to a single member of the tourney for good sportsmanship. Her cousin cried and so did I. It was then, I realized she was gone. She had been gone since the age of 17. The one person, who had scholarships to Division I schools and maybe would have had her dream come true and played in a professional league for women and deemed us all proud to be Thorpes, native, Oglala Lakota, women, was gone. My friend whose death I denied for years. And why did I deny it? She helped give me all the pride that was swelled inside of me when I was 17. Pride about who I was and where I was from.

And it took me over a decade to realize she was gone. SuAnne was a part of my life, my youth, my pride, in myself. I am truly blessed to have been acquainted with her.

When I go back to the high school and see my red dress picture hanging next to her red dress picture, I am proud, just like the day we came home...on top of the world.

Spencer's work is revolutionary

Dear Editor:

I wanted to tell you that I went to an event this past weekend at Manderson Day School Gym in Manderson.

The event was titled the 2007 South Dakota Golden Gloves Boxing Tournament and featured more than 20 fights.

I was very honored to be asked to be the Master of ceremonies for the event as I am a former Amateur fighter myself.

I fought from 1988 - 1991 for Neil Whitesell of the Rapid City Boxing Club and briefly in 1993 for Eddie Martinez of the Martinez Boxing club.

I want you and all your readers to know that the Lakota Nation has a very good thing going for itself right now through a young man named David "Chissie" Spencer. He is the Head Coach for the Nation of Outlaws Boxing Club in Manderson, SD, and is a true inspiration to many of our young people.

Chissie has taken Lakota Nation boxing to another level, not just in the ring, but in the inner political cirlces that always accompany boxing.

He has become a true and dedicated voice for Indian fighters in and out of the ring, and has created many opportunites for them as well.

The work that Chissie Spencer is doing right now is revolutionary to be sure, but more importantly it is precedent-setting, in that young Lakota amateur fighters and young Indian fighters in general are going to have wide doors opened for them now and in the future.

Mr. Spencer put on a high-class event this past weekend and deserves sincere support and accolades from the Lakota people for his hard work.

I am emcouraging all my relatives to get behind him and empower him to fight for the rights of young Indian fighters throughout the local, state and national venues where they need representation.

Cherokee vote descendants of slaves off tribal rolls

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

After she and 2,800 descendants of slaves once owned by the Cherokee Nation were denied membership or disenrolled from the tribe, Marilyn Vann, president of the Descendants of Freedmen of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma said, "We're not going away. We are calling on the American people to bombard Congress, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, all media outlets, that justice be done."

Vann was referring to a special election held last week on the Cherokee Nation in which 77 percent of the eligible voters removed them as members of the tribe. The vote followed a petition drive for a ballot measure to determine who is a citizen of the Cherokee Nation.

Principal Chief Chad Smith said after the election that the vote was not about race, but represented a right of self-government to decide who is a member of the nation. "My roll as Principal Chief was to bring the issue of citizenship to a vote. Determination of citizenship is the decision of the people, not the Principal Chief, not the tribal council and not the court."

Smith said, "The Cherokee People spoke clearly that as long as you had a Cherokee ancestor on our base roll of 1906, it did not matter what other blood, race or appearance you have." He accused Vann of trying to play the race card, "But it did not work because we know we have thousands of citizens who look Black, white, Hispanic or Asian," he said.

Columnist Tommy Felts of the Coffeyville (Kansas) Journal was outraged over the election results. He wrote, "A victim of one of the worst chapters in American history, the Cherokee Nation has lost the moral high ground."

Felts continued, "These are the people whose ancestors were forced from their land, denied civil rights and treated as worthless dregs unfit for life within the new society. With their stunning vote the Cherokee have put their black and mixed-race brethren on a path toward the same fate."

Although the freedmen will lose their tribal rights they will not be forced marched to a new location. And they will not lose their property or their jobs. But the vote of the Cherokee people does bring up a matter of self-government and sovereignty.

The Indian people were herded on to reservations and denied the most basic of human rights. They had no control over their government, they had no freedom of the press, and they had not control over their finances. Everything they owned was placed into "trust" by the Department of the Interior and the Indian people were designated as "wards" of the United States and deemed incapable of making the very decisions that impacted every avenue of their daily lives. And that included decisions of health, education, welfare, self-government, law enforcement or justice.

Every tribe from the Navajo Nation to the tribes of the Lakota and Dakota speaking nations fought tooth and nail to recover the basic rights of freedom and independence that had been their inherent rights since time immemorial.

It took thousands of dollars and thousands of hours in order for the Indian nations to regain a semblance of those basic rights. They fought their way through the local federal courts and oftentimes reached the U. S. Supreme Court in their valiant fight to establish their status as sovereign nations. Many died as patriots of their nations in establishing these rights.

At one time not so long ago tribal membership was established by the Bureau of Indian Affairs without consideration of the rights of the different tribes. Oftentimes the very people charged with this responsibility skewered these rights of citizenship. The Richard Nixon Administration passed legislation known as the Indian Education and Self-Determination Act in the mid-1970s that sought to re-establish sovereignty amongst the Indian nations.

The legal ability to determine actions that impact the very future of the tribes now rests in the hands of the duly elected tribal governments. Each tribe has set its own criteria for membership. In some cases this has meant hardships for innocent victims that have been removed from the tribal rolls by decision of the tribal council. This is particularly evident amongst the many Indian tribes in California.

There are times when persons of Indian ancestry cannot meet the strict criteria established by the tribe for membership and even though they may have what they consider to be legitimate claims, the decision as to whether they can be enrolled is entirely in the hands of the tribal government. And like the Cherokee Nation, most tribes go back to their original rolls and an applicant must prove a direct relationship to those original tribal members.

Some members that have been denied membership or that have been disenrolled blame the situation on greed. They claim that the tribe is diminishing tribal membership because they do not want to dilute the income they receive from their casinos. In some cases this may be the truth.

The Cherokee Nation has been particularly vulnerable because so many non-Indians claim membership in the tribe. I don't know how many times non-Indians have approached me after I give a speech and tell me, "My grandmother was a Cherokee princess."

Granted there are many African Americans with Indian blood that are not enrolled members of any Indian tribe. They speak of their Indian blood with great pride. But the Indian nations, in order to protect themselves, have set down hard rules and regulations that determine membership. It is an inherent right they have fought for centuries to retain and it is too bad that some claimants to membership fall through the cracks, but if they lose out because of dishonest tribal leadership that brings up a whole different set of circumstances.

But as an enrolled member of the Oglala Lakota Nation I must stand behind the rights of the Cherokee Nation to determine its own membership.

The priceless nature of cultural knowledge

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

When I listened to Earl Bullhead last Friday for the very first time, it was refreshing to see that such Lakota cultural knowledge is still very much carried in the hearts and minds of many of our living resources.

Ever so often you see an award given to living cultural treasures and that is an appropriate label to attach to such awards. What each of us carries in our realm of experiences and intellect is something others rarely get a glimpse of unless, of course, you are Earl Bullhead and you give good humorous and interesting workshops on Lakota language, music and philosophy.

We never know who carries such talent in speaking and "hands on" type demonstrations as they are often in our midst, but sometimes we do not let them speak or they simply hang in the background. As a writer and educator I always keep my attention tuned into "novel" or new ideas that someone might share.

When I attended a treaty council meeting a couple of weeks ago, I heard a Lakota gentleman explain that in Lower Brule the Lakota language is literally in danger of disappearing. He quoted an unbelievable statistic that no one seemed to be moved by, but I was astounded. Apparently there are only six people who are fluent in Lakota in Lower Brule.

I was floored by that news and I did not think to visit with Earl Bullhead about that very gloomy statistic and I suppose I should. It is an issue that Lower Brule Community College or the tribe will want to address in the near future. There will be ANA funding available very shortly and it is an issue that can easily provide rationale for funding requests.

Those amongst us with such a rich knowledge of Lakota heritage are invaluable resources and need to be regarded as such. When we invite them into our school districts, college classrooms, or community events we need to ensure that we treat them with respect and pay for their services just as we would any other consultant.

In the white world it is a common practice to put a price on our specialized services and Lakota people need to do the same. It is a way to give credence to the energy and effort that the person is putting forth. It is not that we want to exploit the selling of cultural knowledge, but it is recognition that the cultural resource person has made a lifelong effort to transmit such information and their efforts are worthwhile. It is the receiving institution that needs to make an offer for such services as it is awkward for Lakota people who are not good at promoting themselves. In the Lakota world we often give what we can when we receive a cultural gift from someone and it is never ridiculed.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Words from the 'trenches'

The feel of Mustang power!

Connie Smith-Blanco

What a week! Before Amanda could change her mind, I was out of the office on Monday, into my car and on my way to see the Mustang fans in Kyle.

The weather was sunny and beautiful and I know I had Spring Fever.

Now don't get me wrong, it was the day after the daylight savings time change, and yes, ordinarily I would have been cranky, especially if I would have been chained to my desk and computer all day.

But how can I complain when I'm out on the open road with my radio and ears turned to KILI radio and my eyes turned to the road?

I had only reached town and gone to one business for a "Good Luck at State" Mustang ad when word traveled like wild fire. Everyone wanted to tell the Mustangs how much they appreciated their hard work this year and the ads practically sold themselves. There's nothing like fan power to keep a body going. And it did too.

I got so busy going business to business that I didn't have time to stop for lunch. And that was sad because I stopped in at some of the best food places in Kyle.

The thing is, I only had one day to visit with everyone because my car was going to turn back into a pumpkin at 6 p.m. So I had to be back at the office by then.

I was able to get some great pictures of people reading our paper. And before I forget, thank you Sharlene at the Post Office, Albert at the Cap Office, Colene, Elaine, Erin, Angie,PeeWee, Gloria, Suzanne, Cindy and Dave (tho you wouldn't let me take your pictures in the office) at American Horse School, Dorothy (the Fan Flags in front of your house look great, and the mustangs look real, even the Yellow one) and Annette and Betty at Little Wound School Administration Office, Ivan at the Pine Ridge Chamber, Angie's hubby at Angie's Burritos (get well soon Angie, everyone misses you and is praying for your quick recovery!), Liz at Kyle Grocery, Kathy at Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort, Linda May at the Kyle Clinic, the crew at Lil Angels, and each and everyone else that took time to say hi, wish the Mustangs well, and congratulate me and Amanda on our newspaper.

Anyway, I'm writing this late on Tuesday night before I drag home to my sleeping family. I'm afraid if I wait until morning to write this, the Daylight Savings Time Monster will bite me and I might go to sleep at my desk and I won't get this column done.

Happy Trails from me, here in the Trenches!

Golden Gloves boxing event good for community

Dear Editor:

I am writing this in regards of the State Golden Gloves Tournament that was held at the Wounded Knee District School. This event was very positive for our community, and for our students. Some of our students boxed in the junior's event and it was good to see our community come and show their support. There were a lot of people in attendance; the school gym was packed to its capacity. It showed our school and the community the positive events that can take place that can bring our community together as a whole.

Our students TC Clifford, Cruz DeLeon, Tyler Clifford, and Perez DeLeon represented our school in the juniors division, they all fought very well. Being able to fight in a competition like this and also to watch boxers like Josh Steele and Brandon Kills Small compete and becoming State Golden Gloves Champions. It gives these young boxers's hope of following in their footsteps in becoming the next Golden Gloves Champions.

This was the first ever State GG Tournament to be held on an Indian Reservation, and also to be brought into the Wounded Knee District. This tournament brought business to some of our local programs, our store and also to our 8th grade class who benefited from this event. It gave our community a sense of pride knowing that Manderson held the first ever State GG Tournament and with hopes of being able to host another event like this. It was good to see boxers from all over the state come and compete at this tournament.

Chissie Spencer the coach for the Nation Of Outlaws Boxing Team has brought pride back to our people, and to our community. Through his hard work with these students, these students have gained so much from his teachings that they will become our next Golden Glove Champions.

SPEARFISH - Jordyn Brown opened up the first quarter with two threes to set the tone for Cheyenne Eagle Butte's 46-40 win over Red Cloud for the seventh place trophy in the South Dakota State A girl's basketball tourney last week in Spearfish.

The Lady Braves went up 8-0 as freshman Lacy Leaf hit an inside jumper as CEB went up 15-6 at the quarter and Jessica Keckler hit three shots and two free throws to help them to a 21-13 lead at the half. Brown hit her third three of the game in the third as CEB went up by 13 at the end of three 33-20. The Lady Braves went up by 17 early in the fourth 39-22 but Ida Clarke, Red Cloud's junior forward scored nine of her 1`1 points in the fourth, Marque Lunderman hit four of her 11 points in the fourth as well to help close the gap to 44-40 but time ran out on the Lady Crusaders.

"We had a good run, we finished with 19 wins and even though we will miss our two outstanding seniors, we will return 13 players who have state tournament experience," said Arlyn Wohlleber, Cheyenne Eagle Butte's head coach, "we will work hard this summer and look forward to a new year."

This was only the second trip to the state tournament for a girls Eagle Butte team, they first made state in 2000.

Keckler finished with a game high 13 points while freshman Nadia Watt grabbed a game high nine rebounds. Leaf was in double figures with 10 points Brown finished with nine in a game that Eagle Butte led from start to finish. Earlier in the year Red Cloud came from behind to beat Eagle Butte 37-35 at Red Cloud.

"We didn't have a senior on the team, started two juniors and three sophomores and brought a sophomore, a freshman and a junior off the bench," said first year Red Cloud coach Ted Standing Soldier, Jr., "we hope to benefit from this tournament experience, work hard over the next year and come back and do better."

Clarke and Lunderman led the team in scoring with 11 each as Clarke led the team with five rebounds and Lunderman chipped in six assists and five steals. Turnovers kept pulling the Lady Crusaders down, they had 22 in the final game but finished with 24 their first game and 29 their second game. Red Cloud opened against and Bennett County and struggled to put points on the board losing 63-42, Shaina Clifford led Red Cloud with 13 points while Danielle Locust grabbed seven boards. The Lady Crusaders struggled again in their second game as McCook Central bottled up the Red Cloud offense and won it 64-43. Lunderman led Red Cloud with 13 points and 12 rebounds, Clifford finished with 10 points and Lisa Bear Robe added seven points and 10 rebounds.

Red Cloud finished the year 16-10. This was the Lady Crusader's seventh trip to the state tournament, they took second in1991, third in 1992 and fifth in 1995. Marque Lunderman earned an all tourney selection in her first state tournament.

CEB opened the tournament against Vermillion, the eventual champs, and grabbed the lead right away pushing it to 13-4 in the first quarter but in the second quarter the Tanagers had pulled even at 19 all and held a 28-22 halftime lead. Vermillion opened up a 12 point edge in the third but the Lady Braves closed the gap to five but couldn't get any closer as they turned the ball over late in the game to slow down their rally losing it 52-47 in the end. Keckler led the way with 16 points while Watt and Azure had eight rebounds each.

Against Hamlin on the second day, CEB took an early 4-2 but ended up playing catch up the rest of the game as the Chargers grabbed the lead and held it for the rest of the game. Azure led the Lady Braves with 14 points before fouling out with 34 seconds to go, Brown added 10 points with five assists and four steals and Watt grabbed a team high seven boards. CEB finished the season with a 19-6 record and seventh place in the State A tourney. Brittany Azure was selected to the all tourney team.

Claymore honored for service in education, sports administration

SPEARFISH - After 35 years in education, Ede Claymore retired earlier this school year. After graduating from Black Hills State with a degree in English Literature and Physical Education, Claymore taught English and coached basketball and track.

In 1982, Claymore became the first female athletic director of a Class A school in South Dakota. She has worked tirelessly to bring gender equity to high school sports and worked hard to develop both the girl's Lakota Nation basketball tourney and the volleyball tourney.

Ede has served on the LNI board of directors since the tournament started as an eight team all Indian tournament and helped nurture it into the huge high school holiday event today that includes basketball, wrestling, language and knowledge bowls and hand game competitions.

During the halftime of the third place game on Saturday night, the South Dakota High School Activities Association presented Claymore with their highest award, the Distinguished Service Award.

Vermillion slows Bennett County down, earns first state championship

By Tom Crash

SPEARFISH - Annie Roche and Alicia Brown proved to be too much for the Bennett County Lady Warriors as Vermillion used a scrappy, quick, ball hawking defense to slow down Bennett County Saturday night in the State A girl's basketball championship in Spearfish to claim the State A title 56-48.

Brown, a junior who has won the State A 100, 200 and 400, finished with 16 points and 14 rebounds while Roche helped with 15 points, six boards and five assists and whenever Bennett County started closing the gap, Chelsea Gauer would hit one of her three 3-pointers to turn the momentum back to the Tanagers.

During the year Bennett County averaged over 70 points a game but Saturday night the Lady Warriors shot 17 of 71 from the field. Keely Krolikowski led the team with 17 points, five under her season average while Maggie O'Neill finished with seven, 13 points under her average.

Amy O'Neill, a sophomore, scored seven points in the first quarter but a respiratory illness took her out of the game.

The Lady Warriors opened the tournament with a 63-42 win over Red Cloud as Krolikowski led the way with 21 points, Maggie O'Neill chipped in 14 with a team high seven rebounds and Mary Jo May chipped in 10 points.

In the semis, Bennett County came from 10 down at the end of three quarter 38-28 to take the lead late in the fourth quarter to knock out the defending State A champs Dell Rapids 51-49. O'Neill led the team with 16 points and seven rebounds, May added 11, Krolikowski finished with 10 and freshman Shawna Evans helped out with nine. Bennett County closed out a 23-2 season and will lose senior Maggie O'Neill to Black Hills State University and seniors Mary Jo May and Val Vandermay with the rest of the team returning including junior guard Krolikowski, sophomore guard Laura Porch¸ sophomores Amy O'Neill and Cara Kratovil and freshman Shawna Evans.

Vermillion finished with a 21-5 record and a state championship.

This was their fifth trip to state, their third straight; the Tanagers were runner-up in 2000. Roche was named the "Spirit of Su" award winner.

Mustangs eye championship in 6th trip to State A Team finishes 4th in 1999, 2000, 7th last year

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

KYLE - It was Sam White Face in 1980, Mark Lunderman and Duane Janis in 1983, Jess Heart in 1999 and Cory Shangreaux, Jay Jacobs and Lyle LeBeau in 2000 and in 2006 and 2007 it's Brice Hornbeck, Rich Big Boy, Shilo Pierce, Ty Lunderman and Devon LeBeau as the Little Wound Mustangs return to the State A tourney for the second year in a row and the sixth time in their history.

This year's trip to the State A features a couple of different twists, the state tournament will be in Rapid City at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center and Little Wound has added TJ McCauley, a senior forward who played for Pierre last year and helped lead the Governors to the State AA championship game, earning all tournament honors in the process.

Little Wound is one of five teams returning to the State A including the defending champs St. Thomas More, last year's fourth place team Lennox, fifth-Parkston and sixth-Chamberlain. Little Wound took seventh last year beating Sisseton on the final day 74-58.

The Mustangs lost to Clark the first day 75-64 and Chamberlain 57-51 on the second day.

"This has been a great week for the students and the school," said student council vice president Cole Hunter, "the student council organized it like a homecoming, it was a big Mustang Pride Week with activities every day like mis-match day, Blue and Gold Day, jersey day, an ice cream social and a big student and community pep rally on Wednesday."

Little Wound opened the season ranked number eight in the pre-season poll but quickly moved to number two behind Madison after beating St. Thomas More, last year's state champs, for the Lakota Nation title. After the Cavaliers knocked off Madison in the Hanson Classic at the Corn Palace, the Mustangs took over the number one spot.

Little Wound's only loss came at the hands of Oh Day Aki, formerly known as Heart of the Earth, at home in Kyle 66-64. Little Wound dropped to number two for the rest of the year. For the State A tournament, Little Wound was seeded three behind St. Thomas More and undefeated Parkston. If Little Wound gets by Chamberlain in the first round, they would probably meet up with Parkston in the semi and could end up playing against St.Thomas More in the championship game.

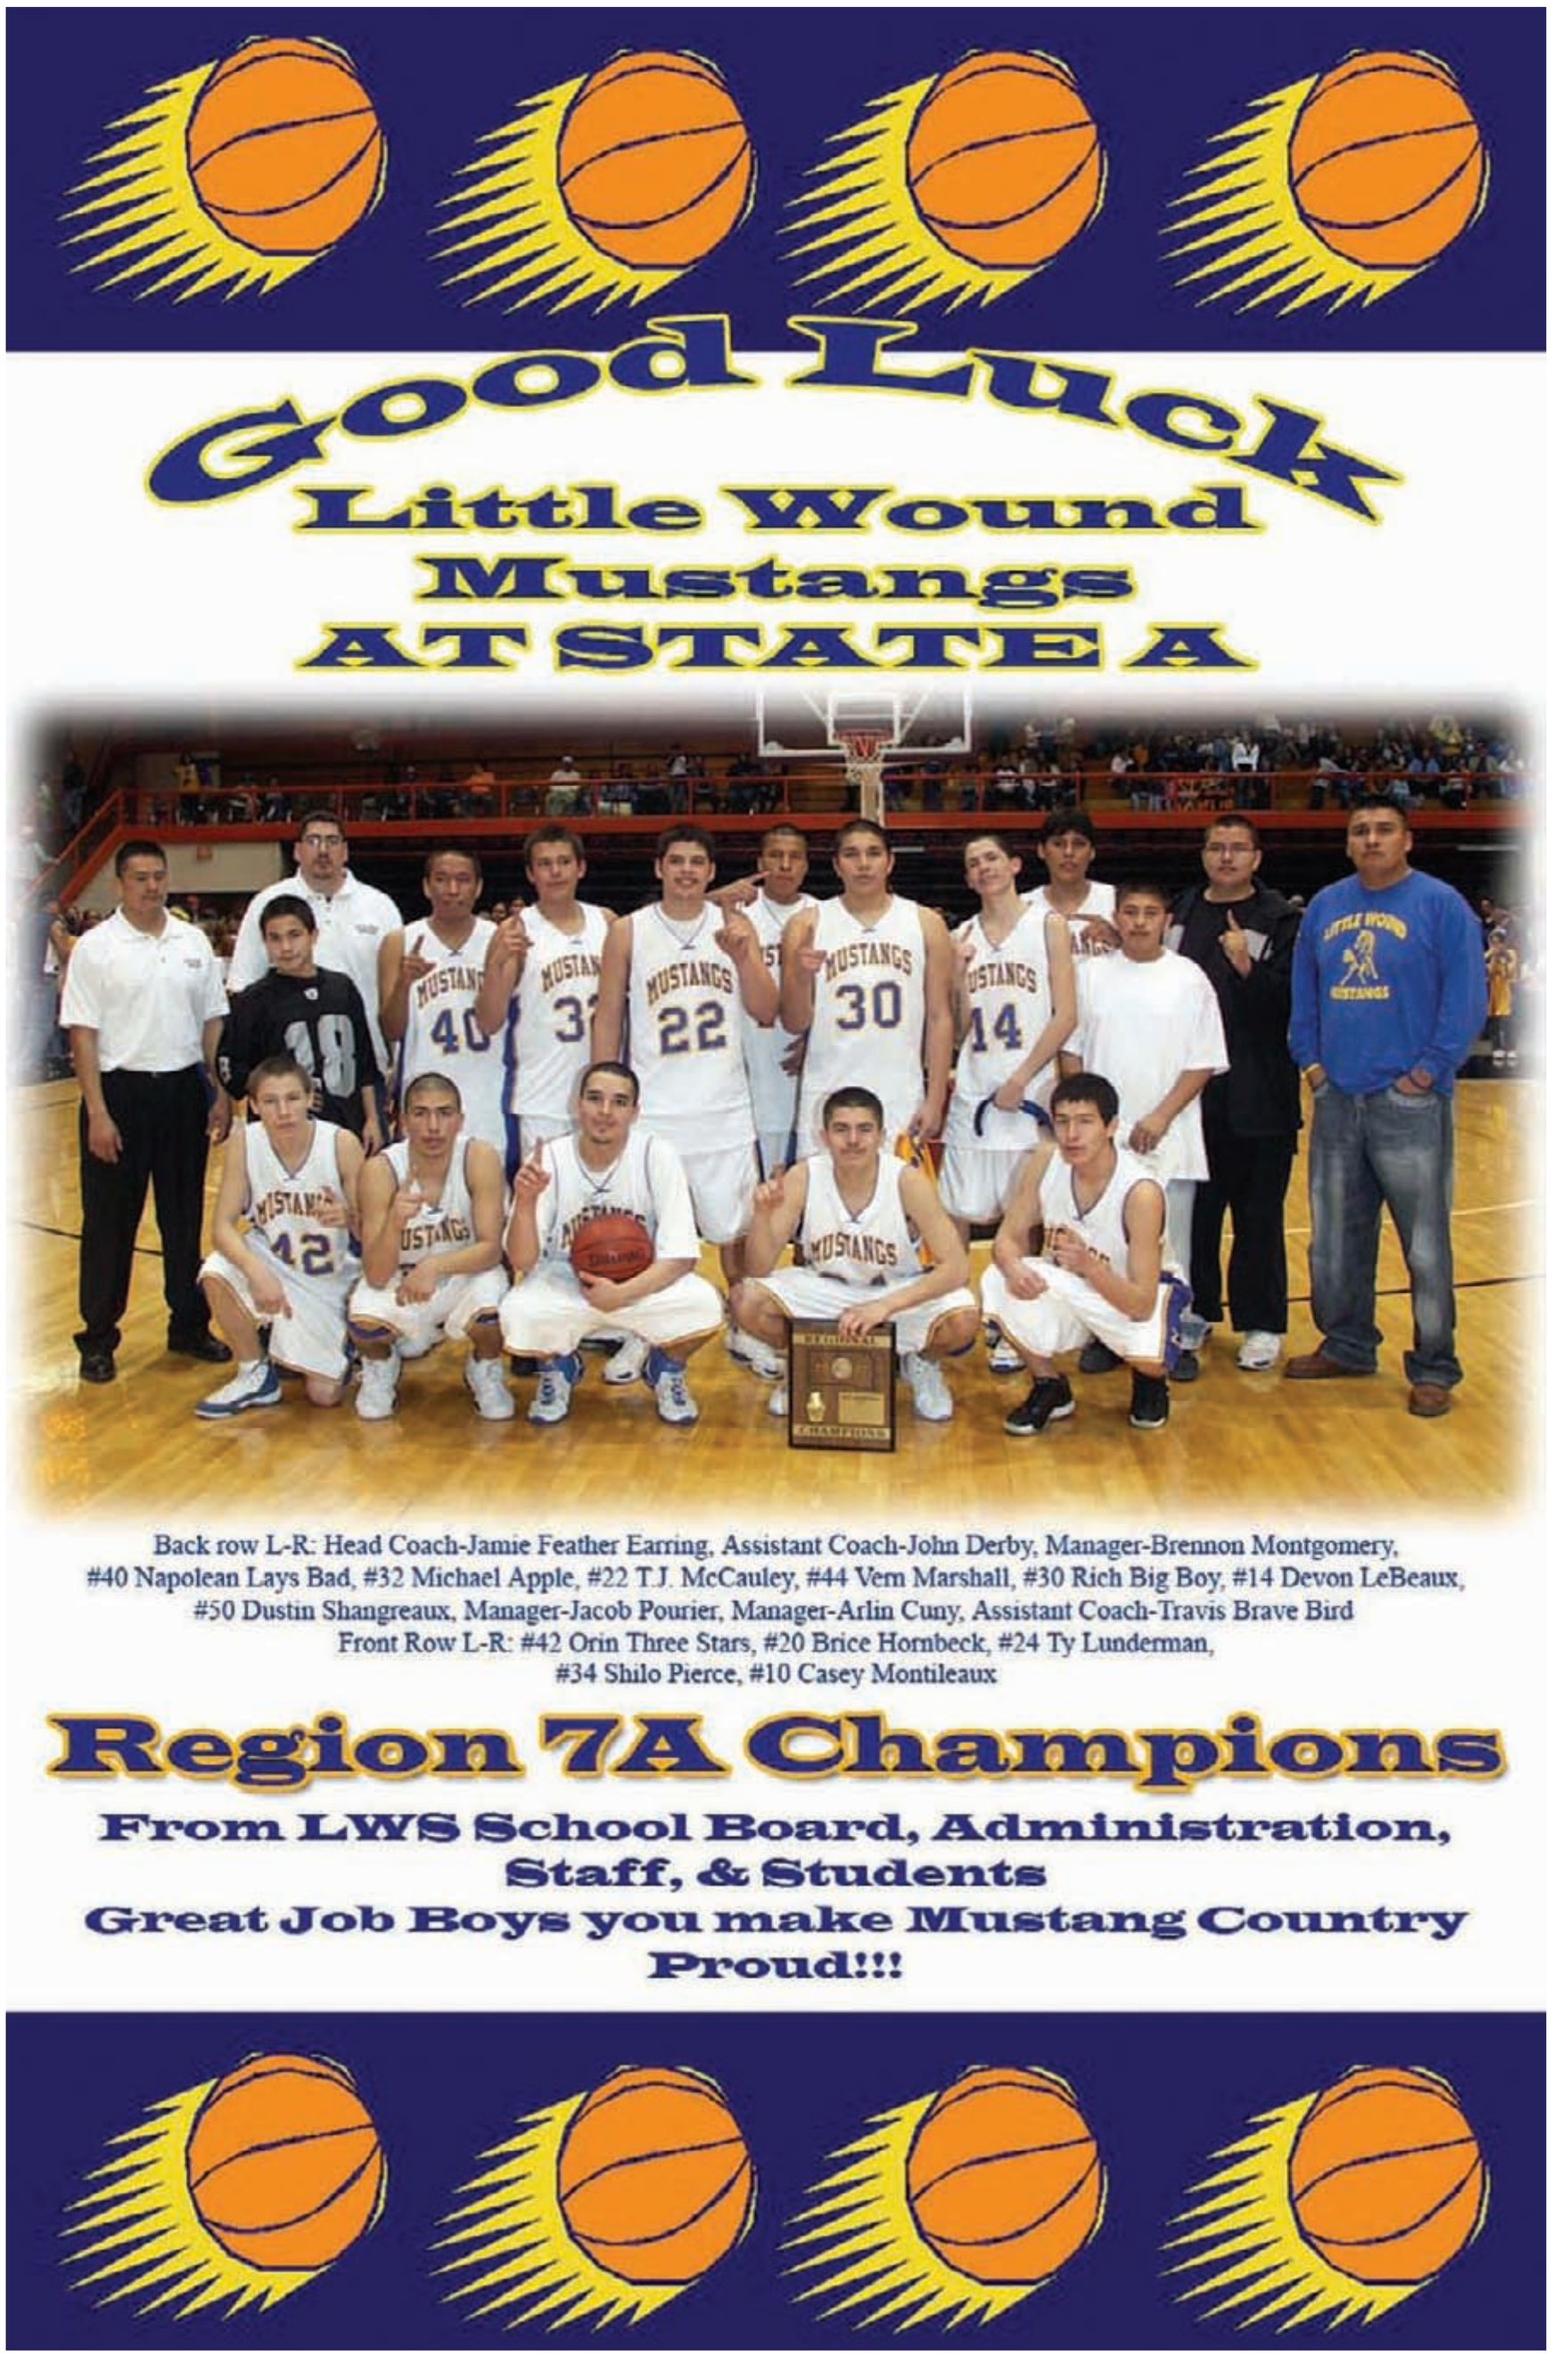
"Everything is ready but I seem to be running around like a chicken with its head cut off," said Wilbur Ferguson in his first year as athletic director at the school located in Kyle that has students from seven of the nine districts on the reservation, "the team had a shoot around on the arena floor at 11 a.m. on Wednesday, Jamie has been dealing with the flu and visiting his father who is in the hospital and Rich Big Boy has been getting treatment for his knee, we hope that he'll be ready but as a team they are ready and the whole school and community is behind them."

"All of us are so very proud of the boys on and off the court," said Dana Brave Eagle, high school principal, "this has been a very good boost for the morale of not only the students but the community as well; we are supporting the boys all the way, we are planning on sending up eight fan buses each day of the tournament."

Little Wound has shown an ability to dominate a game and turn it on when they needed it.

Against Red Cloud in the LNI, the Mustangs were down at the half and at the end of three but came out strong and outscored Red Cloud 31 to 18 in the fourth.

At Todd County in January, Little Wound was down by 14 at the end of the third quarter but came out in the fourth with a full court press and outscored the Falcons 42-18 to win by 10.



The Mustangs have shown a good mix of inside and outside game with McCauley, Hornbeck, Lunderman and LeBeau hitting the threes and McCauley, Hornbeck and Big Boy doing the heavy work on the boards. Little Wound has the ability to have anywhere from four to eight players in double figures so opponents struggle to stop the Little Wound attack. Little Wound's only loss came with Hornbeck out with a knee injury, the junior point guard has shown a knack for holding the team together on both ends of the floor.

The Mustangs took fourth in 1999 and in 2000 and this year have stated their goal is nothing short of a state championship trophy; some feel it could very well be a rematch of the LNI championship game with St. Thomas More which Little Wound won 49-46 in mid December.

The Cavaliers would have to get by Lennox and probably Madison while Little Wound would have to get by Chamberlain and most likely Parkston.

In 1989/90, Red Cloud and Custer played for the LNI championship and three months later the same two teams played for the state A championship on the same floor, Custer won both games.

Little Wound heads into the state tourney with a 22-1 record.

Uranium summit at SDSM&T March 27

RAPID CITY - Bringing an impressive background of more than 30 years of research and applied experience in radiation detection and protection, Professor Kimberlee J. Professor Kearfott is currently a member of The National Council on Radiation Protection Scientific Committee, and is certified by the American Board of Health Physics and the National Registration of Radiation Protection Technologies.

She graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology with a Doctor of Science in Nuclear Engineering and Medical Physics, and from the University of Virginia with a Masters in Engineering in Nuclear Reactor Safety.

On Monday, Crystal Own and Skyman Redday will present a workshop entitled, "Speaking when No One Listens." In 2003, Skyman Redday was a tribal police officer on duty responded to a call where his wife, all four of his children, and a 14-year old brother-in-law were killed by a drunk driver. The workshop is to encourage people to speak out even when no one is listening.

Another interesting workshop will see Darryl Monteau of Haskell Indian Nations University provide information about the "Evaluation of Switchgrass Attributes for Caddo Grass Thatched Lodges." Patrick Weaselhead will present a workshop entitled, "Border Town Racism" Civil Rights in Indian Country, a topic in Montana being discussed and which tribal colleges need to be familiar with.

Lakota artist Jim Yellowhawk explores issues of identity, war, racism, boarding schools, 9/11, and more in his art in his session of "The Healing Power of the Art Forum." Find out how you can use art in tribal college classrooms, in community, family, in any setting where the spiritual, emotional, physical, and intellectual impact of such issues can be explored.

Milt Lee explores the amazing diversity of contemporary Indian culture with sound cuts and a power point presentation on the making of the landmark 52-part public radio series, Oyate Ta Olowan - The Songs of the People. With slides, video, music and stories, the presentation dispels the notion of a homogenized Pan-Indian culture: a musical culture consisting only of Omaha society Intertribal powwow songs, and "sacred new age flute." Over a five-year period, Milt and Jamie Lee traveled over 110,000 miles to collect the music and stories. Where are the men? An interactive session discussing the declining number of males entering and completing the higher education process. The panel will discuss the research and data (or lack of it) and explore ideas that will help identify and address the root of the issue. Why are boys dropping out of school at a higher rate than girls, what are the obstacles or barriers that contribute to the decline, who and where are Indian male role models, is this an issue, and if so, what can be done to reverse the trend? These are some of the questions we will bring to light. Presented by American Indian College Fund staff.

Those are just a few of the many sessions that students and faculty can attend along with the many competitions.

Kills In Water gives lessons with cultural materials

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

Sicangu cultural resource, Dolores Kills In Water, gave a presentation to 20 college students from Michigan State University last Friday evening at the Tree of Life Ministry. After a question and answer period, the students were able to handle the Lakota artifacts which Kills In Water has collected for many years.

MISSION - Sicangu cultural resource, Dolores Kills In Water, of Grass Mountain community gave some 20 students from Michigan State University a glimpse into the world of everyday Lakota life at the Tree of Life ministry office. She was accompanied by daughter, Meredith, as the students were quite attentive to the hour presentation.

Kills In Water had a table set up with a newly acquired buffalo hide covered with Lakota parfleche boxes, bone knives, scrapers, spoons and other practical tools that Lakota people utilized to make their lives better.

Her Lakota cultural specific presentation was apparently a return engagement as she has presented to other visiting audiences to the Tree of Life ministry. It was an opportunity to carry on an interest that the Sicangu elder had began years ago in Scottsbluff, Neb. in order instill a sense of cultural pride in Native student attending school in the school system.

She said she put her cultural materials away for 15 years as she went to work for the South Dakota Department of Social Services. As she began again, she said, "I volunteered so I could share and preserve the culture. Todd County said I could be a resource person…I dedicate this to all my Lakota winyan, grandmothers that have gone on."

She noted that the Lakota had to dry everything and that the rawhide boxes were used to carry a lot of those food goods, while the clothing was sewn with cow and deer sinew. She explained to the students that sage or pezi hota was used frequently to keep bad spirits away, as well as to put children to sleep.

She explained a valuable lesson when harvesting pezi hota. She said, "Five years ago people would pick sage and pull the whole plant out of the ground. If you are going to get sage, you need to cut it so it will grow back again."

The Rosebud tourism department previously created a cultural resources code that limits the amount of natural resources, herbs, and medicines that can picked on the Rosebud reservation. The intent was to limit any kind of exploitation of the Rosebud's natural plants for commercial purposes, especially during peak seasons when visitors to the reservation have a tendency to over harvest certain areas without consideration of future viability of the particular species involved.

She also explained that the Lakota traded with other tribes on the northern plains for good which they did not originally have, such as sea shells, elk teeth, and beads. The Lakota used just enough for their purposes and did not waste a lot of resources. The sand turtle was used a cup and the buffalo's bladder was used as a container for food or water.

Other artifacts on display included a hair pipe, different size scrapers and a knife with a bone handle. She demonstrated how the Lakota pounded choke cherries and shaped them into patties that were dried and could be softened with water in the winter months and made into wojapi.

Her collection also contained a square drum and she explained something that many people were not familiar with. She said that the square drum was used to call the buffalo. Days after it was used the scouts would go out and look for buffalo and sure enough they would be coming. A pair of baby moccasins were also on display and Kills In Water explained that they were from Pine Ridge and that a white lady from Chadron had given them to her because she did not know what to do with them.

Kills In Water's style of presenting her cultural artifacts is rather relaxed and informal as she connects her own life to the objects which she has collected. The collection of Lakota functional tools, rawhide, arrows, and square drum is a valuable resource, in and of itself, as it reflects the practical and adaptive nature of Lakota people as they simplified their lives with such items.

Dolores finished off the evening with several questions from the students, who then proceeded to use "hands on" to examine many of the items including the hatchet and drums.

Legislative Reports

Still unmet needs, most

By Larry Lucas
District 26A
D-Representative
Mellette, Todd

The South Dakota Legislature completed most of its work for the year on Tuesday, March 6 when we passed the General Appropriations Bill to fund the ongoing budget of our state.

The Bill passed the House with all 70 Representatives voting for it.

While anyone could argue there are unmet needs in our state, we did cover most of the bases. Some new items funded this year are an intense Meth program that will provide counseling at the Women's Prison in Pierre for inmates affected by this drug.

Statistics and research show that this is an effective means to make a person addiction free. Another new social needs program is a 24/7 monitoring on repeat DWI offenders. Individuals in this program will have to submit to two breath analyzer tests per day in order to stay out of jail and gainfully employed.

Funding for K-12 education is arguably the most important issue state government has to deal with. Large school districts with over 600 students will receive a $110 net gain per pupil over what they received last year. Schools under 600 will have their small school allocation frozen which will result in a smaller percent gain in their per student allocation. All schools will have a fall student count day for the purposes of generating more up-to-date numbers in the state-aid formula and all schools can apply for a four to one dollar match for a new Teacher Assistance Compensation program. There are $4 million in the TCAP program.

Nine million dollars from the new increase in the tobacco tax will go back to reduce property taxes in the school state-aid formula. This nine million dollars will help to lower the mill levees by 10.5 percent. The state's share for K-12 education will increase to 56.8 percent from the current 53.8 percent.

The Legislature also approved a plan to ensure that Indian education will be a permanent part of the state content standards by establishing the Indian Education Advisory Council with representatives from each of the state's nine tribes. This was a part of HB 1250 which requires all new teachers to complete a three-hour course in Native American history and culture.

One positive piece of legislation I worked on was a resolution asking the state Department of Transportation to designate and promote the Oyate Trail, which is Highways 18 and 50, on its maps and with proper signage.

Area business, officials, and local chamber of commerces can solicit the state DOT to help in this initiative.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I hope all is well. I am writing a couple of questions; first of all am I going to be having another baby or is there something medical going on with my body? Are things going to start looking up for me with my career and finances and family? Do you see me applying for a different job and getting it anytime soon?

Questionable

Dear Questionable:

It looks as though you are not pregnant at this time and that your body is "out of cycle". I do not see anything seriously the matter with your body but please try to watch your diet.

Your finances are slowly pulling together. A steady income is why. Better budget practices would help you. I do see you applying for a different job; probably within six or seven months, you can have that job if you watch for it and apply in time.

Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I'm a 38-year old single woman who wants to get married to her soul mate and have kids. I have been searching high and low and just wondering if GOD still has that in store for me. I once met with someone who told me that I had one in this lifetime, however that was over five years ago and now I'm older and don't know what else to do and wonder if this man will ever appear and will I have the children I have always wanted my entire life.

To make things worse I'm now having "health" problems and have recently started medication for this problem. I'm scared that this beginning problem is something of a more deeper problem and I'm deathly scared that it may require drastic surgery. I'm hoping it's not as serious as I'm getting the feeling and that I will be able to lead a normal healthy life nd get off this medication. what's going on?

Looking for answers

Looking for answers:

Yes, you do have a soul mate - but, please remember that a soul mate does not necessarily mean easy and clear sailing; a soul mate has an agreement at a soul level to help you become the best you possible. Sometimes this is through lessons and trials. I do see a man coming, he is about seven inches taller than you, a little bit round in build, has been married before and has two (and in some way three) children. I see him in blue jeans and working with the soil, farmers and ranchers.

I do see you with a little girl, I have the impression that you birth her - but it may be that you "receive" her from the birth mother at a hospital.

You are on top of your health. The medical treatment that you are receiving should keep your condition under control. I do see a healing life coming to you. Your worry is basically your imagination trying to create the worst possible scenario for yourself. Understanding that fear and distress feeds illness leads me to warn you to stay in the Grace of Faith - and let go of your nightmare thoughts and replace them with a more positive vision of health. My business partner (Barb A.) and I have an office in Rapid City where we do healing work. I think that we can help you. Please email your phone number if you are interested. We work on a donation basis; so that money should not be an issue.

Don't worry - you have a good life in front of you.

Dear Anna,

I want to come home for a visit this summer. I haven't been home in over 10 years. I'm kinda nervous about seeing everyone again. I don't know why. I pray for strength in doing so. So much has changed since I was last home. I love my family so much. My father totally ignored me my whole life, I don't know why. Not even a birthday card, nothing for 10 years. One time I traveled through a snow storm to see him, He said to call him when I got into town, I did, turns out I was just two blocks from his house, and when I got there (four minutes later) he had run out the door. He actually ran from me, I felt so hurt. Maybe that is why I am kinda scared to come home for a visit. what if he does something again to shame me? I don't think he even loves me. I feel like I should of never been born. Please reply with what you see could happen, help me.

Afraid to go home

Dear Afraid:

There are many other people at home that love you and would love to see you. Your father is the one with the problem - not you. He has an issue with your mother and he has allowed his feelings to create a wide gulf between you.

You can't change him; but you can love him and understand that you can't change his view point and you are not responsible for it. Many children have absent fathers and fathers that they never get to know.

Don't take it personally - he is the one that is missing out. The difference between you and other people is that you know who your daddy is - and many children do not know. The ones that do not know have to live their lives wondering about the man that left - and you know who the man is that left. Many of those children also feel unworthy and that their fathers do no want or love them. Men don't leave their children because they don't love them, especially babies, they leave their children because they do not want to be with the mother.

Your father is not in balance - and it is not your fault. To focus on what you don't have or can't create because you cannot control others is a waste of time. Pray that his heart and mind be doctored, and be thankful for all the family members that do love you. Certainly all their love for you cannot be worth less than one man you cannot relate to. There are worse things in life than having an absent in heart and spirit father.

You made a soul contract before birth to have this man as your father. You are who you are genetically because he is part of your make up.

You also contracted with him to learn something - for the highest good of your journey as a human being. I am certain that what you contracted to learn is not self-pity for what you don't have; but instead, is love, compassion, and thankfulness for those that do love you combined with an understanding of what kind of man you wish to have in your life.

The message is quite clear, You know you don't want a man that leaves his children; so chose a man that you know well enough and long enough who is a good man and will be there for his children, even if you two move in different life directions.

Please enjoy your visit home and love your family. Don't live under a dark cloud caused by one man's inability to relate. It's a waste of your time and ruins a wonderful visit with "mind-think" depression. It's up to you.

Good Luck - the lesson may be hard, but the Creator is still there for you as a Father and a Grand Father. Love that.

AmeriSuites Uptown Albuquerque • 6901 Arvada Avenue NE • Albuquerque, New Mexico 87110 • (505) 872-9000

Conference Overview:

During this conference we will help you become aware of personal and organizational strengths and weaknesses. Are you an administrator, director, counselor or community advocate of wellness and healing, or any aspect of spiritual, mental, emotional or physical wellness within your community, your organization? Then this conference is for you!

- How can I become a better and more effective leader for wellness?
- What are the attributes of an effective organizer?
- How do we take a leadership role?
- What areas can we improve on?
- How do we organize our own community and Nation wellness gathering?
- How do we get people involved?
- What new dynamic skills can I bring into my community?

Our Indian people whether they be counselors, whether they be diabetes workers, whether they work with violence, or suicide or alcohol and drugs in our communities are asked many times to take a leadership role. We are asked to help the people look at the areas of their lives where wellness isn't working and how can they make wellness work.

At this gathering, we will help you take a look at if what you are doing now is working and if so how can I become better. What is not working? If it is not, how can I improve and become even more effective? How can you help families, clients, employees, grass roots people become healthier as a family, community and Nation? This gathering will allow you an opportunity to grow and learn with others on how to take this wellness moment to far greater levels and more impactful levels among our people.

Conference Objectives

- How to tweak your personal wellness plan!
- Learn new teambuilding strategies!
- Help you develop into a holistic facilitator and organizational leader!
- Help you understand how your leadership can effect the masses of your community!
- How you can respond and inspire others in a good way!

Who should attend?:

Council takes no action on housing

Protestors demand new election

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "The HHS committee made it public that we were looking to remove the board from the Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing and yes I made the motion to remove them," said Don Garnier, council representative from Pine Ridge Village, "more than anything else we wanted to get the board and administration into a room with the council and hear what was really going on." After hearing from board members, housing administrators and community members and considering the selection of a technical advisory committee during the council meeting Tuesday in Pine Ridge, the council voted 10-6 to table any action and refer it back to the Health and Human Services committee for further work and the to return it to the council.

The proposed ordinance brought to the floor by the HHS committee cited gross neglect of duty and serious misconduct by the board of Housing which included an unwillingness or inability to respond to a Final Monitoring Report from Housing and Urban Development and following the removal of the board appoint an interim board that would include Emma "Pinky" Clifford, Kim Clausen, Sonia Weston and Denise Mesteth.

As council members gathered for Tuesday's meeting, a group of community members including elders stood out in front of the Red Cloud building to ask some questions of tribal president John Steele. Frank "Bob" Ecoffey was among the 30-40 interested community members and stated "we want to know when they are going to have a new election."

"This was not a protest," said Floyd Hand, a leader of the Oyate Treaty group, "we really wanted to talk to John and ask

RST sets election schedule, committee

Recruiter says youth don't make military due to test scores

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Sioux Tribal President, Rodney M. Bordeaux, announced that the 2007 primary election for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe will be held on the fourth Thursday in August. The general election would be held on the fourth Thursday in October.

In a regularly scheduled RST council meeting on Thursday, March 15, five members were seated for the upcoming elections in the fall. Antelope District 3 council representative Jo Colombe after hearing the final list of candidates said, "It is not fair that the election board always seems to be from Rosebud. It is the same people and same community. I am voicing my objection for the record." RST secretary Geri Night Pipe responded "You will have to have governmental affairs put terms limits if you want equal representation across the reservation."

The new RST election board as seated by the council includes, Juanita Pacheco, Patricia Jones, Ron Neiss, Patti Romero, and Margaret Douville. The council voted 13 in favor to seat the new board, 0 opposed and 3 not voting.

A new Chairman of the RST Election Board was also elected by the council. Patricia Jones, Patti Romero and Margaret Douville were nominated as Chairmen.

The council had to conduct the balloting over after two ballots were illegible.

After the council voted again by ballot Patricia Jones was seated as the new Chair of the 2007 RST election board by a vote of 16-0-1.

Two new members of the Tribal Employment and Contracting Rights Office (TECRO) Commission were also seated by the RST council and include Anthony Bordeaux, Jr. of St. Francis and Harold Fuller, Sr. of Antelope community. The vote was 14-0-3 in favor of accepting the two new members to the commission.

On the RST Special Events Committee for the 2007 RST tribal fair the following were seated by council vote: Darlene Kills In Water-Metcalf, Whitney Meek, Norman Running, Jr. Michelle Leneaugh and Gwen Herman, 14-0-4. Darlene Kills In Water-Metcalf was nominated as Chairman of the Special Events. The motion passed 12-2-4 and the motion was carried.

The RST Grievance Committee also was seated and includes 5 at-large members for three 3 year terms and two 2 year terms. The one with the highest vote will serve three year terms. RST council representative Marian Young-One Star said that no RST employees were eligible and no more than one from any community was allowed on the committee.

The new members as seated include, Ronald Neiss, Margaret Douville, Eric Nixon, C. Don Lamoreaux, and Lauri Walking Eagle.

SSG James Eagleman of the U. S. Marines briefly addressed the RST council.

He said, "I graduated from St. Francis in 1991 and have been in the U.S. Marines for 15 years."

"The biggest goals I set for myself is try to give the kids an opportunity to get away from what is here and try to get those interested in the military."

"The biggest issue I run into is test scores. A lot of kids want to join, but they don't meet the test score requirement. They have police involvements and medical issues. They end up being stuck here and I feel bad for those who don't quality. I tell the ones who do qualify that your community is proud of you," he said.

He continued "I tell them that gang activity and suicide are a big problem here. I like to thank Chairman Rodney Bordeaux to be able to come up and say a few words. Thank you for taking the time to listen to me." Whitey Scott said, "Thank you for getting our youth involved" while President Rodney Bordeaux said, "It is a good opportunity to get involved and see the dedication and commitment in their lives. I hope my office can help young people increase test scores"

Oglala Lakota College's television students promote culture

'The sky is the limit'

Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - More than two years ago, Oglala Lakota College kicked off their television production program followed by the area's first Lakota oriented televised shows on KOLC television station.

The evolution of OLC's television production course of study has its origin in the fall of 2004 when 15 students were first enrolled in the program.

OLC offers two educational tracks in television production; the first is a one-year certificate and the second is an associate of applied science degree. Students enrolled in the program are able to access the latest in digital video technology in order to complete their degree requirements in a creative fashion.

The one year certificate offers courses which allow a basic understanding off in-studio and in the field "hands-on" operation of television cameras and related production techniques. The curriculum offers skills in lighting techniques, editing skills, and script writing intended for him about the report of the three judge panel and if they were recommending a new election and ask why the $16,000 budgeted by the Bureau for this review didn't fund a hearing in Pine Ridge at Billy Mills hall rather than a review panel meeting in Rapid City."

Hand stated that there would be a meeting at Billy Mills Hall on Thursday, March 29 to deal with the election issue, the land issues because the treaty is involved, discussing why the new casino is not open yet and getting a better idea of how the Shakopee loan would be paid back.

"We removed the board during the last administration and when new elections were held the board members were elected by their districts," said Garfield Little Dog, council representative from Wounded Knee District, "I will not vote to remove any board members, they need to figure out how to deal with the problems at hand and work together to do it."

Little Dog went on to say that no matter what the problems are, they can be fixed, he asked why wasn't the procurement process followed, why were employees allowed to make loans, is the Housing Authority top heavy on employees and why does Housing finance staff pay some employees' personal bills.

Backing off the plan to remove the Housing board, Kathy Janis, council representative from Wounded Knee District, recommended appointing a three person task force that would put together a plan to restructure Housing overall. We need to choose three people who are not tied to someone in Housing, who do not have a vested interest and whose motivation would be to improve Housing to better meet the needs of the community and tribe.

"This is what happens when the council gets involved, you end up with a political football," said Craig Dillon, council representative from LaCreek district, "we have policy makers versus administrators and you have some toxic board members; do we want to move ahead or just continue to fight?"

After it was pointed out that in the charter there was a provision for a five member technical advisory committee, Kathy Janis made a motion to appoint a technical advisory committee that included George Patton, "Pinky" Clifford, Paul Iron Cloud, Fred "Fluff" Bettelyoun and Frank Bob Ecoffey; it was seconded by Tom Conroy, Wakpamni district.

Cora Whiting, council representative from Medicine Root district felt the council needed more time to find out if those nominated would be willing to serve and willing to do it for a small stipend; in fact we need to advertise these positions and make sure those interested are aware of the needs and qualifications.

"We need to put together a list of good people with technical assistance expertise," said Chuck Jacobs, council representative from Porcupine district, "I make a motion to table this and send it back to HHS and give them the opportunity to bring it back to the council floor with a plan."

The council voted 10-6 to table.

Election at heart of public confrontation

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - A confrontation between Duane Martin, Sr. of the Strong Hearts Society for Civil Rights and Oglala Sioux Tribal President, John Steele, was captured on camera by KEVN television when protesters marched on the tribal building yesterday. Steele then emerged and spoke to the group. At the heart of the confrontation was the disputed OST election last fall.

Today, Duane Martin, Sr. said that yesterday's protest was at the request of the elders and that they want a new election. He said, "Tomorrow, Russell Means is calling a meeting and filing a suit against the John Steele administration. I ain't going along. Miyucanzekab. We called upon John Thune and he requested the BIA to get involved. That's how the three judges got involved, but they lied. They were supposed to take testimony and prevent this from happening at any other election. They wasted $16,000 of tax payer's money. We will get a new election."

Russell Means confirmed the fact that there will be a meeting with the elders tomorrow and that the BIA's recognition of the Steele administration is wrong. He said, "The Steele administration is not valid. We have court documents that it is not valid. The news media has ignored the fact that the election law of Pine Ridge is the Court of Appeals and it is the final arbiter of the election."

Means said that the three judge panel and their decision was final. However, the first election board was disbanded by the tribal council once Alex White Plume was taken off the ballot. The second board which was installed apparently made some decisions, according to Means, but were ignored. He said, "We have gone through every avenue of redress. I am taking the case, not to Rapid City where they are legally deficient and racist, but the case will be in Washington, DC because the BIA is involved."

Finally, Means said that this case is important to all of Indian Country. He said, "If there is no justice, we will take justice into our own hands. Under treaty law we can re-take Pine Ridge."

camera operators and the director. Students also undertake classes in documentary storytelling, news reporting and commercial production.

The two year associate degree is designed to build on the skills and techniques addressed in the one year certificate program, while requiring more intensity and advanced skills that may be applied in professional internships, professional documentaries, and positions in the job market that is the Pine Ridge reservation.

Students in the one-year certificate program must complete 36 semester hours, which includes a core professional of 24 credit hours. The two-year associate degree requires 63 total hours with a professional core of 39 hours. Both require a course or two in Lakota studies.

Students are encouraged to tell their story about the Oglala Lakota through their own perspectives, creativity, and own voice and have the opportunity to accomplish this through the latest digital technology and guidance by the staff in the program and that of KOLC.

Above: Tony Brave, OLC's media specialist, has done much work with KOLC to be make it successful.
Below: Brandon Ferguson interviewing Wanblee elder Ferdinand Romero on the history of Lipps Camp for the Lakota Land Project. Photo by Charles Comes Killing.

KOLC is a college based television station that airs on Golden West Telecommunications Corporation cable television. Golden West serves the Oglala Nation, adjoining counties and the Black Hills area.

Kathy Aplan, Minneconju of Cheyenne River and director of Oglala Lakota College's Production Program, not only coordinates the television program but teaches classes. This semester she is teaching editing, commercial production and an introductory class to documentaries.

She has seven students enrolled in the program but there are other students taking the courses for other reasons. She said the seven students will receive their certificates at spring graduation and could continue on to get their associates degree.

Aplan, is a graduate of University of South Dakota in mass communications and has experience from various television stations from being a production assistant, promotion director, copywriter, video editor to traffic and billing and graphics.

This is Aplan's second year at OLC, "I was ready for a different challenge and I could teach skills that would be useful for them to succeed," she said. "It's been a lot of fun and the creative things they come up are just wonderful."

"The sky is the limit," she said of the student's creativity.

As part of a service learning program new at the college the TV Production students are working on a puppet children's show 'Wojapi. The puppet show will highlight Lakota language, culture and lifestyles. It is a show that can be used in the elementary classroom.

The students have been making costumes for the puppets in different characters, such as a jingle dancer, various animals like an eagle, skunk and a butterfly. The characters will be used to teach colors, numbers and the basic words of the language.

Other projects the students are working on include a documentary on the former Pine Ridge pottery project with Ella Irving. The pottery was crafted by Lakota back in the 1930s. They will film some pottery collections and interview people who have knowledge of the pottery.

The students are working in collaboration with the Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce on a commercial that promotes the job bank.

Last spring, Katela Black Elk graduated with a one-year certificate and Tony Brave, Amber Montileaux, and Charles Comes Killing with two-year associates degrees.

Brave currently works as a media specialist at the college and took the course to add skills to his current job. Montileaux, went to work for KOTA television in Rapid City.

Students enrolled in the program also assist in the production of the KOLC's daily programming said Aplan.

Last year, the students also edited and designed the video production "Eyapaha: Student News Magazine" which focused on community, historical, and educational news which is impacting Lakota people. Aplan also noted that three students in her program finished first, second and third at the AIHEC first annual film festival last year. Brandon Ferguson produced, "War Ponies" which took first, and Tony Brave's production was entitled, "A Lakota Elder: Marie Randall." Amber Montileaux placed third in the competition with her production of "Cecelia Montgomery."

Students have also worked with OLC's GIS Department on the Lakota Land project with Dr. Sylvio Mannel, to help produce video vignettes of historic sites on the Pine Ridge Reservation for an interactive web based map to help promote tourism, and preserve language and culture.

And the past two summers students have worked on two different videos for the Wyoming National Guard at Camp Guernsey to help protect and educate others on ancient Native American sites along with other historic sites.

This past fall several students worked with the 2006 Native Voice Film Festival, helping to organize the festival, presenting actors, actresses and native filmmakers from across the country and their films along with showing some of their own work.

Aplan said she encourages her students to participate in other media learning conferences such as the Journalism Conference at Crazy Horse Mountain in April.

Rapid City mayor proposes sister city to Pine Ridge

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Pine Ridge and Rapid City could be designated Sister Cities, if Rapid City Mayor Jim Shaw's concept takes flight.

Shaw said he has talked to Oglala Sioux Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele about the idea, and the next step would be to get approval from the Oglala Sioux tribal council and Rapid City council.

Shaw announced his plans on Tuesday evening at his Undoing Racism Task Force meeting held at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center in Rapid City. About 30 people from the Rapid City area attended the meeting.

The entire Pine Ridge reservation, not just the town of Pine Ridge, would be included in the plan that would promote tourism and commerce in both directions, Shaw said.

Pine Ridge is less than two hours away, yet most people in Rapid City know little about the reservation and have never been there, the mayor said.

"Frankly, some people say,

Rapid City Mayor Jim Shaw

'I'm afraid - I don't want to go there,' " Shaw said. But people from Rapid City and Pine Ridge would benefit from getting to know each other. School teachers, business people, elders and youth - "The opportunities are almost unlimited," he said.

In the past, the Rapid City Chamber of Commerce has sponsored trips to the Pine Ridge Reservation, including one that toured Oglala Lakota College and had a meal and conversation hosted by OLC President Tom Shortbull, Shaw said.

Daphne Richards-Cook, executive director of Alliance of Tribal Tourism Advocates (ATTA), said the State of South Dakota is doing little to promote Native businesses and tourism on reservations.

ATTA is an organization established in 1993 by tribal governments to boost tourism and introduce Native products and services to the mainstream tourist industry, which would create jobs for Native people.

Pine Ridge would benefit from communication and commerce with Rapid City, Richards-Cook said. Tribal college students could develop business plans to market Pine Ridge as a gateway to tribal destinations, she said.

Jay Davis, a Rapid City resident, said tourists come to this region from all over the world.

Visitors centers used to tell interested tourists that they should stay away from reservations, but other states have traditionally been more cooperative with tribes, he said.

The Rapid City Chamber of Commerce should encourage tourists to go to the Red Cloud Indian School Heritage Art Museum, to Wounded Knee, and to powwows, Davis said.

"Rapid City could work with the tribes to lift all the boats," he said.

Art Zimega, former vice president of instruction at Oglala Lakota College, said there used to be a relationship between tribes and South Dakota School of Mines and Technology because of fossil collection in the White River formation.

"When people come here to Rapid City, where do we send them?" he asked. "To the School of Mines to see artifacts." He suggested that tourists could go to the reservation to see fossils and artifacts, increasing not only tourism but also education and scholarship.

Malcolm Chapman, a Rapid City councilman, said he worked with Lori Pourier of First People's Fund to organize a bus trip in December 2006, to travel from Rapid City to Pine Ridge.

They invited community leaders and others who had never gone to the reservation before, and he said he felt the experience was valuable.

"The dialog needs to start," Chapman said.

Zephier gets house arrest for $37,000 embezzlement

RAPID CITY (AP) - A woman who stole more than $37,000 from a community development program Oglala Oyate Woitancan Empowerment Zone on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been sentenced in federal court to six months of house arrest. Alicia Zephier, 27, also must repay the money she embezzled. United Stated District Judge Richard Battey ordered Zephier to make payments of $250 a month.

Charles Mix County endorses new redistricting

LAKE ANDES (AP) - The Charles Mix County Commission on Thursday endorsed a plan to set up five county commission districts and will consider final passage of its redistricting ordinance March 22.

The county now has three districts, but voters in November decided to expand to five, effective next year.

The American Civil Liberties Union could sue to try to reverse the election.

`We have not decided, but we are considering all our options," said Bryan Sells of Atlanta, an ACLU attorney.

Critics say expansion of the county board is an attempt to dilute the American Indian vote and the influence of Sharon Drapeau, a newly elected Indian who sits on the three-member commission.

Drapeau voted against the plan to establish five county commission districts.

The plan adopted Thursday would create an Indian majority in one district and a large percentage of Indian voters in another.

One district, including most of Lake Andes, has a voting-age population that is 58 percent Indian and another district, including most of Wagner, has a voting-age population that is 41 percent Indian.

The redistricting ordinance is to get its second reading March 22 and become effective April 18, said Sara Frankenstein of Rapid City, the county's lawyer. The new districts will be used for the 2008 and 2010 elections, she said.

``Then we have the 2010 census with redistricting for the 2012 elections," she said. ``After those two elections, we could see many population changes. I think the Indian population will go up."

Frankenstein said she sent all the proposed redistricting maps to Sells and asked which, if any, the ACLU would accept. She said she also welcomed redistricting proposals from the organization.

The ACLU has not submitted its own proposal, she said.

Sells said all five redistricting maps the county considered are racially discriminatory.

``I am not able to find a five-member plan (for Charles Mix County) that is not discriminatory," Sells said. ``If I could, I would provide one. I tried to draw one that is not discriminatory."

The ACLU wants Charles Mix County to keep its three-member commission, he said, calling the move to a five-member board an intentional effort to dilute Drapeau's power.

``It violates federal law in two ways," he said.

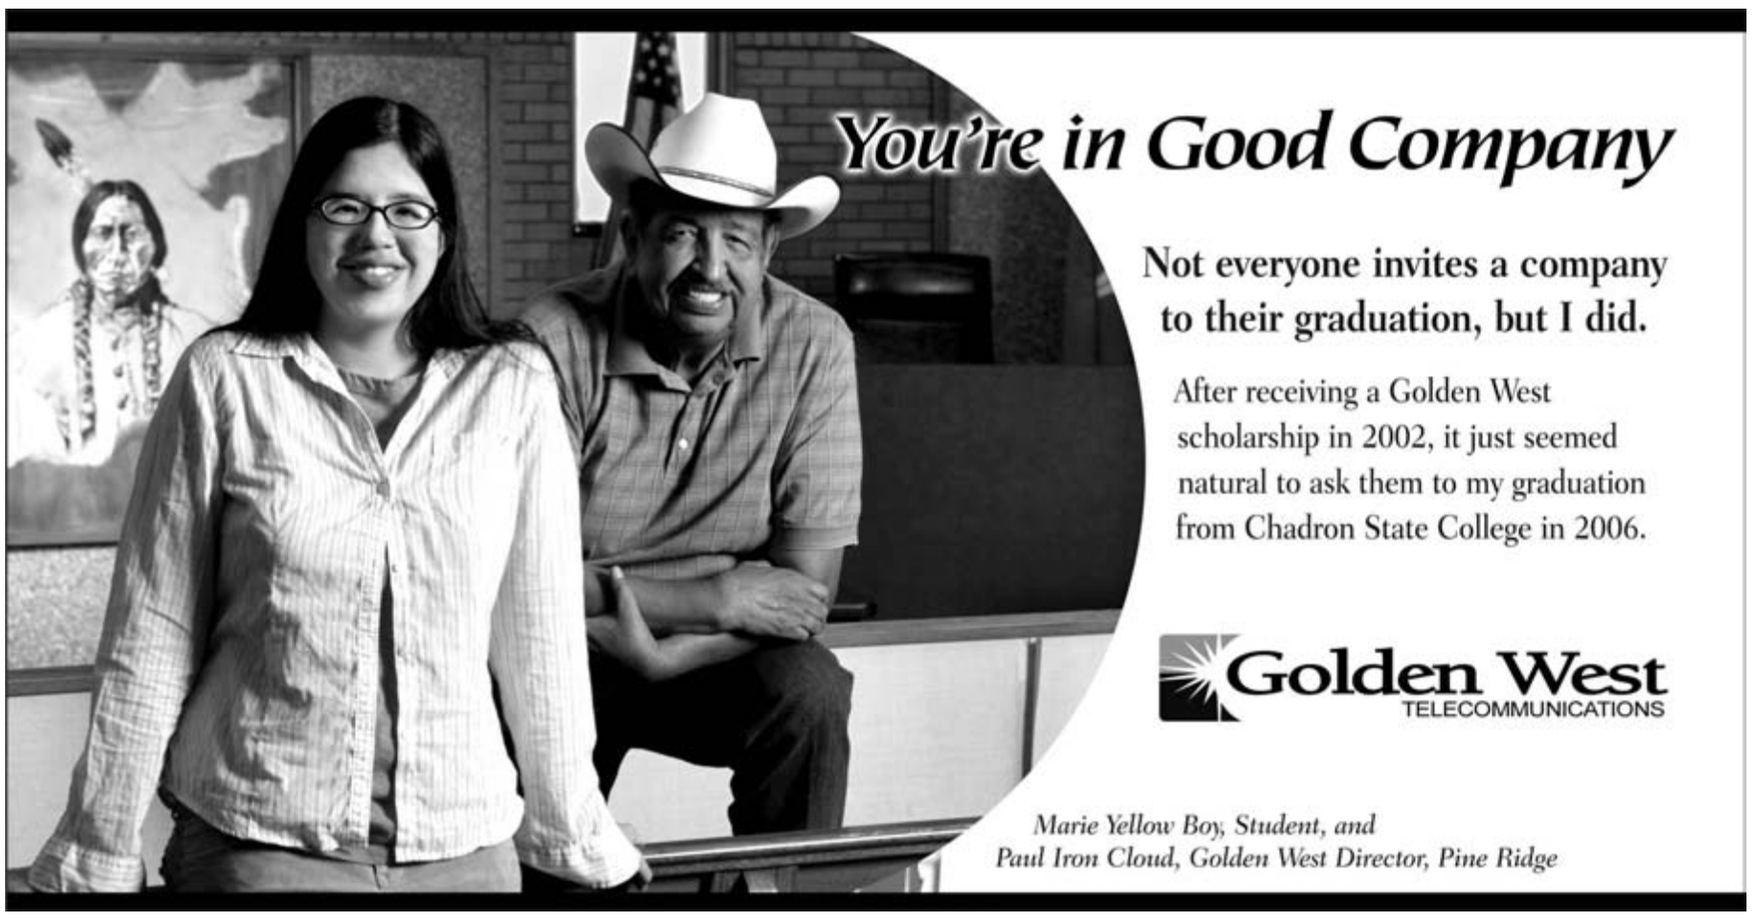
``It's designed to make the whites better off when it comes to the county commission. And it has the effect of making Indians worse off."

The voters' decision to expand the commission came in the midst of an ACLU lawsuit on behalf of four Yankton Sioux Tribe members. The ACLU said Charles Mix County never elected an Indian commission member even though Indians make up 30 percent of the county's population.

Last year, a federal judge approved a redistricting plan that included a commission district with an Indian majority. Drapeau, of Lake Andes, was elected last year from that district.

Now the ACLU has asked for federal oversight of Charles Mix County elections until Jan. 1, 2013. The case remains pending in federal court.

``If there was federal oversight, it would probably prevent the county from making this change to five members because it makes Indians worse off," Sells said.



Frankenstein said the new redistricting plan meets both state and federal law, adding that the commission has no choice but to expand the board. ``The state law says we must go to a five-member commission, because the people voted it in."

Sells said the commissioners also must uphold federal law, ``and the Constitution trumps state law."

Angie Reyes a true spirit of family and entrepreneur

This past week, Oglala Nation lost a Lakota lady who touched the lives of many. Angie Reyes owned and operated the 'burrito stand' at Kyle with her family.

Better known as Angies's Burritos or La India Bonita which is the name on the front of the restaurant.

For the past ten years, not only her food but her personality and philosophy connected with the hearts of many customers. Angie journeyed on to the spirit world on Monday, March 19.

She lost a battle that involved her health but her spirit with always be with her family and friends.

Angie (Poor Bear) is originally from the Allen area and moved back here from Texas and when she and her husband couldn't find employment, they began selling burritos from a cooler and slowly their business expanded to what it is today - a full fledged restaurant and catering business with good Mexican food.

It was the principle of good food and determination that made her business successful. It is a family business, she taught her sons the business because she said she wanted them to be able to do something of their own someday.

It was not only her entrepreneur skills that Angie will be remembered by but her community outlook.

She gave back to the students who would flock to her business in a form of scholarships. She always had a way to encourage and she had great hospitality spirit.

That spirit helped to make her food memorable and people would come back again and again. She loved her family and the décor of Angie Burritos showed that, with the images she generously shared.

She had wonderful conversation skills not only with English but fluent in Lakota and Spanish.

You never saw Angie without her personally selected "uniform", a crisp, white, spotless apron and chef's kind of hat. She stood out in her restaurant and she stood out in a crowd.

She radiated warmth and kindness and when she came by your table she made you feel you were the most important person she had met that day in her restaurant.

The Times staff was in Pine Ridge, Kyle and Martin the day she died and there wasn't one person who didn't mention the tragedy of her loss.

World travels fast on the Rez, and word of Angie's death was a whirlwind.

We'll miss her and her spirit and we ask prayer for her family.

Thoughts that come from the heart

The courage of two

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

In getting this issue ready for publication, we tried to focus on educational issues. It got me to thinking about my own education and the lessons I learned from two beautiful Lakota women who made an impact in my life. My mother, who graduated from Oglala Lakota College when she was 65 years old with an associate's degree in human services back in the 1980s.

She didn't use it for career gain but she used it to show us that if she could do it, we could do it also. When I was an adolescent, she would tell me that I was smart, got good grades and that I needed to use that to make a living for myself. I went to a border town high school and I hated it.

My friends and my cousins went elsewhere for high school and I was stuck in a high school I didn't want to be in.

There were times I would beg her to let me go to an Indian school somewhere and it was always, 'maybe' next year. There were times I would feel so frustrated and would just want to give up on keeping my grades up, or even going to school for that matter. I felt out of place and just couldn't get the excitement back I had in junior high and elementary school.

It took awhile for me to realize how to duck out of classes and 'play hooky.' Before long I figured out ways to get out of going to school and it didn't take my mom long to figure how my scheming ways and find a way to catch me just about every time I did it. The last time I did that to her, it embarrassed me in front of my peers, so I gave up and didn't do that anymore.

It was a beautiful spring morning and I scampered around that morning getting ready for school and told my mom I was leaving and lit out for the school. Maybe it was my attitude, I was too perky. She didn't have to encourage me that morning and that is probably what made her suspicious. I got to the school, waded through the other students, ditched my books in my locker and headed out the other door to - freedom of the day.

What a surprise, when I opened the doors to go out, there stood my mom, right dead in the center of door way. I didn't say anything to her, her eyes said it all for both of us, I just turned around and headed back to my locker, got my books and went to class. I gave up and just went and did what my mom told me to.

She beat me at my own game. Her victory was because she truly believed in education and she truly loved me so she didn't give up but kept on me all the way, all the time to stay balanced and to pursue something better.

The key was she didn't give up on me or the rest of my ten siblings. She raised ten of us with that philosophy.

Schools are clamoring about every year, trying to find scientific ways to keep kids in school, to raise their standards, to make adequate yearly progress.

One key ingredient in the recipe is the other partner they have in that child's education - the parent or guardian. If they have the same determination the school does, there will be balance.

The other wonderful Lakota woman who had impact in my life is my mom's sister Aunty Pearl. Pearl Cottier who has been with Oglala Lakota College for more than 30 years and her philosophy and her determination has touched the lives of many, many students. She became a role model for me and so many others for higher education.

She has truly dedicated her life to helping others get educated. She set one of the best examples around for her own children, all her many relatives and the community she is from.

She is the center director for LaCreek Center at Martin of Oglala Lakota College and has been an advocate for women, civil rights and education. I always thought her life would make a fantastic book. She wore many hats and her experiences in life made her a strong woman.

Back in the 1980s while attending college, I worked closely with Aunty Pearl, I admired her for activist stance and through the years in being a newspaper woman, I remember her courage. Just like my mom, I never got enough of listening to their stories. I learned from her, just as many others have through the years.

Spirituality

Recently there was a survey conducted among students at a local high school and one of the valuable piece of information that came from that was youth lacking spirituality in thier lives.

Our youth and our young families are facing hard times.

They are struggling with sadness and depression that comes from addictions from alcoholism or drugs or sexual abuse; they struggle with living in poverty and living with oppression or racism. They are hurting, emotionally, physically, mentally and SPIRITUALLY! And most of the time, they don't know how to make things better. They really don't know.

Our community and spiritual leaders and clergy in the church should think about stepping up to the plate and make a move to help families become more faith based.

The true intentions of wannabee Cherokees

Dear Editor:

Wanted to thank Tim Giago for taking time to write about the non-Freedmen issue and commend him for a fair and balanced report.

I have watched in amazement the headlines, commentary and opinions of those who have no idea about the realities of Native American history in this country and in particular the reality of the current situation here in the Cherokee Nation.

Those offering opinions about something they know nothing about except what they read in provocative headlines is unjust and unfair to Cherokee people.

What is tragic about the Freedmen issue is that some very low income African-Americans in need of basic services have been deceived and misled by people who are simply using them for their own political agenda. The tribe's leadership has had to endure unwarranted criticism in the media who have ignored the facts and used misleading provocative headlines for self-serving gain.

As long as tribes in this country were living in abject poverty no one was suing them for the right to claim citizenship. The bigger picture reveals that anytime Native Americans have had something of value there are those who have done everything in their power to take from them. The Cherokee Nation is not the only tribe facing legal challenges and bad press by those attempting to claim citizenship status. The non-Indian Freedmen descendents have not been citizens of this tribe for decades as they claim. Their true intentions are revealed in their lawsuit against the Department of the Interior wherein they want $50,000,000 and land in the Cherokee Nation's jurisdictional territory.

One article making the rounds in the press claimed they also purportedly want the right to own and operate their own gaming operations inside the Cherokee Nation's jurisdictional territory.

The mis-information, out-right lies, and falsehoods being proliferated by those desperately trying to bully the Cherokee Nation into giving up what they have struggled for centuries to achieve is yet another sad commentary on injustice perpetrated against the indigenous people of America.

Again, thanks for the commentary on the non-Indian Freedmen issue.

Reader unhappy with local paper

Hau Editor,

I wanted to write the Lakota Country Times about problems I've been having with the local paper of Rosebud. I am concerned how they see things in Indian Country with 90 percent of their readers are tribal members, yet their opinions are out of touch with reality and write as seen through a white person's perspective, but nobody denies them access to the paper, we just have to suffer through their words.

I have been writing to this paper for many years now and continually have to fight with the editor just to get my letters published because I write about what's wrong with Indian country, the leadership and the Rosebud Reservation.

For the past two weeks, letters were allowed about our tribal members with drinking problems. It seems as though it is good reading material if you look down your nose at your own tribal members and as long as you are speaking about somebody lower than yourself. See, I wrote letters to the editor concerning the alcoholic binges, the abuse and problems associated with the disease and our officials, but they refused to print them. Alcoholism is a "disease" and people who suffer from the long-term effects of alcoholism should not sit in positions of trust, authority or make critical decisions that affect the Sicangu Oyate. Study after study will concur with that statement, not only does the alcohol effect an individual's mental, physical stability and social relationships, it also causes problems with a person's sexual ability. After abusing alcohol for many years, one hears the reports of your significant other being caught with a young buck on the side of a dirt road because of sexual failures at home. If that's not reason enough to get help a person admit they have a drinking problem and seek help, I don't know what is?

The intergenerational transmission of alcohol addiction is one of the most devastating effects of the enduring legacy of alcoholism. Many of our youth should be taught the effects of drinking before following in the foot steps of those suffering from alcoholism. It seems the only tradition that has been handed down from one generation to the next generation here on the Rosebud Reservation is alcoholism and greed…

Notes From Indian Country

Hugo Chavez steps up for Native Americans and the poor

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Native American journalist Jodi Lee Rave of Lee Enterprise Newspapers was recently lambasted in a letter to the editor to our local daily for having the temerity to laud the donation of funds for heating fuel for the very poor Indian nations of the Northern Plains.

The criticism was initiated by the fact that the donor was the Citgo Petroleum Corporation based in Houston, Texas and headed by the President of Venezuela, Hugo Chavez, the man reviled by many Americans for referring to President George W. Bush on the floor of the United Nations as the "Devil."

How did it happen that the President of Venezuela reached out to help the poor and the indigenous people of the United States? After two major hurricanes devastated the Southern U. S., a group of U. S. Senators sent out a plea to the major oil companies to help low-income families with energy assistance. Most major oil companies were coming off of scandalous profits because of the sharp rise in fuel costs. Only one company heeded the plea of the senators and that was Citgo Petroleum Corporation headed by Chavez.

Federal and state funding for low-income energy assistance programs has dropped dramatically in the past few years. A late winter blast in the Northern Plains hit at a time when most of the federal dollars for low-income energy assistance had run out. The late winter freeze left many indigenous people in dire straits. When it comes to a matter of surviving, Indians and other impoverished people reach out to any assistance available. Olympic Gold Medallist Billy Mills, an Oglala Lakota, used his non-profit Running Strong Foundation to raise energy funds for some low-income households, but even his generosity could not fill the need.

Many tribes in Montana and North and South Dakota were advised to attend a meeting in Polson, Montana on Dec. 13, 2006 to listen and discuss how they could avail themselves of the money for heating assistance. Rafael Gomez, Vice President of Citgo, and Brian O'Connor of the Citizens Energy Corporation of Boston attended the meeting. O'Connor's non-profit organization administered the program last year and would be charged with administering the program for the Indian tribes.

Although major oil corporations like Exxon had reaped more profit last year than at any time in their history, they declined the invitation to lend a helping hand to the poor people of America. Hugo Chavez stepped in to fill the gap. What motives would prompt him to do this? Certainly it would not help him politically, at least not in America where one of this Nation's top religious figures, Pat Robertson, called for his assassination.

Some of the very poor Indian tribes like the Chippewa Cree of the Rocky Boy Reservation in Montana, the Cheyenne River and the Oglala Sioux Tribes in South Dakota needed the funds in order to keep their people from freezing to death and accepted the donation from Mr. Chavez willingly.

Where was the rich casino owning tribes? Busy counting their money I would guess.

There is an old saying out here that goes, "You will know me better when you walk a mile in my moccasins." Hugo Chavez is a member of an indigenous tribe in Venezuela. He has been called "Indio" and worse while growing up as the child of very poor parents. He has walked in the moccasins of the indigenous people.

In America it is very easy to hate someone who verbally attacks the president of the United States. Chavez has never held his tongue even amongst his own people or in criticizing other nations in South America. I am told that he was appalled when the major oil companies in America did not step forward to help their own poor and low-income people when called upon to do so. He saw this as the kind of colonialism he has grown to despise.

Chavez is not alone in his mistrust of America. In fact, America's status is at an all-time low in many Central and South American countries. Chavez did not create this situation and he is not above using it as a tool to annoy Bush and his administration.

Hugo Chavez is a controversial figure to America, especially amongst its politicians. But he has done much to improve the living conditions, the health care and the educational opportunities for his own people in Venezuela, especially for the very poor and the indigenous.

As a matter of record Republican presidential candidate Rudy Giuliani's law firm lobbies for Citgo Petroleum Corporation. Does he keep his fingers crossed behind his back when he attacks Chavez?

However, if the profit mongering oil companies of this Nation had stepped forward when called upon, there would have been no reason for Chavez and Citgo to step up.

There is a lot of respect for President Chavez among the Indian nations of this country. He didn't make promises that he couldn't or wouldn't keep, but instead put his money where his mouth is. American Indians appreciate that form of directness.

Go to some of the blogs so prevalent in America and you will find all sorts of names for President Bush and most of them are considerably worse than "Devil." Chimp and Chimpy are two that come to mind. But, I suppose most Americans feel it is their inherent right to speak out against their president, but they would damn to hell any outsider that does likewise.

Jodi Lee Rave didn't think of the politics of the low-income energy assistance offered by Chavez. Instead, she thought of the people that would have suffered unnecessarily if Citgo had not been willing to do what the American petroleum companies and the United States government refused to do.

She didn't have to read about the plight of the indigenous people of America to understand it because like Hugo Chavez and me, she has lived it.

Finding My Voice

The life of a single parent

Dana Lone Hill

There is nothing wrong with being a single parent. It's fun to have your children all to yourself. It's fun to tease with them. I am not sure who invented single parenting. If there was any single parents in the Bible or not. I actually Googled it and cannot find a single article about famous single parents. What I did find under single parenting was Get Out of Debt sites, some Biblical sites, Singles Sites, and an entry in Wikipedia, claiming Murphy Brown as the most famous single mom, (even though fictional) plus a fact stating that in 2003 the number of single parent households rose to 33 percent.

That's a lot of kids growing up in single parent households. Statistics in the Wikipedia entry also said kids growing up with one parent are more likely to commit crimes, suicide, or turn to alcohol and drugs.

How depressing. My children are more likely to do that because of a father who never worked, never paid child support and missed the last seven years of their life is not around.

As far as I can tell the only glitches I have found in being a single parent are here.

Daycare: Having to get "help" from the state and actually deal with the "wolves" that work for the state.

Being the ultimate source for THE KNOWLEDGE OF EVERYTHING! My son Jalen always says "How come you don't know? You are supposed to?" I told him I just almost know everything. Plus I forgot a lot of the algebra I did in high school so when he asks for math help I am always like "Nope, can't help you." Not to mention he asks things that are impossible to answer like "Mom, how do I legally form an union to rise up against you and your cruelty to make your children do dishes? I think I can get my brothers to join." Like I would tell him that!

I am teaching my son Ty to cook, because he is really good at it and likes to, other than that all meals are my responsibility. Always, but like a friend pointed out, kids will eat anything for dinner, even cereal.

When you hear a noise in the middle of the night and you are the sole responsibility of your offspring.

Other than that being a single parent is a learning experience for both the single parent and the kids. We have our routines and life is good.

Words from the 'trenches'

We welcome Manuel to the 'trenches'

Connie Smith-Blanco

The sacred office of the Lakota Country Times is no longer inhabited solely by two women. We now have a full time male employee amongst our small numbers.

His name is Manuel and he's been working here about a month now. I would have said something before now but I didn't want to jinx his 90 day probation. (he's not really on probation but we tell him that so he won't try to boss us women around.)

It is time we acknowledge his presence in public. At first he wasn't sure he could put up with our lack of humor and we weren't sure we could put up with his lack of leaving the toilet seat up. We all agreed we would take the risk and he's about to begin his second month of employment with us.

We've really needed another hand (actuall two or three hands) around the office for many months now, but no one wanted the job.

Some of those who inquired about the job said it was just too much work, and I think Manuel was one of those people.

You see, he knows first hand the long hours required to keep this paper going.

He complained about them long before he ever came to work with us.

But that's because he's my husband and I was seeing the inside of the office way more than I was seeing him on the inside of our home.

My hours at the paper even affected the date we got married and how long we could go on a honeymoon. (but I think he's over that now, and we did have a good time in Vegas)

He's learning fast and I hope to turn over even more work to him in the very near future. I think he'll even pass his probation here in the trenches.

Connie Smith-Blanco, Oglala Lakota, is co-owner, business manager and marketing director of Lakota Country Times. She has pursued a music career in Oklahoma, Tennessee and lived near her sister in Texas, and after 30 years moved back to her roots in South Dakota with her two children.

Northern Perspectives

Carefully choose your career to be heartfelt life long

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

In Vietnam, my unit, the Fourth Infantry division, was called the Ivy Division as our shoulder patch was green ivy with a white background. I remember I carried a chemistry paperback book, but really had no realistic expectations of going to college. Little did I know when I was discharged and enrolled a week later at Northern Arizona University that I would ultimately end up in the Ivy League and complete my program of instruction.

I was an average high school student and in the military I was just good enough with personnel work that I did not have to work in the air defense field where I had taken my advanced training. When I arrived in Vietnam I was headed for the 4th Aviation Company, but I met a Specialist E-7 who, for some reason, was intrigued by my personnel file and got me diverted and reassigned to the division level. It was a sigh of relief for me, because it meant that I did not have to serve in a forward unit where I might be at risk for a shelling. Call me coward, but I survived.

Between my tenure at Northern Arizona University and Harvard I came home to Rosebud and worked for a year. I applied and was accepted for the administrative careers program and I was mortified when I attended my first class. I taught myself to take notes in a hurry and learned to survive in that kind of high powered academic environment by talking to other students ahead of me.

I learned that for some classes a doctoral student could acquire a copy of a test that the professor had given the year before and if you were lucky he gave your class the same one. That was not always relevant for me as I often chose elective coursework that only required a semester term paper. I avoided taking any courses that required a midterm and final examination if I could. That was not always possible, as the required courses, like statistics for example, gave an in-class test.

Also, a student could enroll and cross register for courses at the Harvard Medical School, the Harvard Business School, or MIT and I did neither. I simply played it safe and stayed in my discipline and regretted it ever since. I should have taken a chance and enrolled for a course in ethics in the medical school or a course in conflict resolution in the business school.

I even had a white advisor my age who wasn't helpful, so I changed advisors to an African American who had tenure and the first thing he said was, "What are 'we' going to do to get you out of here" and then things got better for me.

I always felt intimidated and never thought I was a finisher up until nine months after I left. I had to revise my thesis a couple of times before it was finally accepted. And then, I did something that I should not have done. I couldn't afford to attend commencement so I just let it slide.

Last year, I was awarded the Alumni of Color Conference award at Harvard and once again, I blew it and did not attend even though they offered to pay all expenses. I don't know what is wrong with me, but I played it safe again.

On March 16, last Friday, I quietly observed my 25th anniversary of matriculating from Harvard and almost all of that was spent back home on the Rosebud. I never used my education the way it was intended because of varying circumstances, but I was never good at selling myself as some have learned to do. In the Lakota world view, we are taught humility and to tone down the self-promotion, but if I had to do it all over again I think I would have searched for the key to language preservation, academic achievement for our young, suicide prevention, and economic self-sufficiency to name but a few.

The moral of the story, I suppose, is choose your area of concentration as they call it at Harvard, very carefully and make sure that it will lead to a lifelong love of work. Learn to save like Mr. Scrooge and when you get my age you can make it through winters in good shape, buy the vehicle of your choice and enjoy many satisfying options that I never had.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

The new construction of the women's shelter in Kyle is nearing completion. Celebration ceremonies will be held May 4. The $1.35 million shelter was mostly constructioned by Indian owned firms and workers. Photo by Connie Blanco

Cangleska's women's shelter nearly complete, grand opening May 4

KYLE - On Friday, May 4, Cangleska, Inc. will have the grand opening of a newly constructed Native women's shelter which is part of a $1.35 million complex at Kyle.

There will be a meal at noon and a dedication and name unveiling at 2 p.m., followed by a celebration and giveaway.

Cangleska, Inc. provides comprehensive domestic violence and sexual assault advocacy and related services to citizens of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, living on and near the Pine Ridge Reservation since 1989.

In addition to providing safe space for women who have been battered and their children, Cangleska Inc. provides outreach advocacy services, probation services, civil legal services, a men's re-education program, an integrated criminal justice system, and coordinated response and training. Cangleska Inc. also operates Sacred Circle, a national resource center providing technical assistance, consultation, and training to Indian Tribes and organizations in developing strategies and remedies to end violence against Native women.

The nonprofit operates a second shelter for women at Ohitika Najin Win (Standing Strong Woman House) in Rapid City.

After more than a decade of service to Native women, Cangleska, Inc. built the new 7,800 square-foot shelter because of the need to expand the facility to house a greater number of women and children.

The existing native women's shelter is located near the correctional facility at Kyle and is owned by the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

The newly constructed facility will provide accommodations for 30 women and their children, as well as office/meeting space for the administrative and counseling services of the organization.

Included in the $1.35 million complex construction project is the Tokahe Wicayapi Visitation Center and a new maintenance building.

The new shelter was made possible with grants, donations and labor from the USDA Rural Development, Oglala Sioux Tribe, Medicine Root District, All Tribes Foundation, Jane Fonda, Rosanne Barr Foundation, Native American Bank, Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community, V-Day and Eve Ensler.

The building contractors were Hahn's Construction, Murdock's Electric, Rapid Fire, R&D Redimix, and Sod's Mechanical Contracting. Cangleska is proud that the majority of the workers were native.

Tax refund anticipation loans prevalent in Indian country

62 percent of Shannon County pays high interest rate

By Brian Tumulty and Faith Bremner
Gannett News Service

WASHINGTON - Poor people who live on Montana's seven Indian reservations are using high-interest tax refund anticipation loans, also known as rapid refunds, at a higher rate than anywhere else in the state.

Statewide, nearly eight percent of taxpayers who are owed a refund from the federal government relied on these loans to get a check within 24 hours or less instead of waiting a week or two for an electronic refund from the IRS.

But on parts of the state's seven Indian reservations, an average of 21 percent of people who were owed refunds borrowed against those refunds.

The Montana counties where the loans were used the most - Glacier, Big Horn, Roosevelt, Rosebud, Blaine, Hill, Pondera and Lake - are in and around Indian reservations. In Glacier County, home of the Blackfeet Reservation, 35 percent of those who received a federal tax refund in 2004 borrowed against it. In Lake County, home to the Flathead Reservation, 12 percent borrowed against their refunds.

Those findings are based on a Gannett News Service analysis of Internal Revenue Service 2004 tax year data. The data, originally obtained from the IRS by the nonprofit National Consumer Law Center, is the most recent available.

On Indian reservations, most of those refunds are targeted at the low-income workers eligible for the Earned Income Credit, which is meant to help lift workers out of poverty.

Starting in December, tax-refund lenders began offering what consumer groups call "holiday refund anticipation loans" or "pay stub loans." That was two months before Tax Help Montana, a nonprofit group that provides free tax-preparation services for the poor, got up and running.

The group is holding free tax clinics this year at the Blackfeet, Rocky Boy's, Fort Belknap and Northern Cheyenne reservations as well as 13 other sites around the state.

"(Lenders) tell people they don't have to wait for their W-2s. They'll go off your last pay stub," said Johnel Barcus, executive director of the Browning Community Development Corp., which co-sponsors Tax Help Montana's free tax clinics on the Blackfeet Reservation. "When people are in a bind and in need, they will go to those things, even though they're paying a lot for it. I don't believe they realize it's a high-interest loan."

Education and free tax clinics are key to reducing the number of high-interest tax refund loans, said Karen Heisler, spokeswoman for Consumer Credit Counseling Service in Great Falls.

On top of the interest on the loan, the average person pays $150 to a tax preparer to fill out a simple return, Heisler said. She said her organization is working to line up local banks and credit unions to provide loans next year for a small fee.

"I do believe by next year we'll have some alternative products for people who are low- to moderate-income," Heisler said.

Consumer groups estimate that this year the interest rates translate to average fees ranging from $57 to $111.

That's a lot of money in Indian Country, where unemployment is high and consumer goods are expensive, said Barbara Stiffarm, development director for Opportunity Link, a group that fights poverty in northwest Montana.

"People can use that money to bring home to their families ... rather than paying high interest rates," Stiffarm said. "The average median income on Indian reservations in Montana is well below $10,000 annually."

H&R Block declined to comment on the prevalence of these loans in Indian reservations.

"Without seeing an IRS report of the data you are using, it is difficult for us to respond," said spokesman Dan Smith.

The company noted that customers who take out its instant money advance loans have no obligation to come back to H&R Block to have their tax returns completed.

The loans are most popular in the Dakotas. The data show that the top four counties in the nation for receiving refund anticipation loans - Shannon, Todd and Buffalo counties in South Dakota and Sioux County in North Dakota - are in and around Indian reservations. In Shannon County, home to the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, 62 percent of people owed refunds borrowed against them.

"What does that tell you? We're targeted," said Rodney Bordeaux, president of South Dakota's Rosebud Sioux Tribe. His community has three tax-preparation firms on or near the reservation that make tax refund loans.

"That's mind-boggling," he said. "If more people knew that, maybe it would make them think."

Rep. Dennis Rehberg, R-Mont., was surprised to learn that Indians take out such a disproportionately high number of tax refund loans. Rehberg sits on the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Services and General Government, which has jurisdiction over the IRS. He said he'd be willing to consider legislation that would limit interest rates charged on loans to Indians.

Last year, Congress enacted a 36 percent annual percentage rate cap on loans, including tax refund anticipation loans, made to members of the military and their families.

"We have to be careful," Rehberg said. "We do not want to assume that all of the refund anticipation loans are bad.

"We don't want to drive a provider out of the market place that may be providing a service to Native Americans that they may need."

Little Wound to honor State A champs St. Thomas More on Monday

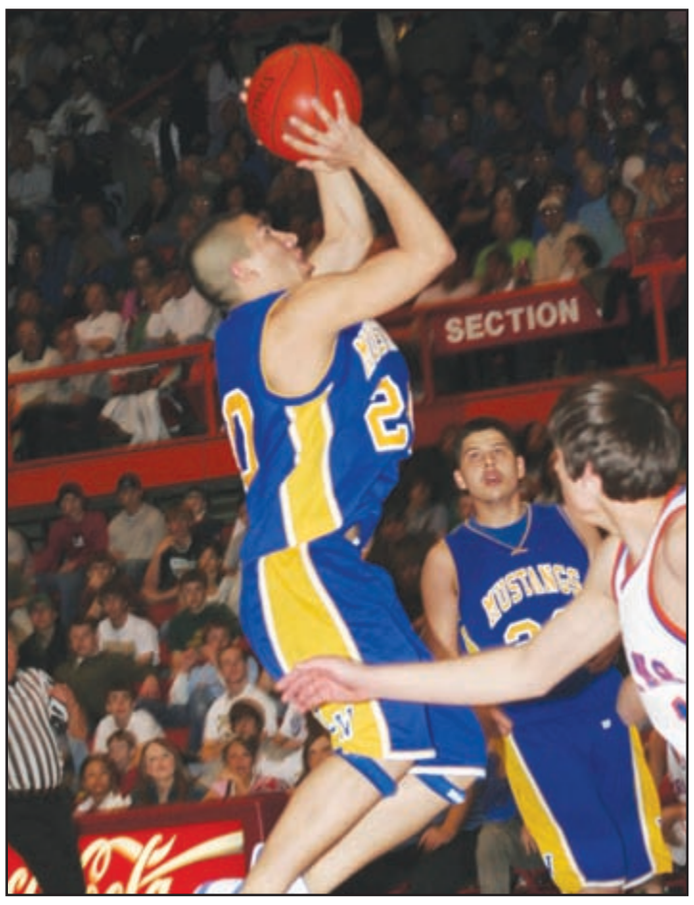
By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - In the face of a growing controversy over the events that followed Little Wounds State A championship game Saturday night in Rapid City, the Mustangs, their coaches and the school administration will travel to St. Thomas More on Monday to honor each of the Cavaliers and their coaches with a star quilt.

When the final buzzer sounded at the end of the state championship game in front of a record standing room only crowd, the Mustangs were led off the floor and into the dressing room during the Cavalier celebration. They stayed in the locker room and passed up the presentation of awards including the runner-up trophy, individual medals and two all tournament awards.

"Linda Hunter, the school superintendent directed me to go to the locker room and bring the players out for the awards presentation," said high school principal Dana Brave Eagle, "I went right into the locker room and told the team that they had a great season with a 24-2 record and a second place in the state tournament, that they should walk out there with their heads high and accept the awards and the congratulations of the many fans, friends and family who have followed them all year and think the world of their accomplishments. Some of the players started to follow me out and I'm sure they all would have come when the players were told they do not have to go out there and they should not go. I returned to the floor alone."

The players do not deserve this after such a great season, they have been searching for leadership the last two years and this is not the way they should be remembered; adults need to take the responsibility for poor decisions, added Brave Eagle who coached volleyball this year as well.



"The school board met Monday night and they don't want to rush into any decision but want to take their time and look at all the facts and get to the bottom of what happened Saturday night staying away from all emotions," said Taylor Little White Man, school board member, "we have asked Dana Brave Eagle to investigate what happened."

Everyone connected with the program has emphasized that the adults working with the program need to be held responsible for what happened that the ballplayers were responding only to the direction of the adults working with the program.

At the present time, the second place trophy and the individual medals are in Pierre waiting for a review of the South Dakota High School Activities Association board of directors, their next meeting is set for April 17 and 18 in Pierre. The all tournament awards are floating somewhere between Rapid City and Brookings, the main office of the South Dakota Basketball Coaches Association.

"The board will probably meet on this issue on April 18 and I expect Little Wound's superintendent, high school principal, the athletic director and board members to be there," said Wayne Carney, executive director, "after a review the board will decide what the consequences will be, whether they will receive the awards at all, probation, no post season play next year, reprimands, whatever they might decide, it is up to the SDHSAA board."

"More than anything else, we do not want anything to mar the great season that the Mustangs had this year and more importantly we do not want to take anything away from St. Thomas More's outstanding season and we are going to their school and honor them and let them know how special they are and how much it says about the Lakota Nation tourney that for the second time in 17 years, the two teams that played for the LNI championship came back three months later and played for the state championship on the same floor," said Dana Brave Eagle.

Mustangs come up short with Caveliers at State A

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Little Wound faced St. Thomas More in the 2007 State A championship game on Saturday night in Rapid City at the Civic Center in a rematch of the Lakota Nation championship game won by Little Wound 49-46 in December on the exact same floor.

Both teams were 24-1, the Mustangs represented the only blemish on the defending state champ Cavaliers 50-1 record and were the last roadblock to back to back state championships. St. Thomas More set the tone for the final game of the season with Kyle Doerr, a 6'7" senior forward scoring ten points in the first quarter on two twos and two threes and junior point guard Nate Jacobson hitting eight of his 19 points as the Cavaliers finished the first quarter up 20-11 over the Mustangs on the way to a 71-61 win in front of a standing room only crowd of 8,463 and a two year record of 51-1 and back to back state championships.

"There were times that St. Thomas More beat us at our own game, they would beat us down the floor," said Ty Lunderman, a junior guard/forward, "we just were not as mentally prepared as we should have been."

Rich Big Boy, Little Wound's senior center, started chipping away at the lead with nine points in the second period hitting two field goals and going five for five from the line while Lunderman hit three twos as Little Wound closed the gap to 36-30 at the half. Zeke Parvin hit two threes in the third, Jacobson added a three and Tanner Wince hit two twos and two free throws while the Cavaliers held Little Wound to eight third quarter points and led 55-38 at the end of three.

Little Wound struggled, like a number of teams did this year, to come from behind against the Cavaliers; the Mustangs outscored St. Thomas More 23-16 in the fourth but came up short having to put the Cavaliers on the free throw line where they hit nine of fourteen to seal a 71-61 win.

"We were able to come back on almost every team we played this year," added Lunderman, "but the Cavaliers came out ready to play and once they got a lead they really take care of the ball and make it really difficult to come from behind, we needed to meet them with the same energy in the first quarter and match them bucket for bucket."

Big Boy finished with 17 points and five rebounds, TJ McCauley hit a three to end the game and finished up with 15 points and a team high eight rebounds while Lunderman added 10 points and five boards. Doerr finished up with game high 25 points and 14 rebounds while Jacobson helped out with 17 points and nine assists, Parvin and Johnny Gonzalez each chipped in 10 points. For the season Jacobson averaged 7.5 points per game and for the state tournament averaged 17 points a game.

Big Boy, McCauley, Doerr and Jacobson earned all tournament honors.

St. Thomas More earned a second straight trip to the championship game with a hard fought 68-65 win over Lennox in the first round and a 65-54 semi final win over Madison.

All tied up 47-47 at the end of three, the Cavaliers finished off a three point win with balanced scoring led by Jacobson's 17 points, Wince chipped in 16, Doerr added 14 and Gonzalez hit for 12. Jacobson again led the way with19 against Madison while Doerr helped out with 15 points, Gonzalez hit for 14 while Wince added 11.

Rich Big Boy ended all speculation about his physical abilities after being slowed by a knee injury in a regular season game at Eagle Butte when he came out dominating the paint in the first round game against Chamberlain taking the ball strong to the basket or distributing it to an open teammate when double and triple teamed.

Big Boy finished with 16 points and seven rebounds as Little Wound downed the Cubs 69-49. McCauley helped break open a tight game in the second scoring seven of his team high 18 points while Lunderman chipped in 14 points.

Little.Wound faced number one ranked, undefeated Parkston in the semis and went right out to a 16-10 first quarter lead and a 30-20 halftime lead. Still up by ten at the end of three 42-32, the Mustangs survived losing three players to fouls in the fourth quarter and missing 12 free throws to pull out a 63-58 win. Freshman Orin Three Stars came out and hit three of four from the free throw line while Devon LeBeau hit five of seven from the line to help the cause.

Brice Hornbeck led the way with 14 points, seven rebounds and five assists while McCauley chipped in 12 points and 10 rebounds and Shilo Pierce added 10 points. Matt Malloy, Parkston's senior point guard went down with a sprained ankle late in the first but came back to score a game high 31 points. On Saturday night, Malloy was named winner of the Spirit of Su award.

A number of fans criticized the state tournament officiating. In looking back at the games, against Chamberlain Little Wound was called for 15 fouls, Chamberlain 13; against Parkston, Little Wound 24 Parkston 23 and against St. Thomas More with 2:01 left each team had 13 fouls and struggling to get the ball back in the fourth quarter, Little Wound was forced to foul seven times.

Cheerleaders from Sioux Valley earned the Spirit of Six award.

RST secretarial election is officially postponed until July

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Agency superintendent, Cleve Her Many Horses confirmed last Friday that the RST Secretarial Election has been officially postponed until July 26. Her Many Horses said that a letter had been received from the BIA Regional Director and that he would, in turn, send a letter to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe informing them as such.

At present, there have been over 2,000 RST tribal members who have registered for the secretarial election. The new deadline for registration will be right up until July 26 when voters can submit their form to the BIA offices in Mission or the BIA agency office in Rosebud.

Her Many Horses is confident that many more Rosebud tribal members will register for the secretarial election by the time July 26 arrives.

Originally, RST had planned to hold the secretarial election on March 20, but a motion to postpone it until late July was made by Jo Colombe, RST District 3 council representative. The motion was passed and it was noted that there was significant confusion regarding the numerous referendum items. First of all, not enough RST tribal members had registered for the election and some of the referendum questions were confusing and redundant. Also, there is a need to provide education and technical assistance in drafting the ballot questions in order to make them clear.

With the new date set for the election, the original drafters of the ballot questions will be able to re-write them with the help of others. The Lakota Women for Change will also be presumably providing technical assistance in the community as they are able.

All prospective voters are encouraged to call the Rosebud BIA Agency office if they need a registration form. Initially, over 17,000 registration forms had been mailed to Rosebud tribal members. There were some concerns that some voters were not receiving their forms, however, with the new dates in July this will give voters ample to time to secure a copy.

FST files federal suit against state for more casino machines

By Chet Brokaw
Associated Press

PIERRE - The Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe has filed a federal lawsuit alleging that Gov. Mike Rounds and other state officials have unfairly prevented the tribe from adding more slot machines at its casino in Flandreau.

The lawsuit alleges that the state has negotiated in bad faith as the tribe pursues a longer gambling compact that allows more slot machines.

The tribe is seeking a court order declaring that the state has violated the federal law on Indian gambling and a constitutional provision that guarantees equal protection under the law.

While state officials have refused to let each Indian casino have more than 250 slot machines, they have allowed the number of slot machines in Deadwood casinos and the number of video lottery machines in casinos statewide to skyrocket, according to the lawsuit.

The lawsuit, filed Monday in federal court in Sioux Falls, asks a judge to require that the state and tribe agree on a new gambling compact within 60 days or face mediation. It also asks for a court order requiring the state to give the tribe the same privileges granted to other forms of gambling in South Dakota.

The complaint and exhibits filed with the court total 845 pages.

At 3 p.m., on Sunday there will be a special presentation by Dr. Craig Howe, Oglala Lakota, scholar and fulltime faculty of the graduate program at Oglala Lakota College. He has a doctorate in anthropology and architecture and is the former director of the D'Arcy McNickle Center for American Indian History of the Newberry Library in Chicago.

His lecture, "Hate Speech, Horses and Hostages: The Untold Story of Lewis & Clark in Teton Territory" Howe said, "Between the 23rd and the 30th of September, 1804, Lewis and Clark guided the Corps of Discovery through Lakota country in what is now South Dakota."

"That week's events have been presented by historians as pivotal in both the expedition's journey and in the history of the United States.," he said.

"Most historians have used Clark's accounts of that time to create a heroic image of Lewis and Clark and of their expedition, and a malicious image of the Lakota people. A critical reading of the expedition texts, however, suggest that the Lakota were not as Clark painted them to be and the actions of Lewis and Clark were far less heroic than historians have led us to believe," he added.

Dr. William Glasser to speak at Mission

MISSION - It is not every day that educators on the northern plains are able to listen to a world famous psychiatrist like, Dr. William Glasser of the Glasser Institute. Thanks to a host of co-sponsors, Glasser will conduct a presentation entitled "Improving Relationships with Choice Theory."

The speaking engagement will commence on April 20 and 21 at the SGU multipurpose building.

The afternoon session will feature two breakout sessions with Jerry Noel and Frank Dunn speaking.

PINE RIDGE (AP) Members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe have received financial assistance for their home heating bills.

The money came through a partnership of Citgo Petroleum and the Citizens Programs Corp., said Kevin Steele, Oglala Sioux Tribe judiciary coordinator.

More than $636,000 was provided.

The money will help pay winter heating bills of more than 2,300 households.

Two to be sentenced for bootlegging

RAPID CITY - U.S. Attorney Marty J. Jackley announced March 15 that Juanita Jumping Eagle and Louise Jumping Eagle have both pled guilty in federal court to dispensing intoxicants in Indian country.

Both defendants, charged in separate indictments for separate offenses, appeared before U.S. District Judge Karen E. Schreier and pled guilty to single counts contained in their respective federal indictments.

The cases were investigated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The charges relate to the illegal sale of alcohol on the reservation, and each defendant admitted to selling bottles of alcohol to an Indian person on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Jackley stated that the unlawful sale of alcoholic beverages on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in violation of both Tribal Ordinance and federal law are matters that are taken seriously and of major concern in the Pine Ridge Reservation.

The maximum penalty upon conviction is five years imprisonment and/or a $250,000 fine.

Presentence investigations were ordered and sentencing dates will be set.

FST files suit

Sioux tribes in South Dakota have complained in recent years that the state was refusing to negotiate in good faith as they sought new gambling compacts.

Clarence Skye, executive director of United Sioux Tribes, said he believes other tribes will wait and see what happens in the Flandreau Sioux Tribe lawsuit before deciding whether to file their own lawsuits.

Tribal officials have been frustrated because the governor will not meet with them to discuss the dispute on gambling compacts, Skye said. "I've tried everything, and I'm still sitting on the outside and not getting anywhere."

A 1988 federal law says tribes can generally conduct the same kind of gambling that is allowed elsewhere in the state, but a tribe first has to negotiate a gaming compact with the state. Tribes began negotiating compacts to run their own casinos after a state constitutional amendment allowed casinos to start operating in Deadwood in 1989.

Eight of the nine Sioux tribes in South Dakota have gambling compacts. The Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe is the only one without a casino.

A number of tribes have complained that the state's refusal to let them add slot machines is preventing them from gaining revenue needed to finance nongambling projects.

Rounds did not respond immediately to a request for comment on Tuesday, but he has said in the past that the state was negotiating in good faith with tribes. The South Dakota Constitution allows only limited gambling, he said.

"I also have to weigh their interests in unlimited gaming or significantly increased number of machines with what is required in our constitution, which is limited gaming," the governor said last year.

However, the lawsuit said Deadwood gambling and the state video lottery are not very limited.

About 3,000 slot machines are authorized in the casinos in Deadwood, a historic town in the northern Black Hills, and about 8,500 video gambling machines are allowed in licensed video lottery casinos statewide, according to the lawsuit.

Meanwhile, the state has refused to let tribal casinos exceed 250 slot machines, the lawsuit said. Compacts in Minnesota and Iowa set the number of slot machines at what the market can bear, according to the suit.

The Flandreau Sioux Tribe's Royal River Casino sometimes loses customers because people refuse to wait in line for slot machines and instead drive to nearby casinos in Minnesota and Iowa, the lawsuit said.

The tribe said it sought to gain additional machines and extend the compact to 20 years so it could secure financing to build a hotel, resort, water park, family recreation center and event center to draw entertainment acts. The state has offered a six-year compact.

One proposal by the tribe would have allowed one slot machines for each $34,000 invested in the complex, but the state rejected that suggestion, according to the lawsuit.

"The state's intransigence prevents the tribe from raising the capital necessary to develop high quality facilities sufficient to attract tourists and customers from areas beyond the borders of the state and denies the tribe the economic benefits provided to all other citizens of the state," according to the lawsuit.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I'm writing to you on this nice day because I have questions for my self.

Well you see I have a boyfriend and we been together since July 7.

He's is not the father of my kids and he treats them like his own but half the time we been together we argue daily for stuff that is stupid and I am getting tired of it and want it to stop. Is it him or me? He says he loves me and I'm in love with him and we have been talking about getting married but we argue all the time.

I want to know if we love each other or he loves me and can we get married because I'm confused.

Lost in Love

Dear Lost in Love:

It is both of you. It is old programming and issues of control. Please read The Four Directions by Don Miguel Ruiz available at Borders in Rapid City. There are also co-dependency issues inside of your relationship. If you have insecurities within then anytime someone disagrees with you or offers a different point of view it can become a battle field for compliance.

We have to learn how to allow other people that are close to us to just think the way they do, offer our own opinion is a non-petulant (whiny) tone, and go on.

The above book would help both of you to not feel threatened every time there is a disagreement or a different point of view.

You two can make it as a couple, but you both first must agree to treat each other with honor in every conversation and action. I would recommend counseling before marriage - but I "see" that is not practical so the book, when read by both of you, can help you both to be your own counselors and learn to live in a better way.

If you do not work on the bickering it will eventually end the relationship.

Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

How are you? Are you liking the weather? It's been nice lately!

Yes umm...I was wondering if you can help me with some problems? My cousin is causing a lot of trouble and she changes her story every time. Is everything she is saying, is it true? Well yea I have a day job now! Do you see me getting educated? Some how?

Do you know what year I'll graduate? And one of my friends, will that be his baby his girlfriend is having? How is my boyfriend status? I feel me and my boyfriend are growing apart. I know something is getting in the way but he won't say so.

Please help me in my time of need, I REALLY like what you say to people I read your column every Friday it's so interesting! Well have a good week and thank you for your patience.

Curious

Dear Curious:

I am fine and I love good weather. In ceremony the other night we were told that it will rain a lot - but only at night when we are sleeping. That will be good too.

Ignore your cousin. A change in a story usually means that the story is not exactly the truth. Also, people that are into causing trouble for others through their so-called "information" are generally just trying to feed a need for attention and approval.

You need to go further in your education. I see you graduating two times. Once in 2008 and once again in 2013.

Yes, that is your friend's baby that his girl friend is carrying.

You and your boyfriend are drifting apart. That is just fine. Remember, I always say that not every relationship is "The One," and that is why God invented dating. \You are growing in different directions and you have different life philosophies. Someday later the two of you will once again become friends.

Hold onto your vision of success in your life. Combined with prayer that vision will take you to a time where your dreams come true. I see your working in business.

God Bless.

Dear Anna,

It has been interesting to read your column and I am curious about you? Where did your gift comes from? Where are you from?

Wondering About You

Dear Wondering About Me:

I originally come from Oregon. I am almost sixty years old, and when I was 39-years old I began my trek in search of the answer to a vision that I had three years prior to that which included the Lakota people.

My gifts? Well, they come first and foremost from the Creator. After that, there is ancestor history. My maternal great grandmother was a gypsy from Armenia.

Her name, as far as I have been told was Validslov Domski. She rode the country side in a horse drawn wagon where she told fortunes, and her husband sold what was commonly known as "snake oil." This information was very hard to get out of my mother as it was considered an embarrassment to her and her family. Her mother was abandoned in Oregon with her two sisters when my grandmother was about twelve years old. She took her two sisters and walked to Montana where she felt she might find her family. One of her sisters (Valera) died in Lolo pass and she buried her under rocks along the way.

When my grandmother reached Great Falls, Montana, she found employment as a nanny because she could read. Later she met my grandfather, Karl Gustuv Berger Anderson III, who was the illegitimate son of the King of Sweden.

That is the only part of my mother's family she would talk about - how the gypsy married the prince.

I knew of my gifts from the time I was three years old. It made my life difficult because I just wanted to be like everyone else. I tried to be like everyone else during all of my teenage years and clear until my mid thirties. It didn't work out very well for me.

Somewhere in about 1987, what I call the "Council" (from the Stars) came to me and told me I had a choice. They said I had been chosen to do some work, and I could chose to follow that path or not. I chose the commitment. It has been very hard and my family and I have suffered a lot since I made that choice.

Now, however, I am here and grateful to be here. I love doing the healing work that my sister (as in soul sister) Barb and I do together.

I love helping people find their highest and best good through what the Spirits let me see and know. I am just a human being struggling with life and my journey. I am not always right and sometimes I feel absolutely alone except for the company of God.

I just do the best I can - just like you. I pray for forgiveness for my human weaknesses and mistakes.and for guidance to remain in Grace. Pilamaye for asking.

Dear Anna:

I am pregnant with my third child. I was told by the doctors not to get pregnant after my last child as they felt it would not be a healthy thing for me and that the pregnancy would be at risk.

I am due in two months and this pregnancy has been very rough. How do you see things working out. Will my baby be okay?

Worried Mom

Dear Worried Mom:

I see a beautiful boy - and he is healthy. You will be okay too, although it looks like some delivery problems that may have to be resolved with a cesarean section birth.

Do not worry, you are well blessed and being protected through prayer and your strong connection to the Red Road.

Dear Anna,

Who took my $200.00 that was in my wallet? Was it my 17-year old son? Why would he do that?

Mad Dad

Dear Mad Dad:

Yes, it was your son. Drugs dad, drugs. Seek treatment and counseling for your son and remember he is not in charge of himself - the Spirit of Meth has him and is working through him.

He will recover from this addiction; but it takes a strong commitment from you and your wife and time to work this through. Your son will become a drug and alcohol educator after treatment and further education.

Consider the $200 loss as a wake up call charge.

A Grandmothers Prayer

Let me give my grandchildren gifts not just toys, but other things like treasured dreams and memories that give a child both roots and wings, let me help with little things to teach them to tie a shoe to answer funny questions now and always know just what to do. Let me show that what is old a child my find completely new and know what once delighted me makes my grandchildren happy too. In loving memory of our grandma Velma Rose Janis she left us on March 5, 2003.

In loving memory of Zion Isaiah Charging Crow

June 1, 2004 to March 13, 2005

An angel, who lit up our lives for just a little while, now paints the skies above us all with innocence and style. You were only ours to borrow and he needed you more up there. As we continue to walk this cold, cruel earth we will see you every where. In every new sunrise your smile will shine as bright as in our memories, each sunset will bring us closer to you as we kneel down and beg him to please give us the courage to truly believe he is up there leading you by the hand, introducing you to all of our loved ones who have entered the promise land. Provide us with the strength we will lack when missing him hurts us to, and tell our baby Zion that though we will move on we will never let him go.

We miss you so much baby Zion
